Per Phillips, J.—The principle on which a suit can be brought on a foreign judgment is that the rights of the parties have been already investigated and determined by a competent tribunal. In an action on a foreign judgment not impeached for fraud, the original cause of action cannot be re-investigated, if the judgment was pronounced by a competent tribunal having jurisdiction. This principle applies alike to a judgment in personam, to a judgment in rem, and to a judgment or sentence of divorce or any other judgment having reference to status. [p. 410, col. 1.]

A judgment, therefore, of a French Indian Court, removing trustees appointed by the Will of a testator for the administration of charities in respect of properties, the bulk of which is situate within its jurisdiction, and appointing others in their stead is a judgment virtually regulating the administration of a trust and conferring a status on the persons appointed as trustees. Such persons can sue for possession from the discharged trustees of trust property situate in British India in a Court having jurisdiction over it solely by virtue of the judgment of the French Court. The suit cannot be treated as one for the removal of trustees who are already removed by a competent Court but a suit based on a foreign judgment which has recognised plaintiffs' title to administer the trust and to recover trust properties. [p. 410, col. 1.; p. 411, col. 1.]

The prohibition to adopt a son may be express or implied. Where a testator by his Will provided for the contingency of his having a son in these words, viz, "if by divine favour I have a child of the male sex" they mean only a natural son and do not even impliedly confer an authority to adopt. One S., a resident of Pondicherry left a Will inter alia bequeathing large properties for charities, the bulk of which was situate in Pondicherry and the rest in Madras. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and two others, who were executors under the Will, having obtained Probate in the Pondicherry Court, obtained Letters of Administration in the Madras High Court in respect of the property situate in Madras. After they had administered the estate, defendants Nos. 1 to 3 were removed from their office by a decree of the Pondicherry Court which appointed plaintiffs in their stead. The fourth defendant was the widow of the testator who adopted the 5th defendant and the 6th defendant was the natural mother of the 5th, all of whom were alleged to be in possession of the Madras properties. Plaintiffs instituted the present suit on the original side of the High Court for possession of the trust properties situate in Madras from defendants. Mr. Justice Wallis decreed the suit, holding that the judgment of the Pondicherry Court was binding on him. On appeal, Held, per Abdur Rahim Offg. C. J., (Phillips, J. dissenting), that the suit was not maintainable by reason per se of the judgment of Pondicherry Court, who authority could not extend to immoveables outside its jurisdiction [p. 408, col. 1.]

Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Wallis, dated the 8th August 1913, in the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of this Court.

The Hon'ble Mr. S. Srinivas Aiyengar, (Advocate-General), and Messrs. K. Narayana Rao and C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Raghunatha Sastri, for the Respondent.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 18th and 22nd August 1916, and having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—One Calve Sadasiva Chettiar who was a domiciled French subject residing at Pondicherry died there on the 26th May 1891 leaving his last Will and testament, dated 25th July 1889 and a codicil thereto, dated 20th May 1891. He left considerable property, moveable and immoveable, in Madras and in Pondicherry. The immoveable properties in Madras are said to be of the value of Rs. 1,50,000 and the moveables consisting of Government promissory notes, jewels and cash in Madras are stated to be of the value of Rs. 1,70,000. By his Will Calve Sadasiva Chettiar purported to dispose of the bulk of his properties in favour of various charities, mostly in Pondicherry and partly in the Presidency of Madras. The charities were to be conducted by a committee of management consisting of five members including defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, who were also appointed executors of the Will and the codicil. All the executors obtained Probate from the Court of first instance at Pondicherry and in August 1893, four of them obtained from this Court Letters of Administration limited to this Presidency with exemplification of the Probate issued by the Pondicherry Court and an English translation annexed thereto. Leave was given to the fifth executor C. Krishnaswami Chettiar to apply for a like grant if he so wished. But apparently he did not apply to this Court for Probate or Letters of Administration and had in fact instituted a suit on the 22nd October 1892 in the Court of first instance at Pondicherry alleging various acts of malversation and breaches of trust against 1st, 2nd and 3rd defendants in this suit and asking for their removal from the office of administrators and members of the committee of management. A final decree to that effect was passed in April 1904 and a new committee of management consisting of the plaintiffs in the present suit was appointed in place of the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd defendants. The 4th defendant is the widow of the deceased testator, the 5th defendant who is an infant is alleged to have been adopted by the widow and the 6th defendant is the natural mother and guardian ad litem of the 5th defendant. The plaintiffs seek in this suit for a declaration that they, as members of the committee of management are entitled to possession and management of the estate and effects of the late Calve Sadasiva Chettiar, for a decree directing the removal of defendants, Nos. 1, 2 and 3 from the office of administrators and members of the committee of management, for a declaration that the alleged adoption of the 5th defendant is not true or valid, for an account of the administration of the estate by the 1st, 2nd and 3rd defendants, for a declaration that certain deeds of gift executed by 1st and 2nd defendants in favour of the 4th defendant as guardian of the 5th defendant and another deed in favour of the 6th defendant purported to have been executed by the 4th defendant were fraudulently and collusively obtained and, therefore, null and void and for recovery of possession from the defendants of the immoveable property set out in the schedule.

The learned Chief Justice (then Mr. Justice Wallis) who tried the suit passed a decree declaring that the adoption of the 5th defendant was invalid, that the plaintiffs were entitled to possession of the property mentioned in the schedule against all the defendants, directed delivery of possession to the plaintiffs and declared that the deed of assignment in favour of the 4th defendant and the deed of gift in favour of the 6th defendant were not valid. He then ordered that the suit be referred to the Judge in chambers for the taking of an account of the rents and profits of the properties mentioned in the schedule.

The first question argued before us is whether the plaintiffs can maintain this suit. Their title as trustees is derived from an appointment made by the Pondicherry Court. The property with respect to which relief is mainly sought is immoveable property situate in the town of Madras of which the plaintiffs as trustees seek to obtain possession from the defendants. They also want a declaration that the 5th defendant who claims to be entitled to the properties by virtue of adoption, was not validly adopted. They seek other reliefs as well consequent upon a determination of their title to these properties. It is admitted at the Bar that so far as the collection of the outstandings and the payment of debts and dues is concerned, that has been completed. All that is left to administer are the trusts in favour of charities.

The learned Chief Justice disposes of the whole question of the plaintiffs' title in these words "A judgment of the Cour d' Appel removing the plaintiffs, in my opinion, is binding on the defendants (the word 'removing' should be appointing). It was not seriously contended it was not". I do not know what exactly is meant by the last sentence. The point was certainly strenuously argued before us. It had been raised in the written statement and formed the subject of an issue and the learned Advocate-General who appeared for the appellant, the 5th defendant in this suit, stated that he argued this question in the Court of first instance. The objection which is one of law goes to the root of the suit and if it is valid, we are bound to give full effect to it. It is not suggested that it was abandoned at the time of trial.

No authority has been brought to our notice which covers the exact point for decision. But there can be no doubt whatever that the principles which must guide us in this matter are well established and cannot be said to be open to any doubt. Story in his "Conflict of Laws" in section 586 lays down as a general proposition that "In order, however, to found a proper ground of recognition of any foreign judgment in another country, it is indispensable to establish that the Court pronouncing judgment should have a lawful jurisdiction over the cause, over the thing, and over the parties." In section 590, he states "The position that the sentence of a foreign Court is conclusive with respect to what it professes to decide is uniformly qualified with the limitation that it has, in the given case, jurisdiction of the subject-matter" and in section 591 "By the general consent of nations, therefore, in cases of immoveables, the judgment pronounced of the forum rei sitae is held absolutely conclusive..... On the other hand, a judgment in any foreign country, touching such immoveables, will be held of no obligation." Dicey enunciates the law in rule 81 in these words "The Courts of a foreign country have no jurisdiction (1) to adjudicate upon the title, or the right to the possession, of any immovable not situate in such country, or (2) (semble) to give redress for any injury in respect of any immovable not situate in such country." "This rule," he says "is merely an application of the more general principle that no Court ought to give a judgment the enforcement whereof lies beyond the Court's power, and especially if it would bring the Court into conflict with the admitted authority of a foreign sovereign, or, what is the same thing, the jurisdiction of a foreign Court." Mr. Westlake in his treatise on "Private International Law" is equally explicit: "The principle of the forum situs, in its application to the land itself, is incontrovertible. Since only the authorities that exist on the spot can employ force to give possession or take it away, it would be idle for any foreign jurisdiction to make a direct attempt to determine the possession of land, or even the property on it, which would be unmeaning if disconnected from all immediate or future right to possession". The mere fact that the defendants are domiciled in foreign territory, and its Court has, therefore, jurisdiction in personam over them makes no difference, though it would be otherwise, to use Mr. Westlake's language "when something has been done by which the personal jurisdiction is called into action on the ground of obligation which properly belongs to it, and the determination as to the foreign land is necessarily incident to the determination which has to be made about the obligation" (for instance) where such obligation arises out of contract or trust. It need hardly be pointed out that what was sought in the case in the Pondicherry Court and what was decreed was not to compel the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 to carry out the trust; but to remove them from the trusteeship. The propositions which are cited in these well-known authoritative text-books on "Private International Law" are entirely in accordance with what has been uniformly laid down by the Courts in England. The matter was very fully discussed by Mr. Justice Wright in Companhia De Mocambique v. British South Africa Company (1): "It seems plain that, in the view of most of the Judges whose language has been cited, there was a fundamental want of jurisdiction in the Common Law Courts of this country to determine directly questions of title to foreign land—a want not dependent merely on the law of venue, nor dependent even on the defect of power to enforce a judgment in another country." Then after pointing out that Courts of Equity have exercised jurisdiction in personam in cases of contract, fraud and trust, Mr. Justice Wright observes: "Although armed with much more effectual power of enforcing their decrees than were possessed by the Courts of Common Law, the Courts of Equity refused, with almost equal uniformity, the direct determination of title to foreign land". He sums up the law in this way "The proper conclusion appears to be that, speaking generally, and subject to qualifications depending on personal obligations, it is a general principle of jurisdiction, that title to land is to be directly determined, not merely according to the laws of the country where the land is situate, but by the Courts of that country, and this conclusion is in accordance with the rule ordinarily adopted by the jurisprudence of other countries." He cites in support of this conclusion, the authority of Lord Hardwicke in Bishop of Sodor and Man v. Earl of Derby (2), of Lord Northington in Pike v. Hoare (3), of Shadwell, in Tulloch v. Hartley (4), of Lord Romilly in Norris v. Chambers (5), of Wood, V. C. in Holmes v. Reg. (6), of Lord Westbury in Cookney v. Anderson (7), of Malins V. C., in Reiner v. Marquis of Salisbury (8), of Kay, J., in In re Hawthorne, Graham v. Massey (9). The judgment of the Divisional Court in Companhia De Mocambique v. The British South Africa Company (1) was reversed on another point which does not arise in the present case by Lords Justices Fry and Lopes, Lord Esher M. R. dissenting from the Courts below, the claim for declaration having been abandoned by the appellants. In Sirdar Gurdial Singh v. Raja of Faridkote (10), the Privy Council observed that territorial jurisdiction existed always as to the lands within the territory. In Hawthorne, In re, Graham v. Massey (9), Kay J., emphatically states "I am not aware of any case where a contested claim depending upon the title to immovables in a foreign country strictly so called, being no part of the British dominions or possessions, has been allowed to be litigated in this country simply because the plaintiff and defendant happened to be here." In Boyse v. Colclough (11), it was held that a decree of the Court of Chancery in Ireland of the will after verdict upon an issue devisavit vel non, does not determine the validity or invalidity, so far as it relates to lands in England and cannot be pleaded in bar to a suit in this i. e., the English Court. Vice Chancellor Page Wood observed: "The foreign Court in this case did not try, and could not try, the effect of the Will of the testator on lands in England..... They never could exercise any jurisdiction over this instrument as affecting the English estates." In Pike v. Hoare (3) already mentioned, a bill by an heir-at-law for an issue to try the validity of a Will made in England was dismissed principally because the lands lay in Pennsylvania. The Lord Chancellor observed: "A Will of lands lying in any of the Colonies is not triable in Westminster Hall." In Carteret v. Petty (12), partition of land situate in Ireland was disallowed on demurrer. Vice Chancellor Hall in Grimwood v. Bartles (13) held that the curator of a lunatic appointed by a foreign Court was not entitled to call for a transfer of a fund which represented the value of the estate situate in England and in Waite v. Bingley (14), the same learned Judge held that real property in England does not vest in the assignee under a foreign insolvency.

Much reliance was placed by the learned Pleader for the respondents on Ewing v. Orr Ewing (15) and Ewing v. Orr Ewing (16). In the first case, it was held that the English Court had jurisdiction to administer the trusts of the Will as to the whole estate both Scotch and English. In the first place the question so far as it can be gathered from the report arose with respect* to moveable property; and the main ground on which the jurisdiction of the English Court was rested was the fact that some of the trustees resided in England and the others submitted to the process of the English Court and that the object of the suit was to enforce the personal obligation of the trustees to administer the trust. Lord Chancellor Selborne said: "The Courts of Equity in England are, and always have been, Courts of conscience, operating in personam and not in rem; and in the exercise of this personal jurisdiction they have always been accustomed to compel the performance of contracts and trusts as to subjects which were not either locally or ratione domicilii within their jurisdiction". In the Scotch case, the appeal to the House of Lords was from the judgment of the Scottish Court and it was held that the Court of the deceased's domicile, that is the Scottish Court, had not exclusive jurisdiction to administer the deceased's personality. It is difficult to see how the decisions in Ewing v. Orr Ewing (15) in any way help the respondents. They do not in any way purport to qualify a well established rule of International Law relating to jurisdiction over immoveable property. The plaintiffs in this suit are seeking possession of immoveable properties situate in British India solely by virtue of a judgment of the Pondicherry Court. That Court had no jurisdiction to determine any question of right or title to these properties. Their appointment as trustees by the French Court in no way binds this Court; and the only course open to them is to have their appointments recognised by this Court. That could not be done in this suit by reason of section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure which lays down that any suit for the appointment of new trustees or for the administration generally of public trusts must be instituted with the sanction of the Advocate-General. The defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 who are the executors named in the Will and had as such obtained Letters of Administration with exemplification of the Probate annexed, from this Court could not be validly removed by the Pondicherry Court, and until the plaintiffs have them removed and get themselves appointed by this Court in a suit properly instituted, they cannot maintain any action with respect to the trust-property involved in this suit. In that view of the law, it is unnecessary to consider the other questions raised in this appeal. The appeal will be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs in both the Courts.

My learned brother is of opinion that the decree of the Court of first instance should be confirmed.

Under section 36 of the Letters Patent, the appeal is allowed and the suit dismissed with costs in this and the Court of first instance.

PHILLIPS, J.—Plaintiffs were appointed trustees of certain charities instituted under the Will of one C. Sadasiva Chetti, husband of 4th defendant, and sue for various reliefs in connection with the trust-property. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and two others were the executors of the Will and having obtained Probate in Pondicherry, where the testator lived, obtained Letters of Administration in this Court in respect of the property in British India. After they had administered the estate, and it is admitted that the administration was completed, defendants Nos. 1 to 3 became trustees of the charity under the Will, but were subsequently removed from their office by a decree of the Pondicherry Court, which appointed plaintiffs in their stead.

The main contention put forward in this appeal by the learned Advocate-General, a contention that appears not to have been seriously pressed at the trial, is that the decree of the Pondicherry Court is not binding on Courts in British India and that consequently plaintiffs, not having been recognised as trustees in British Indian Courts have no right to bring a suit in respect of the trust, and that the removal of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 from trusteeship is equally invalid as they have been recognised as trustees by this Court and consequently the decree of the French Court cannot affect their status here. This last argument is based upon a fallacy for the trusteeship of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 has never been recognised by this Court. By the grant to them of Letters of Administration they were recognised as the executors of the deceased's estate, but it was not until the assets of the estate had been got in that they became trustees of the charity constituted under the Will and their position as executors of the Will is quite different from their position as trustees of the charity instituted under the Will. There is, therefore, no question of the order of the French Court which removed defendants Nos. 1 to 3 from trusteeship conflicting with the grant to them by this Court of Letters of Administration, and we have only to see whether the removal of defendants and the appointment of plaintiffs by the French Court is binding on Courts in British India. No doubt all rights over or in relation to immoveables are, generally speaking, governed by the lex situs but here we are not concerned with the law relating to any such rights, but have to consider whether the appointment of plaintiffs by a French Court as trustees in whom the immoveable property vests can be recognised here. "The principle on which an action can be brought on a foreign judgment is that the rights of the parties have been already investigated and determined by a competent tribunal..... In an action on a foreign judgment not impeached for fraud, the original cause of action is not re-investigated here, if the judgment was pronounced by a competent tribunal having jurisdiction". This is the principle enunciated by Lindley, L. J. In re Henderson, Nouvion v. Freeman (17). This general principle though stated in reference to a judgment in personam applies to every kind of judgment; it extends alike to a judgment in personam [Godard v. Gray (18)] to a judgment in rem [Castrique v. Imrie (19)] to a judgment or sentence of divorce, or any other judgment having reference to status (Vide Dicey's Conflict of Laws, pages 408 and 409), and in accordance with it the plaintiffs would be entitled to sue in Courts here on the strength of their status as trustees appointed by a foreign judgment, unless there is any reason to the contrary. I may refer also to Bank of Australasia v. Nias (20) and

De Cosse Brissac v. Rathbone (21), where it was held that a Court will not question the validity of a foreign judgment except upon a definite plea being raised of error, fraud, etc. In Ewing v. Orr Ewing (15) a suit was allowed to be brought in England against the executors and trustees of an estate left by a testator domiciled in Scotland and situated mainly in Scotland, the said executors having obtained Probate in Scotland and confirmation in England. In that case the executors and trustees were identical and had been recognised in English Courts, but in a subsequent case relating to the same estate—Ewing v. Orr Ewing (16)—Lord Selborne remarks: "It cannot make any difference as to the forum in such a case, whether the trustees, in whom the residuary estate is vested, are or not the same persons who, as executors, obtained Probate or confirmation. The rights of the plaintiffs, (in both countries) and the remedies against the defendants ought to be precisely the same so far as relates to the trust estate whether the defendants were original, or afterwards assumed, trustees, or were or were not executors as well as trustees."

The facts of the present case are not quite analogous but in Ewing v. Orr Ewing (16) the jurisdiction of an English Court to deal with a trust constituted in Scotland was recognised, and similarly there can be no objection to the converse proposition that a French Court can regulate the administration of a trust situated mainly in French territory and partly in British territory and that such administration will be recognised by British Courts. The Advocate General does not contend that, if plaintiffs were suing as possessing a certain status conferred by a foreign judgment, British Courts would not recognise that status, nor could he very well do so as the proposition that they could sue has frequently been affirmed (Vide Dicey's Conflict of Laws, Chapter XIX). In In re Piercy, Whitwham v. Piercy (22), a person domiciled in England left by Will lands in Italy to trustees to sell the same and, having invested the proceeds to hold the investments on certain trusts and it was held that the right of the trustees to sell the land is governed by the Law of Italy (lex situs) and that the validity of the trusts as to the proceeds of the land is governed by the Law of England (lex domicilii). Similarly in this case the administration of the trust is governed by the lex domicilii, i. e., French Law, and consequently the appointment of new trustees, which is part of the administration, is governed by the lex domicilii and the action of the foreign Courts would be recognised by British Courts. No direct authority for the proposition he puts forward has been cited by the learned Advocate-General, nor is there any direct authority to the contrary, but the principles enunciated above seem to be sufficient justification for rejecting the proposition. It is also very significant that the objection was not seriously pressed in the original trial by defendants Nos. 1 to 3, the old trustees, but is now put forward in appeal by 5th defendant alone, an alleged adopted son of 4th defendant, who, as I shall presently show, has no locus standi as his alleged adoption is not valid.

It is further contended that the present suit to remove the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 is not maintainable in this Court without the sanction of the Advocate-General under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. An issue was framed on the point, but was not seriously pressed at the trial. It seems to me that this is not a suit for removal of trustees, for they have already been removed by the French Court, and as I have already pointed out they were not appointed trustees by the British Indian Courts. They were granted Letters of Administration and became trustees under the terms of the Will and not by appointment of Court. They were validly removed from office by the French Court and plaintiffs were appointed in their place and consequently this cannot be looked upon as a suit for removal of trustees. In fact the prayer to this effect in the plaint might well be ignored, as it does not affect the rest of the case. It is a suit based upon a foreign judgment which has recognised plaintiffs' title to administer the trust and to recover trust-properties.

Had this Court recognised defendants Nos. 1 to 3 as trustees, and, as I have pointed out, it has not done so, the objection might hold good on the ground that the order of the French Court removing them would not affect the order of this Court appointing them and a decree for their removal would be necessary. Even so it is difficult to see that the judgment of the French Court would come under any of the exceptions (a) to (f) of section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure and if it does not come within any of those exceptions, it is conclusive as between the parties.

The learned Advocate-General has also sought to impeach the finding of the learned Judge as to the validity of the adoption. The adoption has been found to be invalid on two grounds (1) that adoption is prohibited by the Will of the testator and (2) that the consent of the nearest sapinda was not sought or obtained. A perusal of the Will is sufficient to show that the testator did not want to adopt a son and was unwilling that one should be adopted after his death. He made provision for the disposal of all his property, mostly for charitable purposes, and also made provision for the event of a son being born. The words "if by divine favour I happen to have a child of the male sex" show clearly that a natural son and not an adopted son was contemplated, for he could not have an adopted child of the female sex. The subsequent references to a son must also mean "natural son." There is also a provision in the Will for a boy being brought into the family in certain events to look after the family house, but not as an adopted son. Even if a natural son were born the testator did not want him to succeed to the whole estate, but gave a direction that the son should carry out the terms of the Will, and made a special provision for the son's maintenance. All this is quite inconsistent with a wish to be represented by an adopted son. The contention that the prohibition to adopt must be express and not implied appears to be mainly based on an isolated sentence in the judgment of the Privy Council in Sri Balusu Gurulingaswami v. Sri Balusu

ARUR SINGH v. SOLAKHAN SINGH.

Ramalakshammamma (23) which is itself not free from ambiguity, and is certainly no authority for the contention. It may perhaps be contended that in Bombay the prohibition must be express. [Vide Patel Vandrayan Jekison v. Patel Manilal Chumilal (24) and Lakshmibai v. Sarasvatibai (25)] but the widow's powers in regard to adoption are greater in that Presidency than in Madras, whereas Collector of Madura v. Moattoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (26) is authority for holding that an implied prohibition is sufficient, for in that case it was held that the prohibition was to be deduced from the circumstances. As regards the second ground it was not asserted in appeal that the consent of the nearest sapinda was obtained, but it was contended that the Hindu Law, as administered in Pondicherry, is the same as in Bombay, where consent of the sapindas to adoption is not necessary. This point was not raised at the trial and consequently there is no evidence to support it. No doubt it has been held in this Court that a widow's estate in Pondicherry is absolute and not a mere life-interest [Vide Mailathi Anni v. Subbaraya Mudaliar (27), and Original Suit Appeal No. 11 of 1902] and from this fact one Monsieur Sorg in a treatise on Hindu Law deduces an opinion that a widow can adopt without consent of the sapindas, but gives no authority for his opinion. On the contrary the decree of 29th December 1855 in French India expressly contemplates the consent of the relations being given (Vide Article 2). The materials for a right decision on this point are not before the Court, but on the materials available it would appear that there is no authority for the contention put forward. A further point is taken by respondents that there is no evidence of the factum of adoption, and this is so, for we have only proof of the adoption deed, said to have been executed at the time of adoption, and defendants Nos. 2 and 6, who were in Court, have not attempted to prove the factum of adoption although they are said to have been present when it took place. The learned Judge's finding that the adoption is invalid must be confirmed.

In my opinion, therefore, the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 144—Custom—Alienation by male proprietor—Suit by reversioners—Adverse possession—Limitation.

A collateral governed by the Customary Law of the Punjab does not derive his right to sue from or through his father, but from or through the common ancestor who owned the land. Therefore, in cases governed by Article 144, Schedule I of the Limitation Act, limitation does not begin to run against a collateral till the right to sue accrues to him. [p. 413, col. 2.]

Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram, 23 M. 271; 2 Bom. L. R. 597; 4 C. W. N. 329; 27 I. A. 69; 10 M. L. J. 29; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 671; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 591, distinguished.

One D S sold certain ancestral land to defendant on 10th August 1886. He died on 23rd February 1892, and plaintiff sued in 1914 to recover the land as his collateral. It was found that on the death of D. S. plaintiff's father was his nearest collateral entitled to sue. He died about five years before the institution of the suit:

Held, that limitation began to run as against the plaintiff on the death of his father and the suit was therefore, within time. [p. 414, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the order of the Additional District Judge, Lahore, dated the 26th January 1915, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, 1st class, Lahore, dated the 28th of August 1914, and remanding the case to the first Court for further enquiry.

ARUR SINGH v. SOLAKHAN SINGH.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Appellant.

Messrs. Gokal Chand Norang, Nanak Chand and Kanshi Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by the collaterals of one Deva Singh for the possession of the land sold by him to the defendant, and the sole question for determination is whether the suit is, or is not, barred by limitation. The relevant dates are as follows:—The sale was effected on the 10th August 1886; Deva Singh died on the 23rd February 1892, and the present action was brought in February 1914. It is common ground that, as the alienor died before the enforcement of the Punjab Limitation Act of 1900, the rule of limitation applicable to the suit is that furnished by the Indian Limitation Act. There is no doubt whatsoever, that on the death of the alienor the plaintiffs' father Seva Singh was the nearest collateral entitled to sue for the possession of the property, and that his suit would now be barred by time. It appears that Seva Singh died about five years before the institution of the present suit, and the plaintiffs contend that their right to sue did not accrue until the death of their father.

The learned Counsel on both sides admit that Article 144 of the Limitation Act governs the suit, and it is plain that the terminus a qua under the said Article is the date when the possession of the defendant became adverse "to the plaintiff." The matter is, then, reduced to this; did the possession of the defendant become adverse to the plaintiffs on the death of their father Seva Singh, or on the death of the alienor when the cause of action to sue for possession accrued to Seva Singh. Now section 2 (8) of the Limitation Act lays down that the expression "plaintiff" includes any person from or through whom a plaintiff derives his right to sue; and it is manifest that if the plaintiffs derived their right to sue from or through Seva Singh, the defendant's possession which commenced adversely to Seva Singh in 1892 must be deemed to be adverse to the plaintiffs and their suit would be barred by limitation.

The subject is, however, fully discussed in the Full Bench judgment of this Court reported as Sundar v. Salig Ram (1) and it is pointed out therein that a collateral governed by the Customary Law of the Punjab does not derive his right to sue from or through his father, but from or through the common ancestor who owned the land. There can be no manner of doubt that the ruling is directly applicable to the case, and that under the rule enunciated therein the plaintiffs' suit is not barred under Article 144 of the Limitation Act. It is further clear that Kaka v. Labh Chand (2) which laid down the proposition favourable to the defendant has been overruled by the Full Bench.

The learned Counsel for the appellant contends that the exposition of law in the aforesaid Full Bench ruling is erroneous; and he invites our attention to certain passages in Boda v. Harnam (3) and Dheru v. Sidhu (4), but we find that all the relevant authorities have been examined by the learned Judges who delivered the Full Bench judgment, and it would be an act of supererogation, if we repeat here what has already been stated by him in extenso. We admit that there is considerable force in the argument of the learned Counsel but the question is not res integra, and there is no sufficient reason to justify us in making a reference to the Full Court for a re-consideration of the whole question. The judgment of the Privy Council in Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (5) cited by Mr. Muhammad Shafi has a direct bearing upon the point before us. That case related to the alienation of the hereditary office and the property attached to a religious trust and their Lordships decided that the possession delivered to the vendee was adverse to the vendor, and that the suit of the vendor's son to recover the hereditary managership and possession of the lands of the endowment was barred under Article 124 of the Indian Limitation Act, and that even if there were some distinction between the claim to the office and the claim for the property, in regard to the application of the said Article, the claim for the property would, in any case, be barred by Article 144. It will be observed that the endowment was held to be hereditary in the family of the vendor, and that the plaintiff was consequently treated as the heir to his father, from or through whom he derived his right to sue. This incidence of the son being the heir to his father is, as pointed out by the Full Bench, not applicable to the devolution of ancestral property under the Customary Law.

Accordingly we are constrained to hold that the defendant's possession did not become adverse to the plaintiff until the death of their father, and that their suit is within time. The result is that we dismiss the appeal, but leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Appeal dismissed.

Per Spencer, J.—Where, in an appeal by a plaintiff against a decree dismissing his suit, the Appellate Court permits him to withdraw his appeal with liberty to bring a fresh suit, the decree of the lower Court is wiped out and in effect set aside though nothing else is substituted for it and the institution of a fresh suit, pursuant to the order, is not barred as res judicata. A decree should be given an effect which is intelligible and it should be presumed to be legally effective for obtaining the relief sought and granted. [p. 419, col. 2.]

Per Phillips, J. Contra.—An order of a Court of Appeal allowing a plaintiff appellant to withdraw the appeal with liberty to bring a fresh suit does not operate per se as a reversal of the lower Court's decree, or as wiping it out. The order amounts, in substance, to a striking off of the appeal, the decree of the Trial Court being left unaffected, and a fresh suit on the same cause of action is barred as res judicata. The order cannot be read in the light of what the Court might have intended. [p. 421, col. 1.]

BALIDE KAMAYYA v. PRAGADA PAPAYYA.

Second appeals against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ganjam at Berhampore in Appeal Suit No. 163 of 1913, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Sompeta in Original Suit No. 203 of 1912.

These second appeals coming on for hearing on 8th and 9th August 1916, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgments and decrees of the lower Appellate Court and the Court of first instance and the material papers in the suit and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. V. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar for Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Appellants and of Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham, for the Respondents in Second Appeal No. 979 of 1914 and of Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham, for the Appellants and of Mr. V. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar for Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Respondents in Second Appeal No. 1712 of 1914 and the cases having stood over for consideration till 15th August 1916, the Court (Spencer and Krishnan, JJ.,) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

SPENCER, J.—Original Suit No. 430 of 1909 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Sompeta was a suit brought for recovery of possession of certain lands. The suit was dismissed with costs as there was nothing on the record to show how the 1st defendant got title from the purchaser at Court auction and as the plaintiff's only title was that derived from the 1st defendant. The plaintiffs appealed and the District Judge permitted the appeal to be withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit. As observed by the Subordinate Judge, the granting of permission "to withdraw the appeal" was a clerical error, and we must take it that what the learned District Judge intended was to set aside the decree of the Original Court and to permit the suit to be withdrawn. The appeal was allowed to that extent. The plaintiffs brought a fresh suit, Original Suit No. 203 of 1912 and succeeded generally both in the Original and Appellate Courts.

It is now contended in these appeals that an Appellate Court has no power to allow a suit to be withdrawn with liberty to file a fresh suit. In support of this, the appellants' Pleader relies on the decision in Choragudi Chinna Kotayya v. Raja Varadaraja Appa Row (1) and on the following observation in Eknath v. Ranoji (2): "It is clearly, we think, beyond the power of the Court to allow a withdrawal from a suit with leave to file a fresh suit on the same cause of action after the defendant has obtained a decree in his favour." This observation was of the nature of an obiter dictum in that case. The correctness of the decision, so far as it decided that before the admission of the appeal the Appellate Court had no power to make an order of this nature, cannot be doubted. In Afzal Begam v. Akbari Khanam (3) the decision of this Court in Choragudi Chinna Kotayya v. Raja Varadaraja Appa Row (1) has been considered and dissented from. The learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court followed a previous decision to the same effect in Ganga Ram v. Data Ram (4) and they further relied on the practice of the Allahabad Courts to give such a permission even in appeal. In Veera Reddy v. Akka Reddy (5) Sadasiva Aiyar, J., sitting as a single Judge has doubted the correctness of the decision in Choragudi Chinna Kotayya v. Raja Varadaraja Appa Row (1).

The exercise of this power by virtue of section 107 clause (2), Civil Procedure Code (old section 582) by the Appellate Court as a matter of practice is conceded by the learned Judges who decided the case in Choragudi Chinna Kotayya v. Raja Varadaraja Appa Row (1). In Ohidambara Mudali v. Kozhandavelu Mudali (6), the power was exercised even in second appeal; but the jurisdiction of the Court to make such an order does not then seem to have been questioned, nor was it questioned in Jogodindro Nath v. Sarut Sunduri Dobi (7), in which the practice was recognised. In Kali Prasanna Sil v. Pan- chanan Nandi (S), it was held that the fact that the plaintiff was not able to adduce all the evidence which he would have liked to adduce at the first hearing was not a good ground for an Appellate Court permitting the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit and bring a fresh suit and, therefore, such an order was without jurisdiction. Similarly in Tirupati v. Muttu (9), it was held that an order passed by an Appellate Court permitting a plaintiff to withdraw his suit with permission to bring a fresh suit was bad if no reasons were assigned for the order.

In the present case, the permission was granted in order to permit the plaintiffs to re-draft their plaint in such a manner as to contain certain necessary allegations for indicating more clearly what their father's title was, and this appears to me to be a good ground for the order in the circumstances of this case.

With due respect to the learned Judges, I am unable to follow the reasoning in Choragudi Chinna Kotayya v. Raja Varadaraja Appu Row (1).

As I understand the judgment, the main arguments are that the language of Order XXIII, rule 1, is such as to apply only to a pending suit and that after a suit has terminated in a decree, it is not open to any Court to grant the required permission; secondly, that if the word "appeal" is substituted for the word "suit" wherever it occurs, the rule will read "at any time after the institution of an appeal the plaintiff * * * may withdraw his appeal", and that this reading will not give the plaintiff the remedy he requires.

The answer to the first objection seems to be that when an appeal has been admitted the whole suit is re-opened and there is no certain finality about the decree in existence until the Appellate Court pronounces one.

The second objection is in my opinion, which I hold with due respect, based on a misconception of what section 107, clause 2, lays down.

Subject to certain conditions and limitations it declares that "the Appellate Court shall have the same powers and shall perform as nearly as may be the same duties as are conferred on and imposed by this Code on Courts of Original Jurisdiction in respect of suits instituted therein".

Rule 11 of Order XXII which says "in the application of this order to appeals, so far as may be, the word "plaintiff" shall be held to include an "appellant", the word "defendant" a "respondent", and the word "suit" an "appeal" does not occur in Order XXIII.

Therefore in considering what are the powers of an Appellate Court under Order XXIII, which deals with the withdrawal and adjustment of suits, there is no necessity to go through a strict process of altering the word "suit" into the word "appeal" wherever it occurs.

A comparison of the sections of the old Code dealing with this matter with the provisions of the new Code does, however, throw light on the question.

Section 375A which runs thus:—"Nothing in this Chapter shall apply to any application or other proceeding in any suit subsequent to the decree," with an explanation attached—"An application to the Appellate Court pending an appeal is not an application subsequent to the decree appealed from within the meaning of this section" was added by Act VI of 1882, section 2 and has disappeared in the Code of 1908. In its place we have Order XXIII, rule 4 "Nothing in this order shall apply to any proceedings in execution of a decree or order."

The explanation to the old section in terms answered the objection that applications to withdraw the suit cannot be made in appeal because they are subsequent to the decree.

It recognized the practice of withdrawing suits with the Court's permission after they have reached the stage of appeal.

The new rule declares that the plaintiff cannot have this privilege when his suit has reached the stage of execution. This rule seems to have been introduced in consequence of the decisions in Radha Kishen Lall v. Radha Pershad Singh (10) and Lakshmi Narasimha v. Atchanna (11) and Tarachand Megraj v. Kashinath Trimbak (12).

The fact that the exercise of the right when the suit is in the stage of appeal is not expressly negatived favours the theory that what is not expressly withdrawn may be presumed to continue to exist.

As cases not infrequently occur in which the exercise of the supposed power to withdraw suits with liberty to sue again is attempted, and as the question is of considerable importance, we refer for the decision of a Full Bench the question "whether an Appellate Court has the power for proper reasons to allow a suit to be withdrawn with liberty to file a fresh suit."

KRISHNAN, J.—I agree to the order of reference to the Full Bench as proposed by my learned brother.

The District Judge's order passed at the hearing of the present respondents' appeal, allowing their suit to be withdrawn with liberty to file a fresh suit must be taken to have in effect set aside the decree of the 1st Court dismissing the suit or annulled it and to have allowed the appeal to that extent though the order does not expressly say so. See the observations of Tyrrell, J. in Ganga Ram v. Data Ram (4).

The order was passed under rule 1, Order XXIII read with section 107, clause (2) of the new Code, which was in force at the time. The suit now in the second appeal before us was brought in pursuance of the leave so granted. Defendants (appellants) contend that the Appellate Court had no power whatever in any case to act under the rule referred to, that even if it could so act there were no proper grounds to justify its action, that it is open to them in the present suit to impugn the order on both the grounds above stated, that it should be treated as a nullity and that the present suit should be dismissed as barred by the previous suit on the same cause of action.

It will be convenient to consider first how far it is open to the appellants to impugn the order in this suit. It seems to me if the order had been passed with jurisdiction it is not open to us now to consider the propriety of it on the merits, where a Court which has power to act under rule 1, Order XXIII has exercised its discretion and passed an order under it, the fact that it was passed for insufficient reason does not, it seems to me, make the order one passed without jurisdiction. There is no question of defect of jurisdiction though the order may amount to an irregularity. This was the view taken in Tirupati v. Muttu (9). It was held that the propriety of the order could not be questioned in the 2nd suit in Perumal v. Pichan (13) and also in Ohhazju v. Khyali Ram (14). The only authority to the contrary cited before us is the case of Kali Prasanna Sil v. Panchanan Nandi (8). With all respect to the learned Judges in that case, I am unable to agree with the view that the jurisdiction of the Court to pass an order under the rule in question depends on the existence of proper grounds for the order allowing the withdrawal with liberty. Under the rule as enacted when the Court passing the order is satisfied that there are sufficient grounds it has the power to pass the order granting permission for a fresh suit; so that the erroneousness or insufficiency of the grounds on which the Court is so satisfied is not a matter affecting the jurisdiction of the Court. The weight of authority is against the view taken in the Calcutta case and I respectfully dissent from it, and follow the ruling of this Court with which I respectfully agree.

If, however, it is open to us to consider the propriety of the order of the District Judge now, the case in Ganga Ram v. Data Ram (4), already cited, is an authority for holding that there was proper ground in this case for the order made, as the plaintiff's first suit was going to fail for the formal defect that his plaint did not properly set out his title.

RALIDE KAMAYYA v. PRAGADA PAPATYA.

If the appellants' contention that an Appellate Court has no power to act under rule 1, Order XXIII, its application being confined to the Court of first instance is correct, then the order in question here will be one passed without jurisdiction and must be treated as non est. The case cited in Robert Watson & Co. v. Collector of Rajshahye (15) is, I think, a sufficient authority for holding that an order passed without jurisdiction can be treated as a nullity in a subsequent suit. The question then is whether the Appellate Court had no power to act under rule 1, Order XXIII. The case in Choragudi Chinna Kotayya v. Raja Varadaraja Appa Row (1) supports the appellants' argument that no such power exists. With great respect to the learned Judges who decided that case I agree that the ruling should be re-considered. It was doubted in Veera Reddy v. Akka Reddy (5) and dissented from in Afzal Begam v. Akbari Khanam (3). The ruling in Ganga Ram v. Data Ram (4) which expressly held that the Appellate Court had such power under section 373, Civil Procedure Code, corresponding to the rule in question does not seem to have been brought to the notice of the Judges. No previous decisions are cited in support of their view except the case in Eknath v. Ranoji (2) which I shall consider later. Admittedly it is against the existing practice.

That decision holds on a consideration of the language of the rule that it cannot be extended to a suit in which a decree has already been passed; by this the learned Judges seem to mean that the exercise of the power is confined to a stage before the passing of any decree at all in the suit. I am unable to follow the argument that the language of the rule leads to such an inference. It may at the most point to a stage before a final and subsisting decree is passed in the case and not merely a first decree. The costs referred to in clause (3) are what the Court awards when passing the order. They cannot be said to have been provided for already unless there is a subsisting decree. The withdrawal of a part of the claim stands on the same footing as the withdrawal of the whole: of course neither can be withdrawn if there is a subsisting decree. Where there is no subsisting decree I can see no difficulty at all in either case. Even apart from the language of the rule itself it is clear as explained by Tyrrell, J. in Ganga Ram v. Data Ram (4) a suit cannot be withdrawn after it has terminated in a final decree; for so long as that decree is subsisting and operative the withdrawal will be against the terms of that decree. I do not think the language of the rule means anything more.

A decree once passed by a Court can be set aside by that Court itself either on review or under Order IX, rule 13, if it was an ex parte decree; or its decree may be set aside by an Appellate Court and the case remanded for re-hearing. In all these cases in spite of the fact that a decree was once passed the suit again becomes pending in the trial Court and it cannot be contended that that Court could not act under the rule at that stage. It will thus be seen that the fact that a decree has once been passed is of no importance provided that it is not a subsisting decree when the permission for withdrawal is given.

Under section 107, clause (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Appellate Court has the same powers as are conferred by the Code on the Court of Original Jurisdiction in respect of suits. As the first Court can act under rule 1, Order XXIII when there is no subsisting decree, the Appellate Court can also do the same provided it sets aside the decree of the first Court as it has power to do. The Appellate Court's power is derived from the section and not by a process of substituting the word "appeal" for the word "suit" wherever it occurs in rule 1, Order XXIII, as is suggested in the ruling under consideration.

With due respect it seems to me that the ruling in Eknath v. Ranoji (2) has been misunderstood in Choragudi Chinna Kotayya v. Raja Varadaraja Appa Row (1). In that case the District Judge gave leave under rule 1, Order XXIII, to the plaintiff before the admission of his appeal and without notice to the defendant. There was a subsisting decree of the first Court which the District Judge did not and was not in a position to set aside as the appeal had not even reached the stage of admission. The High Court was right in holding that the District Judge had no power to allow the suit to be withdrawn with liberty as there was a decree in defendants' favour. The language used in the High Court's judgment must be read with reference to the facts of the case.

I am, therefore, constrained to think that the ruling in Choragudi Chinna Kotayya v. Raja Varadaraja Appa Row (1) is not correct and that the Appellate Court has powers for proper reason to allow a suit to be withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit.

I, therefore, agree to the reference as already stated.

These second appeals coming on for hearing as per above order, upon perusing the said Order of Reference and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. V. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar for Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Appellants and of Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham, for the Respondents in Second Appeal No. 979 of 1914 and of Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham, for the Appellants and of Mr. V. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar for Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Respondents in Second Appeal No. 1712 of 1914, the Court (John Wallis, C. J., Abdur Rahim and Srinivasa Aiyangar, JJ.) expressed the following

OPINION.

We agree with the learned Judges who made the reference that it is open to an Appellate Court in proper cases when reversing the decree of the lower Court to give the plaintiff leave to withdraw the suit with liberty to file a fresh suit.

This second appeal coming on for hearing after the expression of the Opinion of the Full Bench on the 18th December 1916 and having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court (Spencer and Phillips, JJ.) delivered on the 22nd December 1916 the following

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—Now that the Full Bench has decided that leave to withdraw a suit with liberty to file a fresh suit may be given by an Appellate Court when reversing the decree of a lower Court, it is argued that, as the decree of the District Court did not in terms set aside the District Munsif's decree, there was no valid permission given to the plaintiff to bring the suit out of which this appeal has arisen.

I have already stated that, in my opinion, what the District Judge intended evidently was to set aside the decree of the Original Court and to permit the suit to be withdrawn, and my learned brother Krishnan, J., has expressed it as his opinion that it must be taken to have actually had that effect. The petition to withdraw and the order of the District Judge are not on the record. So it is not known whether the order passed by the Judge was to set aside the decree of the District Munsif and dismiss the suit. But taking the decree as it stands, I find no meaning in saying that the appeal is withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit, considering that it was the plaintiff who was appealing and that it would not have served his purpose to withdraw his appeal without also withdrawing his suit that had been dismissed in the first Court.

I think we must give the decree an effect which is intelligible, and the only effect of the sentence ordering the withdrawal of the appeal which would be consistent with the rest of the decree is, that it put an end to the decree which had been passed by the District Munsif. Otherwise the District Judge had no power to give leave to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit. Omnia presumuntur rite esse acta. We should, if possible, presume that his decree was legally effective, and that he was not deliberately making it impossible for the plaintiff to get the relief sought and granted. I think the proper answer to the present contention may be found in the judgments of Straight and Tyrrell, JJ., in Ganga Ram v. Data Ram (4) who say in a similar case that the Judge's order meant to set aside and did set aside the decree of the Court of first instance, though this was not done in express terms, and that it must be treated and regarded as one disposing of the suit and the appeal before the Judge.

As stated in Jogodindro Nath v. Sarut Sunduri Debi (7) an order of an Appellate Court giving leave to withdraw an appeal and to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit does not merely set aside the first Court's decree, as the term is used in its ordinary sense; it does not substitute anything for the decree which is set aside, but it simply wipes it out and leaves the parties to the determination of the rights in a subsequent suit, and what is done with regard to the first Court's decree is merely ancillary to the rest of the order, which is not a decree. This view was adopted and followed by the Allahabad High Court in Jagdish Chaudhri v. Tulshi Chaudhri (16) and Genda Mal v. Purbhu Lal (17). Such is the ordinary effect of an order made under rule 1 of Order XXIII of the Code of Civil Procedure and there can be no doubt that the order in question purported to be an order under the said rule and not under any other provision of law.

I consider, therefore, that the learned District Judge intended to and did by his decree, wipe out the District Munsif's decree when he gave leave to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit. The defendants took no steps to have the order giving this leave set aside or revised as being illegal owing to the existence of the first Court's decree dismissing the suit, as they might have done, if they wished to treat the first Court's decree as still subsisting.

My learned brother is of opinion that this appeal should be allowed. Under section 98 of the Civil Procedure Code, it is dismissed with costs.

PHILLIPS, J.—In this case the question referred to the Full Bench was "whether an Appellate Court has the power for proper reasons to allow a suit to be withdrawn with liberty to file a fresh suit." It has been answered in the affirmative, but with one important modification, that is, that an Appellate Court has such power "when reversing the decree of the lower Court." In the present case the decree of the District Court was as follows:—"that the appeal be and the same hereby is withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit etc." Costs of the appeal were ordered to be paid by appellant, but no order was passed as to costs in the lower Court nor was the lower Court's decree reversed. It is contended for appellants that the effect of the Appellate Courts' decree is to wipe out the lower Court's decree, and that, we must take it as having that meaning. In Ganga Ram v. Data Ram (4) Straight, J., (16) 16 A. 19; A. W. N. (1893) 189; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 13.

(17) 17 A. 97 at p. 99; A. W. N. (1895) 17; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 387.

held that an order of the Appellate Court allowing a suit to be withdrawn must be held to have put an end to the decree and Tyrrell, J., concurred in this view. The point, however, that they were considering was whether such an order amounted to a decree. The cases in Jagdish Chaudhri v. Tulshi Chaudhri (16) and Genda Mal v. Purbhu Lal (17) were also cases in which the same question was in issue. In Jogolindro Nath v. Sarat Sundari Debi (7) where again the right of appeal was in question, the Court remarked: "We do not think that this order (that is, an order giving leave to withdraw the appeal and the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit) is in any sense a decree. The setting aside or annulling of a decree by the Appellate Court, as it has been done in this case, does not set aside the decree as the term is used in its ordinary sense but simply wipes it out and leaves the parties to the determination of their rights in a subsequent suit and what is done with regard to the first Courts' decree is merely ancillary to the rest of the order." The order appealed against is not quoted in the report, but from the language of the judgment it would appear that it did expressly set aside or annul the decree of the lower Court and it would appear that in none of these cases was the appeal alone allowed to be withdrawn.

On the other hand in Robert Watson & Co. v. Collector of Rajshahye (15) et seq where a suit was dismissed with leave to bring a fresh suit and it was found that the leave was granted in the exercise of an improper discretion, it was held that the dismissal of the suit was effective as res judicata.

In Gulkandi Lal v. Manni Lal (18) where a suit was dismissed in pursuance of a compromise, and no leave to bring a fresh suit was obtained, nor were the terms of the compromise embodied in the decree, it was held that a fresh suit was barred and that it was incumbent on the plaintiff to see that the Court did its duty and recorded a proper order in the suit. In Triupa'i v. Muttu (9) a District Judge passed an order in appeal "withdrawn with permission to institute a fresh suit on the same cause of action," and while holding that leave was improperly given it was observed that the decree passed by the Munsif had not been set aside and was still operative. Where a wrong order has been passed by a Court it does not necessarily give a party a right, and we see in Sukh Lal v. Bhikhi (19) where a suit was dismissed with liberty to bring another suit for possession of one-third of the plaint property, and it was held that the District Munsif had no power to make the reservation and the subsequent suit was barred by res judicata. We see in the cases where leave to bring a fresh suit has been wrongly given that the rest of the order dismissing the suit is held to be valid. These authorities have no very direct bearing on the question which we have really to consider, that is, whether the District Judge's order can be said to have been passed "when reversing the decree of the lower Court." It is contended that the opinion, expressed by my learned brother Krishnan, J., in the order of reference, that the District Judge intended to set aside the lower Court's decree, and must be deemed to have done so, is final, but if this were so there would be no force in the words added in the answer of the Full Bench, "when reversing the decree of the lower Court," which, in my opinion, have the effect of re-opening the question, even if it could be deemed to have been decided. As the District Judge's order stands it does not in any way affect the District Munsif's decree, for it merely allows the appeal (not the suit) to be withdrawn and makes an order as to costs in the Appellate Court. No provision is even made for payment of costs in the District Munsif's Court and I am, therefore, of opinion that at least as far as those costs are concerned the District Munsif's decree was not set aside by the Appellate Court. In fact the decree, as it is, amounts merely to striking off the appeal. I think it very likely that the District Judge intended to set aside the lower Court's decree but he has not done so, and if the order is drafted in such a way as to fail to give effect to the Court's intention, it was the duty of the party to apply to have it corrected. As the order does not reverse the lower Court's decree I do not think that it is open to us now to read it in the light of what we think was the intention of the Judge. I would, therefore, allow the appeal holding, that as the original decree has not been reversed it is still valid and effective as res judicata.

(18) 23 A. 219; A. W. N. (1901) C6.

MUHAMMAD ABUL GHANI v. BALMOKUND SUKUL.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XXIII, rr. 1, 3, difference between proceedings under—Withdrawal of suit on compromise—Duty of Court.

The difference between proceedings under rules 1 and 3, of Order XXIII, of the Civil Procedure Code, lies in the fact that under rule 1 a Court is dealing with the plaintiff only and under rule 3 a Court is dealing with the plaintiff and defendant together, and is considering whether there has been any agreement made between the plaintiff and defendant for an adjustment of the claim. As soon as a suit is instituted and a summons served upon the defendant, the defendant is entitled to claim any costs that he incurs by entering appearance. If by any agreement outside the Court a concession is made by the plaintiff on the one hand with regard to his claim and a concession made by the defendant on the other with regard to his costs, then there are present all the elements of a compromise. [p. 422, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the 2nd Sub-Judge, Mozaffarpur, dated the 17th November 1913.

Messrs. Lachminarain Sinha and Ganesht Dut Singh, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Syed Hassan Inam, Baidya Nath Narain Singh and Sira Nandan Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Sheikh Muhammad Abdul Ghani and another were plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 and Suba Chondbry and another were plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 4 in a suit for a declaration that the kobala executed by the Mahomedan plaintiffs in favour of the defendants was void for want of consideration.

The plaint set forth that on the date of filing it the Mahomedan plaintiffs had parted with all their right, title and interest in the property in favour of the plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 4 and that, therefore, the plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 4 would conduct the suit against the defendants.

On the 8th of September 1913 the 4th of November was put down as the next date for trial. On the 15th of September a petition was filed by the Mahomedan plaintiffs to the effect that they had been soundly brought to task by their friends in the village for instituting a suit in which they had no possible chance of success and that their conscience smiting them upon this criticism of their conduct by the villagers they went to the defendants who were graciously pleased to allow them to withdraw the suit and had in return for that withdrawal agreed to exempt them from the costs for which the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 would in the end have been liable. The order passed upon this petition was 'put up on the date fixed'. On the date fixed, 4th of November, the petition was put up, and it was after a full discussion and examination of witnesses on behalf of the plaintiffs, held on the 17th November, that the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 had in fact entered into an agreement with the defendants whereby the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 should abandon the whole of their claim to the property in suit and the defendants on the other hand should abandon all claims that they might be entitled to press in the matter of costs. The suit of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was accordingly dismissed in terms of the petition filed. The plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 4 were then told to proceed with their suit and after waiting for half an hour the Subordinate Judge dismissed their suit also. In due course the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 appealed to this Court against the order declaring that the agreement filed was within the terms of Order XXIII, rule 3, and the plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 4 filed a petition for re-hearing, on the ground, that they were taken by surprise on the 17th of November. The lower Court upon this petition of the plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 4 for restoration of the suit came to the conclusion that they had full knowledge that their case would be taken up as soon as the position of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 had been declared and that they had ample opportunities for instructing their Pleaders on the date on which the suit was struck off the file. It, therefore, dismissed the application for the restoration of the suit. Against this order also the plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 4 appeal.

Dealing first with the case of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 the position taken by the Vakil for the appellant is that if the proceedings were proceedings under Order XXIII, rule 1, then the order of the learned Subordinate Judge was bad, but that if they were in fact proceedings under Order XXIII, rule 3, then they appear to be in order and cannot be assailed in appeal. The difference between proceedings under rules 1 and 3 of this order lies in the fact that under rule 1 a Court is dealing with the plaintiff only and under rule 3 a Court is dealing with the plaintiff and defendant together, and is considering whether there has been any agreement made between the plaintiff and defendant for an adjustment of the claim. As soon as a suit is instituted and a summons served upon the defendant; the defendant is entitled to claim any costs that he incurs by entering appearance. If by any agreement outside the Court a concession is made by the plaintiff on the one hand with regard to his claim and a concession made by the defendant on the other with regard to his costs we have then all the elements of a compromise. In the case before us it is admitted by the plaintiffs that they had agreed in the presence of the defendants to give up their right in the property in suit and that the defendants had agreed in the presence of the plaintiffs to give up their right to costs.

We are satisfied that the proceedings in this case fell under Order XXIII, rule 3, and that the order of the learned Subordinate Judge was a proper order.

The appeal of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 must be dismissed with costs. Pleader's fee five (5) gold mohurs.

With regard to the position of the plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 4 we have it that the 4th of November was the date fixed for the hearing of the suit as a whole and that on the 4th of November it was recorded that parties were ready. They went on from day to day knowing that the proceedings regarding the adjustment of the plaintiffs' claim (plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2) was only a part of the contest and that they would be required to proceed forthwith with the main case as soon as the question of the compromise had been decided. This is clear from the fact that on the 17th November four witnesses were present on behalf of plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 4.

In his examination-in-chief the plaintiff Suba Choudhry clearly says that there were two Pleaders who were instructed in the case, Babu Sham Nandan and Babu Jogendra Chandra Mukherji. He ran to Jogendra Chandra Mukherji. That gentleman said "I know nothing about your case so go to your Pleader Sham Nandan." He then ran to Sham Nandan who said "I know nothing about your case." From these statements it is quite clear that the plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 4 did not on the 17th of November take the ordinary precaution of instructing Pleaders at all in spite of the fact that they knew that the case would be taken up that day. Such neglect must be regarded as gross and inexcusable. To condone such neglect would be to paralyse the efficient administration of justice. We have no hesitation in supporting the learned Sub-Judge in the attitude taken by him. The suit was rightly struck off the file and the appeal must be dismissed with costs. Pleaders' fee five (5) gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

Among Sunni Muhammadans if a testator devises property subject to a condition, the devise must be treated as unconditional and as conferring a complete title upon the legatee.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 19th July 1915, reversing the order of the Munsif, Fyzabad, dated the 16th May 1914.

Mr. Muhammad Was'm, for the Appellants.

Mr. Hyder Husain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit brought on the basis of a Will made by a Sunni Muhammadan. No question now arises as to the validity of the Will or the enforceability of its terms. The parties have previously been in dispute upon these points, but they have now agreed that the Will should be treated as valid and that its terms should be enforced. It is in the first place necessary to interpret the terms of the Will which have bearing upon the matter in dispute. I have considered the terms carefully and have arrived at a conclusion that the testator devised certain landed property to his widow Musammât Bandi.

He made the devise subject to two conditions, the first, being that she was to have no power to transfer the property in question and the second being that she was to hold it for life, that is to say, that it would not descend to her heirs. He added further that on her death the property would devolve on a certain Zahur Ahmad. I do not accept the contention of the learned Counsel for the appellants that the terms of the Will should be interpreted as meaning that he devised the property to Zahur Ahmad with a usufruct for life to Musammât Bandi. If I had accepted that contention many points of law would have arisen to which I need not advert. As I do not accept it, but find that the property was devised to Musammât Bandi subject to two conditions, the legal point for decision is comparatively simple. There can be no doubt as to the fact that according to the law governing dispositions amongst Sunni Muhammadans the effect of a disposition, such as I find this disposition to have been, is to confer complete proprietary title. Under the principles of that law such a disposition must be complete. If it is not complete it is not a disposition and it is well-established law that where the testator endeavours to affix conditions on to the disposition it is treated as unconditional and the conditions are treated as null and void. This is the view which was taken by the learned Additional Judge and it is the correct view.

I, therefore, dismiss this appeal. The appellants will pay their own costs and those of the respondents.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 157, 159, 32 (2)—Chaukidar's diary, entries of births and deaths in, made by third persons at the request of chaukidar, admissibility of.

A chaukidar who was an illiterate person got other people to make entries in his diary for him relating to the birth and death of a certain person. The persons who made these entries were called at the trial and deposed that they had made the entries at the request of the chaukidar. The chaukidar was dead at the time of the trial.

Held, that the entries were not admissible in evidence under section 32 (2) but were admissible under section 157 and possibly also under section 159 of the Evidence Act. [p. 425, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Mozaffarpur, dated the 13th December 1916.

Sir Ali Imam, for the Appellants.

Mr. Pugh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

CHAMEIR, C. J.—This is a second appeal in a suit brought by the respondents for possession of certain property which at one time belonged to one Ramudar Singh. In order to succeed in their suit the respondents had to prove that Ramudar Singh had a son, Ram Prasad Singh, who survived his father. The first Court (the Subordinate Judge of Mozaffarpur) held that the respondents had failed to prove that Ramudar Singh had a son at all. But on appeal the learned District Judge held otherwise; in his opinion the evidence adduced by the respondents proved that Ramudar Singh had a son, Ram Prasad, and that Ram Prasad survived his father.

Various questions have been mooted by Counsel for the appellants. The only question which we can consider in second appeal is the question whether the District Judge was right in admitting in evidence certain entries in the diary of a deceased chaukidar. Before the Subordinate Judge it seems to have been contended that the entries were admissible under section 35 of the Evidence Act. The Subordinate Judge held that they were not. On appeal the District Judge agreed with the Subordinate Judge that the entries were not admissible under section 35 but he held that they were admissible under section 32, sub-section (2) of the Evidence Act. He considered that they were statements made by the chaukidar in the ordinary course of business and in support of that view he referred to the case of Sheonandan Singh v. Jeonandan Dusadh (1). That case is by no means on all fours with the present case and I do not consider it necessary to express any opinion as to the correctness of the decision in it. In my opinion the entries in the diary in question are not admissible under section 32, sub-section (2) for according to the evidence those entries were not made by the chaukidar at all. According to the evidence the chaukidar who was an illiterate person got other people to make entries in his diary for him. The persons who made the entries relating to the birth and death of Ram Prasad Singh were called at the trial and they both deposed that they made the entries at the request of the chaukidar. It is, therefore, unnecessary to consider the question which has been argued before us, namely, whether or not the entries in the diaries were made in the ordinary course of business within the meaning of section 32, sub-section (2). But, in my opinion, the entries are admissible in evidence under either section 157 or section 159 of the Evidence Act or possibly under both those sections. As already explained, the writers of the entries in question were produced as witnesses at the trial; the diary was put into the hand of each of these witnesses and each of them attested the entry made by him in the diary. It is quite clear that the entries are admissible under section 157 and if the witnesses had been more carefully examined, it would perhaps have been possible to hold that the entries were admissible under section 159 also. The evidence of one of the witnesses leaves it very doubtful whether he was using the diary for the purpose of refreshing his memory. The evidence of the other witness leaves very little doubt on the subject.

(1) 1 Ind. Cas. 376; 13 C. W. N. 71.

PRAFULLA KRISHNA DEB V. NOSIBANNESSA BIBI.

It was contended by Counsel for the appellants that even if this Court held that the entries were admissible under section 157 or under section 159 of the Evidence Act it should not accept the findings of fact arrived at by the learned District Judge. Counsel for the respondents, on the other hand, urged that even if we hold that the entries were not admissible we should accept the findings of fact recorded by the learned District Judge because his findings rest not only on the entries in the chaukidar's diary but also upon oral and other documentary evidence. I think there can be no doubt that the learned Judge attached considerable importance to the entries in the diary. But, in my opinion, we ought to accept the learned Judge's findings though I cannot agree with him that the entries in the diary are admissible under section 32, sub-section (2) of the Evidence Act. The learned Judge accepts the evidence of the persons who were called to attest the entries in the diary. He also definitely accepts the evidence of the Police constable who was called to prove the initials of a constable which appear in the diary. It is, therefore, quite clear that the learned Judge was satisfied that the diary was not a recent fabrication and that it was in existence at the time that the entries were made. The importance of the entries lies in the fact that they are contemporaneous records of the birth and death of Ram Prasad Singh. I feel no doubt that if the learned District Judge had admitted the entries under section 157 or under section 159 of the Evidence Act he would have accepted the respondent's case as true.

In these circumstances I think that we ought to accept the findings of the learned District Judge and, accepting them, I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

ROE, J.—I agree. I am strongly impressed by the fact that if the objection now raised had been taken before the learned Subordinate Judge and had been pressed at the time the witness Sunder Lal was giving his testimony in regard to the birth of a son to Ramudar Singh, it would have been brought out in such a form that there could have been no room for doubt, that he was himself cognizant of the birth of that son, and had at or about the time of that birth made a statement in writing regarding it. I, therefore, concur in the order proposed and would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

*Appeal—Suit for rent not exceeding Rs. 100 in value —Order of District Judge in execution, whether appealable, when not relating to questions of title—
Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 153.*

There is no appeal to the High Court against an order passed in execution of a decree in a rent suit, not exceeding Rs. 100 in value, the order not deciding any question relating to title to land or some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto or to any of the matters specifically referred to in section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 427, col. 2.]

Reference to a Special Bench by N. R. Chatterjea and Richardson, JJ, before whom the appeal came on for hearing against the order of the District Judge of Tipperah, dated the 29th January 1915, affirming that of the Munsif. at Comilla, dated the 31st August 1914.

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

The question raised in this appeal is whether a decree for rent obtained by a person who was the landlord when he obtained it, can enforce the decree against the holding in arrears under the special provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, after he has ceased to be the landlord.

The appellants as ijaradars brought a suit for arrears of rent and obtained a decree while they were ijaradars. Subsequent to the decree, however, they ceased to be ijaradars and they applied for execution of the decree as a decree for rent by attachment and sale of the holding in arrears under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The Court of first instance held that the decree-holders cannot avail themselves of the provisions of sections 65 and 163 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and cannot proceed against the holding in arrears, and accordingly dismissed the applicant. That order was confirmed on appeal by the District Judge, and the decree-holders have appealed to this Court.

The question involved in the case was considered by a Full Bench of this Court, and the Full Bench was of opinion that if at the time when a suit for arrears of rent is instituted and a decree made, the plaintiff is still the landlord, the fact that he has subsequently sold his interest in the property does not prevent him from obtaining the benefit of section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and executing the decree against it. [See Khetra Pal Singh v. Kritarthamoyi Dassi (1).]

The question has also been recently considered in the case of Arthur Henry Forbes v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (2), by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

The learned Pleader for the appellants contends that the Full Bench decision has only been distinguished and not overruled by the judgment of the Privy Council as held by the Courts below, and that the general observations made in the judgment must be taken as applicable to the facts of that case.

It is true that in that case the landlord had transferred his interest before he instituted the suit for arrears of rent, and their Lordships in referring to the Full Bench decision upon which this Court relied, pointed out that in the latter case, the landlord did not part with the property, and put an end to the relationship of landlord and tenant until after the decree in his suit for rent, and that this Court had fallen into an error in drawing an inference of law in support of their conclusion from a decision which was obviously based upon facts different from those with which they had to deal. But after pointing out that the decision of the Full Bench was inapplicable to the facts of that case, their Lordships proceeded to consider the broad question "whether the special right created in favour of the landlord under section 65 can be claimed also by one who has parted with the property which gives this right and to which it is attached." After observing that section 65 is not happily worded, and gives no indication as to when the rent becomes a "first charge"—whether from the nature of the claim or after it has been ascertained and made the subject of a decree—and that "the section does not sufficiently indicate at whose instance the tenure or holding shall be liable to sale in execution of a decree for rent thereof, though from the reason of the thing it is obvious that it must be at the instance of the landlord," their Lordships considered the general scope of the Act as well as of the Chapter in which the section occurs. Referring to sections 65 and 66 of the Act their Lordships observed: "The two sections taken together cover practically the remedies provided by law for the landlord to recover arrears of rent. One section is the exact corollary of the other. The right to proceed to sale in one case, in the other to eject, is dependent on the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant at the time when the remedy provided by law is sought to be enforced," that "a reference to section 148, clause (h) clearly shows that the right to apply for the execution of a decree for arrears was attached to the status of the decree-holder qua landlord: "...To acquire the right which the section gives not only the person obtaining the decree must be the landlord at the time, but the person seeking to execute it by sale of the tenure must have the landlord's interests vested in him. In other words, the right to bring the tenure or holding as the case may be to sale exists so long as the relationship of landlord and tenant exists," and came to the conclusion that "it is the existing landlord alone who can execute the decree: the ex-landlord is an outsider, and, whilst he can execute his decree against the debtor as a money-decree, he has no remedy against the tenure itself."

It will be seen, therefore, that the principle upon which the judgment of their Lordships proceeds, viz., that in order to acquire the right which the section gives, not only the person obtaining the decree must be the landlord at the time, but the person seeking to execute it by sale of the tenure or holding must have the landlord's interest vested in him: that the right to bring the tenure or holding to sale exists so long as the relationship of landlord and tenant exists, and that it is the existing landlord alone who can execute the decree, applies equally to a case where the landlord ceases to be landlord after he obtains a decree for arrears of rent, and before he seeks to enforce it against the tenure or holding, as to a case where he ceases to be landlord before he institutes his suit for rent. In either case there is no relationship of landlord and tenant at the time when the remedy provided by law is sought to be enforced.

The principle, therefore, upon which the decision of the Full Bench is based, is inconsistent with that upon which the judgment of the Judicial Committee in the case of Arthur Henry Forbes v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (2) proceeds. That being so, we think that the question whether the decision of the Full Bench of this Court in the case of Khetra Pal Singh v. Kritarthamoyi Dasi (1), is still good law, should be decided by a Special Bench.

Babu Jogendra Nath Mukherji (with him Babu Bankim Chandra Ghose), for the Appellants.

At the hearing before the Special Bench the Court intimated that it was unnecessary to dispose of the reference as no appeal lay to the referring Judges, and delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a matter which has been referred to us by Mr. Justice N. R. Chatterjea and Mr. Justice Richardson before whom the appeal came.

In our opinion there was no right of appeal to those learned Judges for the reason that the order from which the appeal was filed was an order in a suit instituted by a landlord for the recovery of rent. The order was passed by a District Judge, and the amount claimed in the suit did not exceed Rs. 100 and the order did not decide any question which related to title to land or some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto or to any of the matters specifically referred to in section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Under these circumstances we are of opinion that no appeal lay from the order of the District Judge to the High Court. If this matter had been brought to the notice of the two learned Judges no doubt, they would not have sent this matter by way of reference to us. As a matter of fact only one of the parties was represented before them, and no doubt, through that, this point was not noticed by the two learned Judges.

The matter having been referred to us, it is now our duty in view of the opinion which we hold, to dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

JIWAN LAL v. RADHA NATH DASS.

Where, after a Bank had been ordered by a Court to be wound-up, a person sued both the voluntary and the official liquidators of the Bank for recovery of his pay for his employment by the voluntary liquidators for the period prior to the winding up order:

Held, that section 171 of the Companies Act applied to the case and that the suit could not be entertained without the leave of the Court conducting the liquidation proceedings.

Application against the order of the Additional Judge, Small Cause Court, Lucknow, dated the 22nd November 1915.

Babu Ajit Prasad, for the Applicants.

Babu Prabhat Chandra Gupta, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act. The question which has been raised is whether the Court below had jurisdiction to entertain the plaint. The claim was made by one Radha Nath against certain persons who were both the voluntary Liquidators and Official Liquidators of a company known as the Kathiawar Ahmadabad Banking Corporation Limited. It is an admitted fact that this company is now being wound-up under the orders of the District Judge of Ahmadabad. The case for the plaintiff was that after the Bank had gone into voluntary liquidation and before steps were taken to have the company wound-up by the Court he had been engaged by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the voluntary liquidators, and that the period of his employment ran from the 1st of November 1913 to the 21st of March 1914 at the rate of Rs. 55 a month. The Official Liquidators were apparently joined inasmuch as at the time of the institution of this suit a winding-up order had been made by the Court. An objection was taken to the jurisdiction of the Court below based upon the provisions of section 171 of the Indian Companies Act (VII of 1913). That section lays down that when a winding-up order has been made no suit or other legal proceedings shall be proceeded with or commenced against the company except by leave of the Court and subject to such terms as the Court may impose. The learned Judge held that this section did not apply to the case and he was of opinion that he was vested with jurisdiction to decide the suit. In my opinion, this decision of the Court below was wrong. There can be no doubt that at the time this suit was brought a winding-up order had been made and, therefore, the provisions of section 171 are necessarily applicable to the case. It is no answer to this plea to say that the period for which the plaintiff rendered the services in respect of which he is claiming was anterior to the date upon which the winding-up order was made for generally every claim against a company which is being wound-up relates to some period prior to the date of the making of the order. The Judge of the Court below was further of opinion that the suit was not governed by the provisions of this section because it was not a suit against a company. It was merely, he said, a suit against the voluntary liquidators. This argument cannot be accepted for it is quite clear that voluntary liquidators have no legal existence apart from the company which appointed them and it is plain beyond all doubt that the suit was being brought against the company and not against the liquidators in their individual capacity. Section 218 of the Act lays down that all costs, charges and expenses properly incurred in the voluntary winding-up of a company, including the remuneration of the liquidators, shall be payable out of the assets of the company. It is impossible to hold, therefore, that this suit was not a suit, against the company. The law, I think, is clear and this suit ought not to have been entertained without the leave of the Court which is conducting the liquidation proceedings. I must allow the application therefore, and discharge the decree of the Court below. I direct that the suit be dismissed with costs to the defendants. The applicants will have their costs here in revision.

Application accepted.

RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 55 (4) (b)—Vendor and purchaser—Direction to pay consideration to third party—Vendor's charge, whether lost—'Contract to the contrary', inference of.

A vendor of immoveable property does not lose his statutory charge for unpaid consideration by a direction to pay it to a third person. The charge is for the purchase-money and it is immaterial that it is not directly payable to the purchaser. Such a direction is not a 'contract to the contrary' within the meaning of section 55 (4) of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 432, col. 1; p. 433, col. 1.]

Abdulla Beary v. Mammali Beary, 5 Ind. Cas. 87; 33 M. 446; 7 M. L. T. 376, Webb v. Macpherson, 31 C. 57; 5 Bom. L. R. 838; 8 C. W. N. 41; 13 M. L. J. 389; 30 I. A. 238; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 554 (P. C.), dissented from. Jersey (Earl) v. Briton Ferry Floating Dock Co., (1869) 7 Eq. 409, considered.

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—If the direction is communicated to the proposed payee a completed contract may arise between the purchaser and the third party which may preclude the vendor from claiming the money before payment. Where it is not shown that the third person looked to the vendee for payment and where the vendor has to pay the third party himself the lien attaches to the property to the extent of that payment. [p. 433, col. 1.]

There are three classes of charges known to English Law (a) equitable charge founded on contract, (b) equitable lien enforced by Courts of Equity and (c) the common law lien which enables the vendor to keep back possession until he is paid. The Legislature in India, in order to avoid these confusions, has enacted a simple rule of law in section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act and it would be introducing an element of uncertainty if the interpretation of this unambiguous section is made to depend upon the English decisions. [p. 432, col. 2; p. 433, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Trichinopoly, in Appeal Suit No. 417 of 1913, preferred against that of the District Munsif, Namakkal, in Original Suit No. 37 of 1913.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 5th April 1916, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgments and decrees of the lower Appellate Court and the Court of first instance and the material papers in the suit, and upon hearing the arguments of Counsel for both sides and the case having stood over for consideration till the 13th April 1916, the Court (Kumaraswami Sastri and Phillips, JJ.), made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

The appellant sold certain lands to the respondent for Rs. 2,700-0-0 and the sale-deed recited that the amount was left with the vendee for payment to the mortgagee of other lands belonging to the appellant—the words used being “to pay off the principal and interest due to Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Aiyar on his mortgage.” This was on 7th January 1901, but the respondent paid nothing to the mortgagee until 26th November 1903, by which time the mortgage-debt amounted to Rs. 3,401-4-9. The respondent paid only Rs. 3,000 and the appellant had subsequently to discharge the balance due, and seeks to enforce his claim for Rs. 401-4-0 and interest thereon from 26th November 1903, and to charge it upon the property sold to the respondent under section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act. The lower Courts have held that no charge exists and have dismissed the suit as barred by limitation on the authority of the decision in Abdulla Beary v. Mammali Beary (1). Under section 55 (4) of the Transfer of Property Act a vendor has a charge upon the property sold for the balance of unpaid purchase-money in the absence of a contract to the contrary and this, as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Webb v. Macpherson (2), is a statutory charge and different in origin and nature from the vendor's lien given by Courts of Equity in England to an unpaid vendor, and consequently the number of English cases cited are to be regarded as useful only for the purpose of illustration, and it was held that an express contract, or at least something from which an express contract can be implied, must be found in order to exclude the charge given by the Statute, and further that the charge is not excluded by any contract, covenant or agreement

(1) 5 Ind. Cas. 87; 33 M. 446; 7 M. L. T. 376.

(2) 31 C. 57; 5 Bom. L. R. 838; 8 C. W. N. 41; 13 M. L. J. 389; 30 I. A. 238; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 554, (P. C.).

SIVASUBRAMANIA AIYAR v. SUBRAMANIA AIYAR.

with respect to the purchase-money which is not inconsistent with the continuance of the charge. In Abdulla Beary v. Mammali Beary (1), it was held that, when the sale was in consideration of a promise to pay to a stranger, it was a mere covenant the breach of which must be compensated in damages, and that there is no occasion for the statutory charge in favour of the unpaid vendor to arise. The case in Webb v. Macpherson (2) was considered, but the Judges remarked: "Notwithstanding that decision.....we may on the authority of the English cases [See also Earl of Jersey v. Briton Ferry Floating Dock Company (3) and In re Brentwood Brick and Coal Company (4)] whose weight is still left unimpaired, hold that the conveyance was in consideration of covenants to pay in the future and not for purchase-money payable to the vendor in which latter case alone the charge created by the Statute can attach." Finally the learned Judges say that upon the finding that there was no purchase-money payable to the vendor, the plaintiff had no charge. So far as we understand the judgment, the finding that, when the vendor gets in return for his conveyance a promise to pay the purchase-money or a part thereof to a third person to whom the vendor is under an obligation to pay, it is perfectly safe to say that there is a contract to the contrary negating the charge in the vendor's favour, is based on the authority of English cases which treat of a vendor's equitable lien in England, and the basis of the inference of implied contract to the contrary is that there was no purchase-money payable to the vendor, the consideration of the contract being a covenant and not purchase-money. It is, however, significant that in section 55 (4) of the Transfer of Property Act the charge is said to be in respect of the purchase-money, and not of purchase-money payable to the vendor. There would apparently be a charge whether the purchase-money was payable to the vendor or to a third party, i. e., so long as anything which can properly be called purchase-money remains unpaid. Can it be said that money to be paid to a third party as consideration for the contract is not purchase-money? If, as we think, it is so, then under section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act the vendor has a charge for any balance unpaid, and this cannot be excluded except by a contract to the contrary. The case in Abdulla Beary v. Mammali Beary (1) was followed in Siva Subramania Mudaliar v. Gnanasammanda Pandara Sannadhi (5), where Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., held that a vendor who has directed the purchase-money or a part thereof to be paid to a third party must be taken to have waived by a contract necessarily implied from his conduct the right to a lien for any portion of the money to be paid to the third party under the agreement. No reason is given as to why such a condition as to payment should be considered to amount to a waiver of lien, and with all deference it appears to me that a vendor would usually wish to retain his statutory charge, whether the money was to be paid direct to him and then by him to a creditor, or whether it was to be paid direct by the vendee to the creditor. There being no contract between the creditor and the vendee, the vendor's liability to the creditor continues and he would naturally wish to retain in his power a right given to him to enforce the payment of the money by the vendee, and, therefore, as pointed out by the Privy Council in Webb v. Macpherson (2), in order to exclude the charge there must be a contract which is inconsistent with the existence of the charge and as pointed out in Kampiah Pillai v. Hari Row (6), the intention of the vendor must be considered in ascertaining whether the charge still exists. As against the authority of these two cases we have Ramakrishna Ayyar v. Subrahmanya Ayyar (7), a case very similar to the one now under discussion and there it was held that the purchaser had a charge for unpaid purchase-money. The charge was taken for granted in a similar case in She Noandan

Lal v. Jainul Abdin (8), and it was further held that the charge was not personal to the seller, but could be transferred with the debt. In Meghraj Vaish v. Abdullah Khan (9), a charge for purchase-money payable to creditors was enforced not only against the purchaser but also against a transferee with notice. In Gur Dayal Singh v. Karam Singh (10), on the other hand it was observed that the agreement of the vendee to pay a creditor was the consideration, and that the amount payable to the creditor was not part of the purchase-money, but the case was mainly decided on the ground that the property was not in the hands of a buyer but of his transferee. In view of these conflicting decisions we think it advisable to refer to a Full Bench the following question:—

Is a contract to forego the vendor's charge for unpaid purchase-money to be necessarily inferred when the whole or part of the consideration for the purchase of immoveable property is agreed to be paid by the purchaser to a third party on behalf of the vendor?

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 3rd August 1916, on the question referred for the decision of the Full Bench, upon perusing the Order of Reference and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. A. V. Visvanatha Sastri, for Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellant and of Mr. N. Rajagopalachari, for the Respondent and the case having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court (Abdur Rahim, Offg. C. J., Seshagiri Aiyar and Phillips, JJ.) expressed the following

OPINION.

ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The question referred to us must be answered in the negative. Section 55, sub-section 4, clause (b) of the Transfer of Property Act says that in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the vendor shall have a charge upon the property in the hands of the buyer for the amount of the purchase-money or any part thereof remaining unpaid. In this case the vendor has asked the purchaser to pay the unpaid purchase-money to a certain creditor of his. It is not alleged that the creditor accepted the liability of the purchaser of the property in substitution of the vendor's own liability. But the purchaser as between himself and the vendor has accepted the obligation to pay the purchase-money according to the vendor's direction. It has been held by the Privy Council in Webb v. Macpherson (2), that the statutory charge created by section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act is not to be negatived except where there is a contract to the contrary, either express or arising by necessary implication. They point out that this charge is different, in its origin and nature, from the vendor's equitable lien under the English Law. They also observe that "the charge is not excluded by a mere personal contract to defer payment of a portion of the purchase-money, or to take purchase-money by instalments, nor is it excluded by any contract, covenant or agreement with respect to the purchase-money which is not inconsistent with the continuance of the charge". It is difficult to see how a direction to the purchaser to pay the purchase-money to the vendor's creditor is inconsistent with the existence of the charge. This is the view taken by the Allahabad High Court in Har Chand v. Kishori Singh (11) and in Meghraj Vaish v. Abdullah Khan (9). It is argued, however, that in this Court the contrary view has prevailed in Abdulla Beary v. Mammali Beary (1) which has been followed in Siva Subramania Mudaliar v. Gnanasammanda Pandara Sannadhi (5). The learned Judges who decided the former case state in their judgment that, by the terms of the contract under their consideration, the purchase-money was not payable to the plaintiff and he had no right of action to recover it. That is, however, not the position involved in the present case. It has been held in Sheo Nandan Lal v. Jainul Abdin (8) that the vendor's charge for unpaid purchase-money is not a mere personal right but is capable of being transferred to a third person and in

SIVASUBRAMANĪA AIYAR v. SUBRAMANĪA AIYAR.

Ramakrishna Ayyar v. SubrahmanĪa Ayyen (7), it has been ruled that a suit to enforce the charge is governed by twelve years' limitation. A vendor's lien or charge is not lost by the mere taking of personal security. [See Kampiah Pillai v. Hari Row (6) and Mackrell v. Symmons (12).] There is no doubt a distinction, on principle as well as authority, as pointed out by the Privy Council in Webb v. Macpherson (2) between a conveyance or sale in consideration of a covenant to pay a sum of money in the future, and a sale in consideration of money which the purchaser covenants to pay. Here the consideration for the sale is money, payable by the purchaser, only he has agreed with the vendor to pay it to a third person.

The learned Judges who decided Abdulla Beary v. Mammali Beary (1) seem to hold in one part of their judgment that where the purchase-money is to be paid to another, that is necessarily inconsistent with the vendor retaining the charge. There is nothing in section 55, sub-section 4, clause (b) to suggest that for the charge to arise or to subsist, the purchase-money must be payable to the vendor himself and not, by his direction, to a third person. If the above case holds otherwise, I am of opinion that it was wrongly decided. I may mention that the decisions in Ramakrishna Ayyar v. SubrahmanĪa Ayyen (7) and Gopala Aiyar v. Ramaswami Sastrigal (13) are in accordance with the view I have expressed.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I agree with the conclusions of the learned Judges who made the reference that the vendor's lien is not lost by a direction to pay the purchase-money to a third person. The charge is for the purchase-money and it is immaterial that that money is not directly payable to the vendor. As was pointed out by the learned Vakil for the appellant, the Statute itself by section 55, (5) (b), enables the vendor to direct it to be paid to any person he names. The obvious inference is that the purchase-money does not lose its character by the direction to pay another.

(13) 10 Ind. Cas. 320; 22 M. L. J. 207; 10 M. L. T. 496.

The main argument of Mr. Rajagopala Chariar was that where there is a breach of the direction to pay a third person, the right of the vendor, who is compelled to pay himself, is only to sue for damages for breach of contract, and that consequently it must be deemed that there is a contract to the contrary when the direction to pay a third person was given. It cannot be contended that the lien is personal. [See Sheo Nandan Lal v. Jainul Abdin (8).] The right to the unpaid money as well as the charge therefor can be validly assigned to a stranger. It is not clear, therefore, why the direction to pay a third person should deprive the vendor of his charge. The decision of the Judicial Committee in Izzat-unnisa Begam v. Kunwar Pertab Singh (14) was strongly relied upon. In that case the auction-purchaser bought the property subject to encumbrances. The encumbrances were found to be invalid. Thereupon the judgment-debtor sued to recover the amount of the encumbrances by which the purchaser was benefited, and claimed a charge for it on the lands sold. Their Lordships held that when property is sold subject to encumbrances, the vendor whether in a private or Court-sale retains to himself only a claim to be indemnified against the encumbrancers proceeding against him. It was also held that the vendor was not entitled to the benefit of the finding that the encumbrances were invalid. The purchaser took the risk and was consequently entitled solely to the advantage. I fail to see how this pronouncement is an authority against the plain provisions of section 55 (4) (b).

The learned Judges of this Court in Abdulla Beary v. Mammali Beary (1) based their conclusion largely upon English decisions notwithstanding the caution of the Judicial Committee in Webb v. Macpherson (2), that the charge under the Transfer of Property Act "is different in origin and nature from the vendor's lien given by Courts of Equity to an unpaid vendor." There are three classes of charges known to English Law (a) equitable charge founded on contract;

(14) 3 Ind. Cas. 793; 31 A. 583; 13 C. W. N. 1143 (P. C.); 10 C. L. J. 313; 6 A. L. J. 817; 11 Bom. L. R. 1220; 6 M. L. T. 277; 19 M. L. J. 682; 33 I. A. 203.

MUHAMMAD RAFI v. MUHAMMAD ASKARI.

(b) equitable lien enforced by Courts of Equity; and (c) the common law lien which enables the vendor to keep back possession until he is paid: (19 Halsbury's Laws of England, paragraph 20). The Legislature in India, in order to avoid these confusions, has enacted a simple rule of law; and with all deference to the learned Judges who decided Abdulla Beary v. Mammali Beary (1), it seems to me it would be introducing an unnecessary element of uncertainty into this country, if the interpretation of an unambiguous section were made to depend upon English decisions. I do not, therefore, think that the English cases quoted for the respondent as showing that the rule of law in England is not as stated in Abdulla Beary v. Mammali Beary (1), need be considered.

Only one other argument need be noticed. It was broadly contended that after giving the direction to the purchaser to pay the money to a third person, the vendor had no right to countermand it. Of course, if the direction had been communicated to the proposed payee, a completed contract may arise between the purchaser and the third party which may preclude the vendor from claiming the money before payment. I do not think that Gopala Aiyar v. Ramaswami Sastrigal (13) lays down that an uncommunicated direction to a third party disables the vendor from claiming the money. On the other hand Siva Subramania Madaliar v. Gnanasammanda Pandara Sannadhi (5) is a direct authority to the contrary.

In the present case, it is not shown that the third person looked to the vendee for payment. A fortiori, therefore, when the vendor had to pay the third party himself, the lien attached to the property to the extent of that payment. I answer the question in the negative and hold that Abdulla Beary v. Mammali Beary (1) was not rightly decided.

PHILLIPS, J.—In this case, I have already expressed my views in the Order of Reference and I have heard nothing in the arguments which have now been addressed to us to induce me to change my opinion. I agree, therefore, in answering the question in the negative.

This second appeal coming on for hearing after the expression of the opinion of the Full Bench, the Court (Seshagiri Aiyar and Phillips, JJ.) delivered on the 19th September 1916 the following JUDGMENT.—Following the decision of the Full Bench the decrees of the Courts below must be reversed and the suit should be remanded to the Court of first instance for disposal on the merits.

Costs will abide the result.

Mortgage—Redemption—Suit by prior mortgagee—Execution—Sale—Puisne mortgagee's right to redeem—Irregularities in execution proceedings, effect of.

Plaintiff-mortgagee obtained a decree on foot of his mortgage, and in execution thereof purchased the property in dispute, and obtained delivery of possession. Subsequently, defendant, puisne mortgagee, obtained a decree against the same property, and in execution purchased it himself, and got registration of his name in the Collectorate register. Plaintiff sued for declaration of title and confirmation of possession, or in the alternative for recovery of possession. Defendant set up a right to redeem plaintiff's mortgage, and also alleged that he was not bound by the sale in execution of the latter's decree, as his name did not appear in the execution proceedings:

Held, (1) that defendant's right to redeem continued up to the confirmation of sale in plaintiff's favour; [p 434, col. 2.]

(2) that the omission of defendant's name from proceedings in execution of plaintiff's decree did not render the sale a nullity and that the defendant was, therefore, bound by it. [p. 434, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Saran, dated the 27th June 1913, reversing that of the Munsif, Siwan, dated the 9th December 1912.

Mr. Muhammad Fakhruddin (Government Pleader), for the Appellant.

Mr. Khurshaid Husain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is a prior mortgagee in respect of a four-annas four-pies share in Mouza Nawadih, which was the property in suit. He got a decree upon his mortgage-bond on the 31st of May 1897, brought the property to sale, purchased it himself on the 4th of July 1900, and obtained delivery of possession.

The defendant is the father of one Amir, who was a second mortgagee not only of Nawadih, but also of another property. Amir appears to have died after delivery of possession to the plaintiff and the defendant appears to have obtained a decree upon Amir's mortgage on the allegation that Amir was his benamidar. The date of the defendant's decree is the 5th of April 1902. He alleges that he executed the decree, bought the property at auction and obtained registration of his name in the Collectorate.

The plaintiff sues for declaration of title and confirmation of possession or in the alternative for recovery of possession, dating his cause of action from the 4th of February 1911, on which date he came to know that the defendant's name had been registered in the Collectorate.

The Munsif decreed the suit, but he gave the defendant permission to redeem by paying the plaintiff Rs. 81-2-3 with interest from 31st of May 1897 (the date of the plaintiff's decree) up to the 4th of July 1900 (the date of his purchase). In appeal the Subordinate Judge also decreed the suit, but he has held that the defendant was not now entitled to redeem as he had not done so before the order absolute in the plaintiff's mortgage suit. The present second appeal is preferred by the defendant.

The Munsif found that Amir was not the benamidar of the defendant. There was a cross-appeal on this point before the Subordinate Judge which has been dismissed without adjudication, because the learned Subordinate Judge has assumed the position most favourable to the defendant, namely, that Amir was really his benamidar. If Amir was not the benamidar of the defendant, the defendant is obviously a trespasser and has no title to the property. But upon the assumption made by the learned Subordinate Judge, let us see whether the learned Subordinate Judge is right. The learned Subordinate Judge states that the defendant was bound to redeem before the order absolute. This view, in my opinion, is wrong. The right of redemption continued till the confirmation of sale, Bibijan Bibi v. Sachi Bewah (1).

The defendant next contends that as no notices were issued upon him in the execution proceedings in connection with the decree on which the plaintiff bases his title, he is not bound by the sale and by the plaintiff's purchase, which passed to the plaintiff only the right, title and interest of the mortgagors and not the defendant's equity of redemption. He relies upon Khairaj Mal v. Daim (2). But the reason of decision in that case was that the person whose property was sold was not at all a party to the suit, and their Lordships of the Privy Council observed that a sale held in execution of a decree in a suit not properly constituted is not voidable but is a nullity. In the present case Amir was a party to the suit and the decree was obtained after service of summons upon him. The omission of his name in the execution proceedings was merely an irregularity. The sale, even though the mortgagee creditor was himself the purchaser, could not be considered a nullity. Malkarjun v. Narhari (3) is conclusive authority upon this point, although in that case the purchaser was a third party. The defendant's only remedy was by an application to set aside the sale under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, but such an application would now be barred. He might also have brought a suit for redemption, but that also would be barred. As his right to redeem is barred, he ought not to be allowed to exercise that right as a defendant in the present suit for recovery of possession. In my opinion the plaintiff's sale being a valid sale and binding upon the defendant, the defendant has no answer to the suit. The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge decreeing the suit is correct and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Babu Aditya Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—(January 12th, 1916.)—The important question for decision in this case is on what date a separation took place between the members of the family to which the parties in this suit belonged. The suit was brought by two plaintiffs Jagan Nath and Mathura against a nephew of theirs named Bindeshwari for possession of a certain share in a certain property, the allegation being that that property had been acquired by the defendant's father Ram Dhan at the time when the plaintiffs and Ram Dhan were joint in estate. This man Ram Dhan died in August 1912 and the case for the defendant was that a separation had taken place some 15 or 16 years before the suit was filed. The Court of first instance after consideration of the evidence came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs' version of the affair was correct and that the separation had not taken place till about the year 1907.

This finding has been reversed in appeal by the learned District Judge and now the plaintiffs have come up in second appeal before me. I am bound to say that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court in this case is of an unsatisfactory character. I have nothing whatever to say regarding the learned Judge's observations with regard to the weight which should be attached to the statements of the witnesses who deposed in favour of either party. He has come to the conclusion that the oral evidence in the case is worthless and I must accept that finding. There was, however, a great deal of documentary evidence in the case, no less than 24 documents being produced on behalf of the plaintiffs and four documents on behalf of the defendant, and, as the learned Judge observed, the decision of the case depended upon the weight which was to be attached to these documents. A number of pages of the learned Judge's judgment is given to the enumeration of the documents produced on either side and after this enumeration the learned Judge proceeds to say that "after carefully considering all this evidence he can only come to the conclusion that the view of the facts taken by Mr. Sloan is quite right." I object most strongly to this method of writing a judgment, in which the Judge quotes the judgment of some other Court and refers to the opinion of that other Court as his own. It was the business of the learned Judge to give his own reasons for his finding and to set out in his judgment his appreciation of the evidence which he was bound to consider. I have, as I have said, nothing before me but a mere catalogue of the documents and I am unable to ascertain from the judgment in what light these documents were regarded and what probative value they possessed in the learned Judge's eyes. The case will, therefore, go back to the learned Judge, who will come to a finding of fact after writing a proper judgment in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. The documentary evidence is the only evidence which is to be considered on remand. This case is to be put again after receipt of the finding of the lower Court. The finding should be returned within one month from the date of the receipt of this order of remand.

JUDGMENT.—This case has been up before me already and by my order dated the 12th of January 1916 it was returned for a finding as to the date on which separation took place between the members of the family to which the parties to this suit belong. The learned Judge had already with reference to the oral evidence in the case remarked that it was of no value and he was, therefore, asked to come to a finding on this point after due consideration of the documentary evidence in the case. His finding is to the effect that in the year 1901 in which the property now in dispute was acquired by one Ram Dhan under a decree for pre-emption, the members of the family had separated. Consequently it follows that if this finding be accepted the plaintiffs can have no share in the property now in dispute. The finding of the learned Judge is a finding of fact and is binding here in second appeal and the result, therefore, is that the present appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLANT

P. GANGATHARA AIYAR—DEFENDANT—
RESPONDENT.

Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882), ss. 41, 43 to 49—City Civil Court Act (Mad. Act VII of 1891), s. 12—'Suit for trying title,' meaning of—Order in ejectment by Presidency Small Cause Court—Subsequent suit in City Civil Court for declaration of permanent occupancy right Jurisdiction—Practice.

The order of a competent Court passed with jurisdiction cannot be interfered with except in the manner provided therefor by the Legislature, unless such order is vitiated by fraud. [p. 437, col. 1.]

In the case of an order passed under Chapter VII of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, the Legislature has provided the remedy by suit under sections 46 to 49 of the Act and except in the manner therein provided, no suit will lie in any Court to supersede such order. If possession has been delivered, section 46 (1) will apply and the resulting suit, which would necessarily be one for trying title must be filed in the High Court under section 49. The expression "suit for trying title" in section 49, clause (1), of the Act includes a suit in which any title, which the party aggrieved by the ejectment order alleges, whether as a full owner or as a holder of a limited right, has to be tried and decided. In both classes of suits, the High Court is the forum prescribed and the City Civil Court is substituted for the High Court by section 12 of the Madras City Civil Courts Act only under section 31 (a) of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act dealing with execution against immovables, but not under any other section. [p. 437, cols. 1 & 2.]

Defendant applied for and obtained under section 41 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act an order to eject plaintiff from a piece of land upon which he had constructed a building. Plaintiff set up a right of permanent occupancy. The ejectment order was not carried into effect. Meanwhile the plaintiff filed a suit in the City Civil Court, Madras, to declare his right of permanent occupancy and got the proceedings stayed. The City Civil Judge held that he had no jurisdiction to set aside an order passed by the Presidency Court of Small Causes and returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court.

Practice cannot confer jurisdiction, however long-continued it may be. [p. 438, col. 1.]

ABDUL RAHIM SAHIB v. GANGATHARA AIYAR.

JUDGMENT.

KRISHNAN, J.—This is an appeal against an order of the City Civil Court, Madras, returning for presentation to the proper Court the plaint in Original Suit No. 262 of 1915, filed in that Court by the plaintiff-appellant. The defendant had applied under section 41 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act for an order of ejectment against the plaintiff and had obtained an order under section 43 of that Act. The plaintiff in his plaint alleges that he has a permanent right of occupancy on the land and is not liable to be ejected under the order of the Small Cause Court, and prays for a declaration of that right and for an injunction restraining defendant from executing the order of ejectment or in the alternative for a decree directing defendant to eject plaintiff only on payment of Rs. 1,500, the value of the superstructures erected by him on the land. At the time he filed his suit the ejectment order had not been executed and as he obtained a temporary injunction from the City Civil Court, the execution of that order was stopped. As the learned City Civil Judge has observed, the suit was evidently intended to have the order of the Small Cause Court superseded by the decree prayed for.

When a Court is given jurisdiction by Legislature to do certain acts or pass decrees or orders in certain matters, its action cannot be set aside by any other Court unless the Legislature itself authorises it. Orders and decrees of Courts are usually liable to be set aside by superior Courts in appeal or in revision, where powers to do so are conferred on those Courts by the Legislature. In some cases certain orders are declared to be subject to a right of suit. Cf. section 73 and Order XXI, rule 103, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. The order of a competent Court passed with jurisdiction cannot be interfered with except in the manner provided therefor by Legislature, unless, of course, such order is vitiated by fraud.

In the case of an order passed under Chapter VII of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act the Legislature has provided the remedy by suit under sections 46 to 49 of the Act; and except in the manner therein provided, no suit will lie in any Court to supersede such an order. Section 46 declares in clause 1 that a person obtaining possession of any property under the chapter, when he was not entitled to such possession at the time he applied for it, shall not be protected from a suit by any person aggrieved thereby and in clause 2 that the application for an order for possession by such a person even though he had not obtained possession is itself an act of trespass. Section 47 shows that a suit for compensation for such trespass is to be filed in the High Court; it also provides how proceedings in the Small Cause Court may be stayed pending such suit, whether the ejectment order had been passed or not, provided it had not been executed and possession given. If possession had been delivered, section 46, clause (1), will apply and the resulting suit which would necessarily be one "for trying the title" must be filed in the High Court under section 49. The expression "suit for trying the title to the property" includes, as I understand it, a suit in which any title which the party aggrieved by the ejectment order alleges, whether as a full owner or as a holder of a limited right, has to be tried and decided.

In both the classes of suits provided for under sections 47 and 49, the High Court is the forum prescribed and no other Court including the City Civil Court has, therefore, jurisdiction to entertain or try such suits. The City Civil Court is substituted for the High Court by section 12 of the City Civil Court Act only under section 31 (a) of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act dealing with execution against immoveables, but not under any other section.

From the allegations in the plaint it is clear that plaintiff's case was one falling under clause (2) of section 46 and his remedy was a suit in the High Court. The application for a temporary injunction made to the City Civil Court and the suit in that Court were both not maintainable.

It was suggested that the present plaint might be treated as one for a bare declaration of permanent occupancy right having no reference to the ejectment order and thus cognisable by the City Civil Court. It is sufficient to say that that is not the nature of the plaint; nor will a suit for such a declaration lie under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act in the circumstances, as the plaintiff was a party to the ejectment order.

It is urged that suits of the kind filed by the plaintiff have, as a matter of long practice, been in the City Civil Court and tried and decided by it. It is to be regretted that this question of jurisdiction was not raised before or considered by the City Civil Judge; but practice cannot confer jurisdiction, however long-continued it may be. I, therefore, dismiss the appeal against order with costs.

Where a subsequent mortgage-deed does not create any charge on the property previously mortgaged but merely postpones the redemption of the previous mortgage till the redemption of the subsequent mortgage, such covenant as to postponement of redemption does not amount to a contract of consolidation so as to render one transaction irredeemable without the redemption of the other, and may amount to an unreasonable clog on the equity of redemption.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for redemption of a mortgage. The subsequent deeds set up in defence do not create any charge on the zemin-dari property previously mortgaged. They merely postpone the redemption of the previous mortgage till 1333 Fasli. The evidence advances made on the security of a house and as pointed out in Gaya Din Singh v. Har Karan Singh (1) and Ganga Ram v. Kirtarth Rai (2), a covenant postponing redemption till another deed is redeemed does not amount to a contract of consolidation, so as to render one transaction irredeemable without the redemption of the other. The postponement of the period of redemption in this case was, moreover, according to the findings of the Courts below, secured by undue influence. Such postponement operates, having regard to the severe terms of the subsequent advances, the amount due on which has run up to a very high figure, as an unreasonable clog on the equity of redemption without any corresponding advantage to the debtor and cannot be enforced. Rajmal Motiram v. Shivaji Anandray (3) and Durga Singh v. Muhammad Raza Husain Khan (4). The onus was rightly thrown on the defendant-appellant. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Bhagalpur, dated the 12th May 1913, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Bhagalpur, dated the 8th June 1913.

Mr. Susil Madhab Mullick for Mr. Sailendra Nath Palit, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The first party plaintiffs are the landlords; the second party plaintiffs are lessees from the first party. The first party defendants are the heirs of one Masudan who was a non-occupancy raiyat in respect of the lands in suit.

The second party defendants are transferees of a portion of the non-occupancy holding from the first party.

The plaintiffs sued for ejectment, on the ground that Masudan having died and the holding not being heritable they were entitled to re-enter. Both the Courts below decreed the suit in full with mesne profits against all the defendants. The present second appeal is preferred by the first party defendants only.

The Courts below have proceeded on the view of the law that was supposed to be the correct view before the case of the Midnapore Zemindari Company v. Hrishikesh Ghosh (1), but the Full Bench in that case decided that in the absence of custom a non-occupancy raiyat's interest was heritable. The plaintiffs are bound by this decision which, although passed subsequent to the decision of the learned District Judge against which the present second appeal has been preferred, states the law as it has always been since the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The plaintiffs, therefore, have no cause of action and the whole suit must be dismissed with costs in both the lower Courts.

The second appeal before me is allowed without costs, as there is no appearance for the respondents.

A finding of fact, although based merely upon circumstantial evidence, cannot be questioned in second appeal, unless it is vitiated by some illegality or irregularity. [p. 439, col. 2; p. 440, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bahraich, dated the 21st March 1914, modifying the order of the Munsif, Kaisarganj, dated the 30th June 1913.

Babu Ishwar Prasad, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question for decision in this appeal is, whether or not the finding of the Court below to the effect that a certain patti in which were situated two Nos. 698 and 699 old (present No. 1023) had been divided between the parties by a private partition, is supported by evidence. The case for the plaintiffs was that there had been a private partition of this patti and that they were entitled to exclusive possession of these two plots. The defence, on the other hand, was that the patti had never been divided and that the property was held by the defendants and the plaintiffs in coparcenary. The Court of first instance found against the plaintiffs on the question of partition. It was of opinion that no private partition had been proved. The result was that the plaintiffs' suit with regard to these two numbers was dismissed. The plaintiffs appealed and the appeal was disposed of by the Subordinate Judge of Bahraich. He differed from the conclusion reached by the Munsif and held that there was evidence to show that a private partition had taken place. Having come to this conclusion he reversed the decree of the Court of first instance and gave the plaintiffs a decree for these two numbers.

The finding of fact arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge is bind.

ing upon me, unless the appellants' learned Counsel can show that it is vitiated by reason of some irregularity or illegality. The case which has been put forward before me is that there was no legal evidence on the record to support the Subordinate Judge's finding. The Subordinate Judge went into the evidence at a considerable length and analysed all the evidence, oral, documentary and circumstantial, which was put before him. He admits in his judgment that there is no oral evidence to support the case of partition except the statements of the plaintiffs' witness No. 6 and one of the plaintiffs himself. He did not think that the plaintiffs' evidence was of any particular value. In this connection all he could say was that he had heard about the partition having taken place and as regards the plaintiffs' witness No. 6 his statement was contradictory of the statement made by the plaintiffs. Then as regards the documentary evidence the learned Subordinate Judge has put it on the record that the revenue papers do not appear to have recognised the private partition alleged by the plaintiffs, and in this connection he refers to the entries in the revenue papers for certain years. But on the strength of certain circumstantial evidence which was before him he came to the conclusion that, notwithstanding that the oral evidence of the plaintiffs on the question of partition was vague and that the documents produced by the plaintiffs did not establish the partition at all, there must have been some sort of private partition between the co-sharers. He referred in the first place to the fact that in the year 1911 three of these defendants brought a case in the Revenue Court for the resumption of a muafi plot No. 570. A copy of the plaint filed in that case is on the record and it shows that two of these defendants Kuar Bahadur and Jawala Prasad alleged in that application that the plot No. 570 had been granted many years ago by way of muafi to the defendants. They stated that they desired to resume this plot and made a prayer accordingly. It was also brought to the notice of the Subordinate Judge that some of these defendants had been dealing with plots situated in this patti by selling them, and in these circumstances he naturally asked himself the question how such transactions were possible if no partition had taken place as was the story of the defendants. He thought that this circumstantial evidence was very strong to show that partition had taken place, although it had not been recognised by the Revenue Authority and although there were no entries in respect of it to be found in the village papers. I do not think it is possible to contend, after what I have stated, that there is legal evidence on the record to support the finding of the Court below that the patti which is in dispute had been privately partitioned. It is argued that there is nothing to show that these particular plots were allotted to the plaintiffs, assuming that any private partition had taken place. However, the way I look at the matter is this. The Court had before it two stories, one of the plaintiffs in which they had said that a private partition had taken place in the course of which these plots were assigned to them, and the other of the defendants who denied that any partition had been effected and who affirmed that the plots were still held in co-parcenary. The circumstantial evidence led the Subordinate Judge to the conclusion that the defendants' story was untrue and that the plaintiffs' story must be true, and this being so it seems to me that the claim of the plaintiffs to these plots in dispute was rightly decreed. I can see no reason for interference with the judgment of the Court below. This appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JAGERNATH MISSEK—RESPONDENT.
Bengal Estates Partition Act (VIII B. C. of 1876)—

RAMLOCHAN KOER v. JAGERNATH MISSEK.

Partition of holding—Consent of tenant—Abandonment, what constitutes.

There is nothing in the Estates Partition Act of 1876 to prevent the partition of a tenancy into separate tenancies without the consent of the tenants and on general principle there is no reason why such a partition should not be made.

There is in this respect no difference between a partition under the Estates Partition Act and a partition made by a Civil Court.

Protab Chandra Das v. Komala Kanta Shaha, 10 C. W. N. 818, relied on.

Where a holding has been split up, a sale by the tenant of an entire plot that has been separated constitutes abandonment which entitles the landlord to re-enter.

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Darbhanga, dated the 18th June 1914, confirming that of the Munsif, 1st Court, Madhubani, dated the 17th January 1914.

Mr. Lachmi Narayan Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. Tribhuban Nath Sakay, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The second party defendants were the joint holders of a holding measuring 2 bighas odd situated within the estate of the plaintiff and his co-sharers, the defendants 3rd party.

By a Civil Court partition the estate was broken up. There was a further partition by private arrangement with the result that the holding was divided into two portions one of which, measuring 17 cottas and 8 dhurs, fell into the patti of the plaintiff. The second party defendants subsequently sold this plot of 17 cottas and 8 dhurs to the defendant first party. The plaintiff thereupon sued the defendant first party (the purchaser) for ejectment on the ground that there had been a complete abandonment of the entire holding by the registered tenant. There was a plea that the registered tenant had re-purchased the land and re-entered into possession, but that case has been disbelieved, and the only point taken before me now in this second appeal preferred by the defendant second party is, that as there has been an abandonment of only a portion of the holding, the landlord cannot re-enter.

It is contended that the partition among the landlords cannot affect the registered tenants without their consent and, that although in respect of a partition under the Estates Partition Act a tenancy may be split up into various separate tenancies without the consent of the tenant, yet such a result does not follow upon a Civil Court partition without the consent of the tenant. In Protab Chandra Das v. Kamala Kanta Shaha(1) it was held that there was nothing in the Estates Partition Act of 1876 to prevent the partition of a tenancy into separate tenancies and on general principle the Court did not see any reason why such a partition could not be made. I see no difference in the matter of the partition of a tenancy between a partition under the Estates Partition Act and a partition made by a Civil Court.

So far as the landlord and tenant are concerned their position in the matter is the same in both partitions. If, therefore, the Civil Court assigned to the plaintiff a holding of 17 cottas and 8 dhurs at a certain rental as being his exclusive property the defendant second party would, in my opinion, be bound by that apportionment. But in this case there is a further reason why the partition should be upheld. It has been found by the learned Munsif, and affirmed by the learned District Judge by implication, that the second party defendants have accepted the splitting up of the whole tenancy by payment of rent according to the Civil Court's apportionment. That being so the consent of the tenant is established.

It is not open to the tenant in second appeal to say that he did not consent to the partition of the holding. Therefore, the learned District Judge is right in finding that an entire holding was sold by the second party defendants and that such sale constitutes abandonment.

The decree for ejectment, therefore, of the transferee first party defendant is correct. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bahraich, dated the 7th February 1913.

Syed Nabi Ullah and Babu Basudeo Lal, for the Appellant.

Syed Wazir Hasan and Syed Shahenshah Husain Rizwi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These are cross-appeals arising out of a suit brought for the recovery of money, due on a mortgage effected by Saiyid Ali in favour of the plaintiff on the 1st February 1901. The defendants are the heirs or the representatives-in-interest of the deceased mortgagor. The mortgage-deed was executed in lieu of Rs. 25,000 to pay up the purchase-money due by the mortgagor to the plaintiff on account of the sale by the latter of the village Bhakrauli and of his rights under a decree dated the 15th of June 1895; and the material covenants in the mortgage-deed were that the mortgagor shall pay the said sum by the instalments specified in the deed of mortgage, that if any instalment was not paid on the date fixed, the mortgagee shall have power to realize the same, and that if three of the instalments, specified therein, remained unpaid on the dates fixed therefor, the mortgagee shall have power without any regard to the instalments fixed to realize the entire sum due to him with interest thereon at the rate of 1 per cent. per mensem and the costs of the suit from the mortgagor. The village Bhakrauli purchased by the mortgagor and another village Kharai, belonging to him from before, were hypothecated in the said deed as security for the payment of the aforesaid instalments. The allegation of the plaintiff was that the mortgagor paid Rs. 18,500 between the 14th May 1901 and 17th July 1910, but none of the instalments was paid on the due date and that, therefore, the plaintiff became entitled to recover the entire amount due to him with interest thereon at 1 per cent. per mensem on the 1st May 1901. The date last mentioned is obviously incorrect, because if none of the instalments was paid on the due date, the cause of action, according to the plaintiff's account, must have accrued much earlier, but if as is now admitted the payment of the first five instalments was accepted, though made after the due dates, by the plaintiff, the cause of action could not have accrued earlier than the 1st May 1907. The defence was that the plaintiff had accepted the payment of the first ten instalments and waived the defaults due to the delays in paying the same, that he accepted Rs. 1,500 in part payment of the 11th instalment, and that the plaintiff had no cause of action to sue for the entire money.

There is no dispute between the parties either as to the dates or as to the amounts of the payments. The question is only one as to waiver and the right interpretation of the covenant entitling the plaintiff to call in the entire money due on the mortgage. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff accepted the first seven instalments and condoned the delays in the payment of the same, and that there was no such waiver in respect of the subsequent instalments. He, therefore, gave a decree to the plaintiff for the recovery of the balance due on the mortgage.

The learned Counsel, who appears for the plaintiff, has argued that the defaults in the payment of the sixth and seventh instalments were not waived by the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff was consequently entitled to claim interest on the mortgage-money from the 1st May 1906 and at all events from the 1st May 1907. On behalf of the contesting defendants it is urged that no right to interest has accrued to the plaintiff. There were other pleas taken by the parties in their memoranda of appeal, but they were expressly abandoned at the hearing.

We agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the payments of the sixth and seventh instalments were accepted by the plaintiff, and that the delays in the payment thereof were condoned by him. It is conceded on his behalf that the delays in the payment of the first five instalments were waived by him when he granted a registered receipt to Saiyid Ali in satisfaction thereof on the 7th November 1904 (Exhibit A1). The sixth instalment was for Rs. 2,000 and was payable in April 1905. The plaintiff admittedly received that sum from defendant No. 3 on the 18th July 1905 and gave a receipt signed by him in evidence thereof at Fyzabad. The seventh instalment was payable in April 1906, and it is not disputed that defendant No. 3 paid that sum to Mangli Prasad, the general agent of the plaintiff, on the 7th June 1906. On that date Mangli Prasad took back the receipt for Rs. 2,000 granted by the plaintiff to defendant No. 3 on the 18th July 1905, and executed a consolidated registered receipt for Rs. 4,000, acknowledging the receipt of the sixth and seventh instalments on the dates specified therein, and delivered the same to defendant No. 3 (Exhibit A2). The plaintiff alleges that his agent Mangli Prasad had authority to give a receipt for the money received but he had no authority to accept the money in payment of a particular instalment or to waive the default but he admits having received the sum of Rs. 2,000 paid by defendant No. 3 from Mangli Prasad and has not produced the receipt for Rs. 2,000 granted by him on the 18th July 1905, which, according to the registration endorsement on the consolidated receipt (Exhibit A2), was returned to Mangli Prasad. It was summoned from him. The non-production of the receipt raises a presumption against the plaintiff, and there are sufficient circumstances to indicate that the plaintiff knew that a consolidated receipt for Rs. 4,000 had been granted and that nothing more than the amount of the overdue instalment was then intended to be claimed. The plaintiff acknowledges that he was told by Mangli Prasad that defendant No. 3 had got the receipt for the money paid by him registered; and in a post card, sent by Mangli Prasad to defendant No. 3 on the 6th August 1906 (Exhibit A 29), there is a significant statement by Mangli Prasad to the effect that his master was not willing to allow the costs of the registration of the receipt to be deducted and had directed him to recover the same from him. The power-of-attorney executed by the plaintiff in favour of Mangli Prasad has not been produced, but from the admitted fact that Mangli Prasad had authority to receive the money, it might be presumed that he had authority to do every lawful thing which was necessary in connection with that act. On previous occasions, moneys had been realized from time to time on account of overdue instalments, and every such payment was accepted in full satisfaction of the instalment on account of which it was made. In Bank of Bengal v. Ramanathan Chetty (1), where an agent of a firm carrying on a general money-lending business, who had express authority "to borrow money from any Bank or Banks, firm or firms, person or persons, either with or without pledge of securities for moneys advanced to various persons," guaranteed a loan made to a constituent of the firm by a third party, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the authority to borrow implied an authority to pledge the credit of the firm for the purpose of obtaining or securing advances from others to its constituents. We are satisfied in this case, both from the circumstances and the previous course of dealings, that the agent did not exceed his authority in accepting the payment of the instalment on behalf of his master and that the plaintiff acquiesced in what his agent had done when he received the money and objected only to the defrayal of the cost of registration by him.

We also agree with the construction put by the learned Subordinate Judge on the covenant contained in the mortgage-deed entitling the plaintiff to recover the money due on the mortgage with interest thereon at 1 per cent. per mensem, if three instalments remained unpaid on the dates specified therefor. Both the time and the amount formed the essence of the contract, and if the payments of three instalments, consecutive or otherwise, were deficient in amount or were made beyond time, such payments would be ineffective to prevent the plaintiff from enforcing the covenant, unless there was evidence to show that the defaults were waived. There is no such evidence in this case in regard to the instalments which fell due after April 1907. The contesting defendants sent thereafter Rs. 4,000 on the 5th May 1908, Rs. 2,000 on the 14th June 1910 and Rs. 1,500 on the 17th July 1910, all in currency notes, by registered post, to the plaintiff, but the plaintiff, while receiving the money, did not accept those payments towards any particular instalment.

The appeal and the cross-appeal, therefore, fail and are dismissed with costs.

while litigation pending as to rightful heirs of deceased mortgagee, effect of—Interest, cessation of, on deposit after suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O.
XXII, r. 3—Deposit and tender, distinction between.*

A deposit made in Court under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act, to be effective, must remain in Court until the mortgagee or his successor-in-interest has been enabled or is in a position to draw it. [p. 445, col. 2; p. 446, col. 2; p. 447, col. 1.]

Where the mortgagee is dead, and the mortgagor, not being sure of the person entitled to the mortgage money, deposits it in Court but withdraws it before the rightful heirs are ascertained, he cannot be said to have done all that he could do to enable them to receive the money, and is, therefore, not entitled to cessation of interest. [p. 445, col. 2; p. 446, col. 2; p. 447, cols. 1 & 2.]

Krishnaswami Chettyar v. Thippa Ramaswami Chettyar, 8 Ind. Cas. 763; 35 M. 44; 9 M. L. T. 131; (1911) 1 M. W. N. 89, referred to.

Where the amount is paid after the institution of a suit by the mortgagee, the amount deposited should be deducted from the principal and interest allowed only for the balance. [p. 445, col. 2; p. 446, cols. 1 & 2; p. 447, col. 2.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—There is no analogy between tender and deposit. When a debtor tenders money, he must do it only to the person legally entitled thereto. He takes the risk of deciding for himself whether the offer he is making is to the proper person. In the case of a tender the person to whom it is made can have no claim for interest and no grievance if it is refused. A deposit, on the other hand, is ordinarily made when the debtor is in doubt as to who is the rightful claimant, and leaves it to the Court to hand the money over to the true owner. Consequently the money must be in deposit to be drawn out as soon as the legal rights of the parties are determined. The term 'deposit' implies that the money is in the hands of the Court until it is paid to the creditor. [p. 446, col. 1.]

Per Phillips, J. - Obiter—When notice of the deposit is sent to the mortgagee through Court, and he refuses to accept it, it amounts to a tender through Court and interest ceases to run just as in the case when a mortgagee refuses a tender out of Court.

THEVARAYA REDDY v. VENKATACHALA PANDITHAN.

There is no provision in the Transfer of Property Act, whereby interest is again to run if the deposit is withdrawn after the mortgagee has refused to receive it. The cessation of interest is the penalty imposed upon the mortgagee for refusal to accept the money when offered, and this penalty is not remitted because he changes his mind when it is too late. [p. 447, col. 1.]

The principle of the decision in Krishnaswami Chettyar v. Thippa Ramaswami Chettyar, 8 Ind. Cas. 763, 35 M. 44; 9 M. L. T. 131; (1911) 1 M. W. N. 89, disapproved.

JUDGMENT.

IN APPEAL NO. 329 OF 1914.

ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The only question in this appeal is whether the appellants, having deposited the money due from them on the mortgage under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act, can claim exemption from interest under section 84 although they withdrew the amount afterwards. The money was left in Court for a year or more but the title of the respondents as legal representatives of the mortgagee was then in dispute. The suit which settled their right was not decided until after the appellants had withdrawn the money. Section 84 says: "When the mortgagor or such other person as aforesaid has tendered or deposited in Court under section 83 the amount remaining due on the mortgage, interest on the principal money shall cease from the date of the tender, or as soon as the mortgagor or such other person as aforesaid has done all that has to be done by him to enable the mortgagee to take such amount out of Court, as the case may be". The Legislature has drawn a distinction between the case of a tender and a deposit as to the date from which interest shall cease to run. And this apparently for good reasons—a tender in order to be valid must be made to the person entitled to receive the money. But when only a deposit is made the mortgagor must do something more. He must do all that has to be done in order to enable the person entitled to the money to receive it. Where the mortgagee, as in this case, is dead and the mortgagor, not being sure as to who are the persons entitled to succession and thus unable to make a valid tender, deposits the money in Court, but withdraws it before the rightful heirs are ascertained, he cannot be said to have done all that he could do to enable them to receive the money. In such cases the mortgagor cannot claim the benefit of section 84, for the money having been withdrawn before the persons entitled to it had established their right, it must be taken that so far as they are concerned the deposit had never been made. The deposit in order to be effective under section 84 must remain in Court until the mortgagee or his successor-in-interest has been enabled or is in a position to draw it. This is the interpretation put upon section 84 in Krishnaswami Chettyar v. Thippa Ramaswami Chettyar (1), which has been followed by Ayling, J. I may mention that we are not concerned here with the question whether that case was rightly decided upon its facts, for it is possible that the mortgagor there, had in addition to the deposit, also made a valid tender.

It appears, however, that after the suit was instituted the mortgagor again deposited the amount in Court. In calculating the interest from that date the amount deposited should have been deducted from the principal, and interest allowed only on the balance. To that extent, the decree will be varied; otherwise the appeals will be dismissed but in the circumstances of the case without costs. The respondent will be entitled to interest at 6 per cent. on the amount decreed from the date of the decree of this Court. Time for payment will be six months.

IN APPEAL NO. 330 OF 1915.

This appeal is dismissed.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I entirely agree with the learned Officiating Chief Justice. The main argument of Mr. Rangaswami Aiyangar was that as no money is left outstanding in the case of a tender, the Legislature did not intend that in a deposit the money should be continuously in Court till drawn out. There is no analogy between the two. When a debtor tenders money, he must do it only to the person legally entitled thereto. He takes the risk of deciding for himself whether the offer he is making is to the proper person. In the case of the person to whom the tender is made, the latter can have no claim for interest and can have no grievance if it is refused, as he had the option and right of claiming payment at once and has not availed himself of them. On the other hand, a deposit is ordinarily made when the debtor is in doubt, as to who is the rightful claimant. He wants to absolve himself from future liability by leaving it to the Court to hand the money over to the true owner. Nobody may be in a position to apply for payment immediately as in the case of a tender. Consequently the money must be in deposit to be drawn out as soon as the legal rights of the parties are determined. I am also of opinion that the term 'deposit' implies that the money is in the hands of the Court until it is paid to the creditor. It may not infrequently happen that between the deposit originally made and the time when the true owner is ascertained the debtor has become insolvent or incapable of meeting his obligations. This would be a good reason for expecting that the money must be in Court. Further, if the debtor wants to escape liability for payment of interest, I do not see why he should not allow the money to be in Court. The fact that in a tender, there may be advantageous circumstances is no ground for departing from the obvious intent of the Legislature in the case of deposits.

Stress was laid on the clause "has done all that has to be done by him to enable the mortgagee to take such amount out of Court". If the money is not in Court's deposit, I do not think it can be said that the requirements of this clause are satisfied by an original deposit and its withdrawal. If the money is not in Court, as soon as the rights of the parties have been pronounced upon, an application will have to be made for depositing the money again in Court. A further application to draw it out will have to follow. It seems to me that the debtor will not be doing all he can if he has withdrawn the money.

I am of opinion that Krishnaswami Chettyar v. Thippa Ramaswami Chettyar (1) was rightly decided. Whether on the facts the judgment might have been different is not what we have to consider. I consider that the principles enunciated are sound.

It was sought to be argued that every deposit implies an antecedent tender and as in the present case, notice of deposit was given to all the possible claimants, the deposit must be regarded as a legal tender. It is clear that the right to the money was disputed and, therefore, none of the creditors was in a position to claim the money, and that is the essence of tender. I see no force in this contention.

I agree that under Order XXIV, rule 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure, interest was not allowable upon the sum paid into Court after the institution of the suit. I agree with the order as to costs.

PHILLIPS, J.—I agree with Ayling, J., that this appeal should be dismissed, but unlike him I am not prepared to agree with the ruling in Krishnaswami Chettyar v. Thippa Ramaswami Chettyar (1), for in that case a mortgagor deposited money in Court and sent notice to the mortgagee, who refused to accept the amount. This in effect amounted to a tender through Court and section 84 of the Transfer of Property Act lays down very clearly that when the tender has been made, interest ceases to run. It also ceases to run when the mortgage money has been deposited in Court and the mortgagor has done all that has to be done by him to enable the mortgagee to take such amount out of Court. When, therefore, the mortgagee has been in a position to draw the money from Court and has refused to do so, interest ceases to run just as in the case when the mortgagee refuses a tender out of Court. So far as I can see, there is no provision in the Act whereby interest is again to run if the deposit is withdrawn after the mortgagee has refused to receive it. The cessation of interest is the penalty imposed upon the mortgagee for refusal to accept the money when offered, and this penalty is not remitted because he changes his mind when it is too late. With all respect, therefore, I venture to differ from the reasoning of the judgment in Krishnaswami Chettyar v. Thippa Ramasawmi Chettyar (1).

In this case, however, the circumstances are different. One of the mortgagees died and there was a dispute as to who were his legal representatives. If, therefore, the mortgagors had made a tender to one of the two sets of claimants they ran the risk of tendering to the wrong person, in which case the tender would not be valid. To avoid this difficulty, or for some other reason, the mortgagors deposited the amount in Court, but it was not drawn because of the dispute as to the rights of the respective claimants. Until that dispute was settled the mortgagees could not draw the money out of Court, for the Court was not in a position to know who were the rightful mortgagees. It is, however, contended that this dispute did not affect the mortgagors as they had done all that they had to do to enable the mortgagees to draw the money. No doubt they had taken all the active steps necessary, but because they withdrew the deposit before the dispute was settled, the mortgagees were unable to draw the amount prior to the settlement of the dispute; the mortgagees could not draw the money because of the dispute, and after settlement they could not draw it because the money was not there. If the mortgagors had left the money in Court until the dispute was settled, they would have done all they had to do when the deposit was made and notice issued to the mortgagees; but as they failed to leave the deposit in Court sufficiently long to enable the mortgagees to draw the amount they failed to do all that they had to do, and consequently interest did not cease to run.

A further objection is taken that interest has been allowed on the amount deposited after this suit was filed. This is clearly wrong as under Order XXIV, rule 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure interest on the amount deposited ceases as soon as plaintiff receives notice of the deposit. I, therefore, agree in the order proposed.

Decree varied.

A claim for possession by way of denunciation of alienations made by a previous holder of land is based on a different cause of action from a claim for redemption. [p. 448, col. 1.]

Therefore, a suit for redemption of a mortgage by the representatives of the mortgagor is not barred, either by the rule of res judicata or by the maxim “Allegus contraris non-audiendus”, simply because the plaintiffs in a previous suit, as reversioners of the mortgagor, denounced alienations made by the latter. Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—(1) The past history of the case has been sufficiently stated in the judgment of the lower Courts. The Chief Court judgment in revision referred to in Mr. Waring's judgment was passed in Kala v. Musammat Lachhmi (1). That Divisional Judge having now dismissed the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout, the disappointed party has appealed and I have heard the arguments. The learned Divisional Judge decided the case on the basis of the principle of "allegus contrarius non audiendus." Mr. Nand Lal on behalf of the plaintiffs contests the applicability of this principle, and Mr. Sheo Narain, who appears for the respondents, is obliged to admit the strength of the adverse contention. It seems to me quite clear that the plaintiffs are not barred because they in the first instance sued as reversioners and denounced alienations made by the widow, Musammat Nandi, and now sue on the ground that as representatives of the mortgagor they are entitled to redeem. As Mr. Sheo Narain does not join issue on this point, it is not necessary to discuss it seriously.

(2) But Mr. Sheo Narain proceeds to deal with the other question decided by the lower Appellate Court, viz., whether the rule of res judicata bars the present suit. Mr. Waring decided that it did not, but Mr. Sheo Narain argues that it does. I have carefully considered the previous litigation in this case, and, in my opinion, it is quite clear that section 11, Civil Procedure Code, has no application whatever. A claim for possession by way of denunciation of alienations made by the previous holder of the land is necessarily based on a different cause of action from a claim for redemption. This seems to me obvious, and, therefore, it is hardly necessary to discuss at length Mr. Sheo Narain's argument based on Explanation IV of section 11. I may, however, remark that the three rulings upon which the learned gentleman relies in connection with this point, viz., Pala Mal v. Maya (2), Kanhya Lal v. Charati Lal (3) and Badar Din v. Bura Mal (4), do not really support his contention. In the first of these cases it was held that a plaintiff could not be allowed to sue for land as heir by custom and then, upon the dismissal of that suit, file another suit claiming as heir by Hindu Law. It is obvious that there the cause of action was the same in both the cases, viz., title by inheritance. In Kanhya Lal v. Charati Lal (3) again the claim was not made on the score of inheritance. The difference in the two suits was that whereas in the first K. L. claimed to be heir as the son of the adopted son of the previous holder of the property, in the second suit K. L. was put forward as being one of the heirs by collateral relationship. It was properly held there under the old Civil Procedure Code that Explanation 11, section 13, of that Code barred the second suit, inasmuch as the plaintiff in the first case could have stated, and should have stated, both the above alleged relationships. Lastly in Badar Din v. Bura Mal (4) it appears that the defendant in the first suit said he was a mortgagee and objected to the attachment of certain property, but subsequently withdrew his mortgage-deed and put forward a deed of sale; and in execution proceedings the objection founded on the deed of sale was found to be sound and the property was released from attachment. The decree-holder, however, brought a suit for declaration and was successful and proceeded to execute his decree. The previous defendant aforesaid having died, his son then objected to the attachment and put forward the aforesaid mortgage-deed, and it was held by the Chief Court that the defence could not be raised. The distinction between that case and the present one is clear.

(3) The lower Appellate Court has not decided any other point in the case, and I find in the grounds of appeal to that Court, e.g., grounds Nos. 2, 3 and so forth, that there are other questions requiring decision. According to the usual practice it is more convenient that those questions should be decided by the lower Appellate Court, which has disposed of this appeal in a summary manner upon a preliminary point. I, therefore, accept this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, remand the

Mortgage, suit on, against mortgagor and co-mortgagee—Mortgage-money paid to co-mortgagee who had authority to receive it—Decree, whether can be passed against co-mortgagee

Where in a suit by a co-mortgagee against the mortgagor and the other co-mortgagee, a pro forma defendant, it was found that the mortgagor had paid up the full amount due on the mortgage to the pro forma defendant, who was entitled to receive the money on behalf of both the co-mortgagees, and the Court passed a simple money-decree in favour of the plaintiff against the pro forma defendant:

Held, that the suit must be dismissed and that the decree could not stand.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hardoi, dated the 22nd February 1915, confirming the order of the Munsif, Shahabad, dated the 10th December 1914.

Pandit Makhan Lal Misra, for the Appellant.

Babu Hargobind Das, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—Ganesh Prasad and Chandi Dayal are brothers. Khargu executed on 4th January 1910 a deed of mortgage in favour of Ganesh Prasad and Chandi Dayal. On 23rd July 1914 Ganesh Prasad alone sued Khargu and asked for a decree not against Khargu personally but against the mortgaged property on the foot of this mortgage, to be passed in favour of himself and Chandi Dayal whom he joined as a defendant. He joined Chandi Dayal as a defendant, because he asserted that Chandi Dayal refused to join as plaintiff. The case thus stood, and the only relief asked for was a relief against the mortgaged property in favour of Ganesh Prasad and Chandi Dayal. Khargu pleaded that he had paid the amount due on the mortgage to Chandi Dayal. Chandi Dayal admitted that he had received the amount due on the mortgage. The learned Munsif found that Chandi Dayal had received the amount from Khargu and that he was entitled to give a satisfactory acquittance of the amount due as he was general agent of Ganesh Prasad. On this finding the suit clearly ought to have been dismissed. The suit was on the foot of a mortgage. It was found that the mortgagor had paid up the full amount due on the mortgage to one of the mortgagees, who on the Munsif's finding was entitled to receive the money on behalf of both. The Munsif, however, arrived at the extraordinary decision that, although the amount had been paid up under the mortgage, it was his duty to pass a simple money-decree in favour of the plaintiff-mortgagee against the co-defendant-mortgagee. This he had never been asked to do in the plaint. No Court-fee had been paid to cover such relief and such a relief could not have been possibly added on the averments in the plaint, as Chandi Dayal was a defendant pro forma and the plaintiff had actually asked that a decree should be passed in favour of Chandi Dayal. The learned Munsif, however, proceeded to pass a decree against him. The learned District Judge has upheld the decision of the learned Munsif for reasons which I find difficult to follow. It is sufficient to say that the action of the Munsif is absolutely insupportable and that the decree against Chandi Dayal must be set aside.

I, therefore, allow the appeal and direct that the decree against Chandi Dayal be set aside. The suit against the mortgaged property has already been dismissed and as the plaintiff did not appeal against this dismissal to the District Judge its dismissal is final. The respondent Ganesh Prasad will pay his own costs and those of Chandi Dayal in all three Courts.

Appeal allowed.

In the absence of an express grant of the sub-soil, permanent tenure-holders, even if their estate be hereditary, do not enjoy the mineral rights and the same are not vested in them. [p. 454, col. 1.]

Where, prior to the date of a grant of land, both the ownership and the right of property in the surface as well as the sub-soil were vested in the grantor as one entire tenement, the presumption is that, at the time of the grant, there was a severance of the surface rights from the property in the sub-soil. The surface rights with their incidents became vested in the grantee and the mines and minerals in the grantor as owner of the sub-soil as if there had been a reservation of them in his favour. The grantor's rights are the same as those of a fee simple freehold owner of land in England who makes a grant with an express reservation of the mines to himself together with the incidents that follow therefrom. [p. 454, col. 1.]

By reason of the said presumption and of the severance of the tenement and the reservation that must be deemed to arise in favour of the grantor, the latter has the right by implication to enter on the land for all reasonable and necessary purposes to enable him to work the mines and exercise his mineral rights. [p. 454, cols. 1 & 2.]

The principles of the law governing free holds and not copyholds should be applied to the case. It is only under the copyhold law where there is no reservation or custom proved that a deadlock occurs and neither landowner nor tenant can work the mines. Under the law applicable to free hold land, there can be no deadlock, for if the mines be excepted, the grantor has an implied right to work them as incidental to such exception; if there be no exception, then that right is with the grantee as the owner of the surface and sub-soil. [p. 454, col. 2; p. 455, col. 1.]

If, in working the mines and extracting the minerals, the grantor or his assignees cause damage to the owners of the surface, there is ample power in the Court to injunct them and prevent them from so doing. [p. 456, col. 2.]

The presumption of a grant in favour of a person in the nature of a lost grant, which means presuming a lawful origin to support long and continuous user and enjoyment of the property, can be made only on the basis of the actual user exercised and enjoyed by such person. [p. 452, col. 1.]

Where the original sanad or grant is lost or not produced, and the evidence establishes only user by the grantee as permanent tenure-holder of the surface rights of a mouza by cultivation of land, building of houses or excavation of tanks, no presumption can be made in his favour of a lost grant to exercise mineral rights in the mouza. [p. 452, col. 2.]

The term 'moghuli' appearing in a rent receipt is a word of doubtful meaning and at best imports no more than that the rent assessed represented a proportion of the Government revenue. [p. 452, col. 2.]

First appeal from a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Manbhum, dated the 4th June 1913.

Sir S. P. Sinha (with him Messrs. N. N. Sarcar, P. R. Das, B. Bosu, Manmatha Nath Mukerji, Kunj Behari Sen, Durga Charan Banerji, Uma Chandra Lala and Panna Lal Chatterji), for the Appellants.

Mr. Pugh (with him Messrs. A. Sen, Lalit Mohan Ghose, Sisir Kumar Mitra and Lalit Krishna Mitta), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an action in which the Nawagarh Coal Company, Limited, as plaintiffs, claim a declaration of their title in the underground mines and mineral rights in Mouza Kumarjuri, which rights, they allege, became vested in them under a lease dated the 2nd of October 1899. This lease was granted to plaintiffs by the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum as Manager on behalf of the Raja of Katras, and it purports to demise to the plaintiffs all the mines and the mineral rights in the sub-soil of 22 mouzas which are set forth in the lease itself, subject to the restrictions and conditions therein contained. The second part of the plaintiffs' claim is conversant with a claim for a declaration that they should be entitled to enter upon the mouza of Kumarjuri and prospect for and work all such mines and minerals as may be found there; and that the defendants may be restrained by injunction from hindering or preventing them from exercising the legal rights which they claim to possess relative thereto. The Raja of Katras is the zemindar or proprietor of Parganna Katras and that fact is not disputed. At the time when this lease was granted in 1899, his property was being administered under the Encumbered Estates Act and the lease was granted by the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum under the Act as the Manager on behalf of the Raja. It was the duty of the Deputy Commissioner to manage the estate until such time as the Raja himself was released from his disqualification and became entitled to enjoy the rents and profits of his property; and it appears that immediately after the estate had been discharged from the operation of the Encumbered Estates Act, the Raja himself approved of and confirmed the lease of the 2nd of October 1899 granted by the Manager in favour of the plaintiffs.

We have stated shortly what the plaintiffs' case is, and we shall now set forth similarly the various defences put forward. The defendants' first claim is that they were granted by one of the Raja's predecessors-in-title, by a document dated the 21st of March 1830, a moghuli brakhmottar grant of the Mouza Kumarjuri; and that by that grant they became permanent tenure-holders; and that all rights in the surface and in the sub-soil of this village were vested in them under and by virtue of that grant; and that they had for all purposes in this mouza a permanent and hereditary interest, subject to the payment of a small moghuli rent of Rs. 17 per annum; that by that grant they were entitled to exercise all the mineral rights in the sub soil and that they were in fact the owners of the mines. They also claim to be owners of Mouza Chaitudih, but as to this mouza we can find no document of title. They claim that they have been in possession of Chaitudih in the same way and under the same tenure as Kumarjuri. This will be apparent in the first place from the statement in Exhibit R, the patta of 1891 made by the Trigunait in favour of Doctor Saise, at line 5, page 691 of the paper-book, and in the second place, from the deposition of Behari Trigunait at line 12, page 763. However, the significant thing is, that with regard to Chaitudih they do not claim the mineral rights; and for fifteen or sixteen years the plaintiffs in this suit have been, as admitted by Behari at line 10, page 763, of his evidence, in possession of that village by working coal there without let or hindrance from the defendants.

The sanad of 1830 upon which the defendants base their claim is not forthcoming. It appears from the judgment of the year 1890 by the Road Cess Deputy Collector, Exhibit 6, at page 40, that the document was produced before him and that he disbelieved its genuineness. His judgment was upheld by two Appellate Courts. The Trigunait witnesses affirm that this sanad was made over to the agents of the East India Coal Co. in 1899. According to one witness, it was made over to Messrs. Smith and Turnbull; according to the other, it was made over to Kapileswar and Makhan. None of these four persons have been called to corroborate that evidence, and if it were true, the Assistant Manager of the East India Coal Co., who was a witness for the defendants, would, undoubtedly, have been in a position to produce the document. What he did produce was the copy, Exhibit L, and it is clear from his deposition at page 749 that it was this copy, and not the original sanad, which was made over to his Company by the defendants. This copy was made in the year 1891.

The conclusion from these facts is, that the original document was suppressed by the defendants. In any case there being no evidence of its loss, the Subordinate Judge rightly refused to admit the copy as evidence, or to allow secondary evidence of its contents to be given.

Now as to the nature of the interest of the defendants in Kumarjuri, it was contended by the appellants that the defendants were merely tenants of the cultivated land.

There is, however, no suggestion throughout the evidence, oral and documentary, to the effect that the Raja was ever in possession of any portion of the village during the last 10 years, with the exception of an obviously unreliable statement by the witness Darpan Lal at page 790. There can be no doubt whatever that throughout this period the defendants and their predecessors have held the entire village as a tenure under the Raja. The phaisala of 1835, Exhibit T 1, at page 706, the Raja's goshwara paper of 1843, Exhibit 41 at page 16, and the Raja's road cess returns of 1895 and 1910 are conclusive upon this point. The documents indicate that since the year 1835 the Trigunaitis have consistently claimed the village as their brahmottar, whereas the Raja has variously described the tenure as ijara and jama and the village as mal or rent-paying, in contradistinction to brahmottar.

It appears clear that the rent has remained the same throughout the period of the defendants' occupation.

There is no plea in the defendants' written statement of a lost grant; and we are asked now, by reason of their failure to establish legal proof of their title, to presume a grant in their favour on the basis of a lost grant. They have never asked that their written statement might be amended with reference to any such claim; and the fact that the learned Subordinate Judge found a lost grant in favour of the defendants was the work of his own fertile imagination rather than the wish and desire of the defendants. However, if we are asked now, as we have been asked and pressed strongly by Mr. Pugh, to presume a grant in favour of the defendants in the nature of a lost grant, which means presuming a lawful origin to support long and continuous user and enjoyment of property, we are of opinion that we should presume a grant on the basis of the user exercised and enjoyed by the defendants. The alleged user of the defendants of certain mineral rights is hazy, uncertain and unsatisfactory. However, fortunately documents do not lie; and as we have been pressed to presume a grant in defendants' favour we think we should presume the following grant: namely, a grant to the defendants, as permanent tenure-holders, of the surface rights only of Mouza Kumarjuri. Whether they are brahmottardars or not is by no means certain. The papers indicate that almost continuously from 1835 this claim has been strenuously contested and, except for one entry in the books of the Raja, there seems very little to show that they were brahmottardars. The jamabandi of 1890 has an entry in it in which mention is made of a brahmottar and that is admitted, and that seems to be the high water-mark of the strength of the evidence upon which the defendants can rely in support of their claim. We shall not determine whether they are brahmottardars or not. Mr. Pugh attaches great significance to the use of the word moghuli in some of the rent receipts. Moghuli is a word of doubtful meaning and at the best imports no more than that the rent assessed upon the defendants represented a proportion of the Government revenue.

The user which the defendants have enjoyed is very accurately set forth in their own statement at pages 663 and 664 of the paper-book. This document is dated the 12th June 1890 and is "the humble petition of Behari Lal Trigunait", one of the defendants in this action. It was filed as an answer to the claim of the zamindar at the time to the underground rights in both Kumarjuri and Chaitudih; and in paragraph 2 the defendants carefully define what their user has been, and they say that there are no coal mines in the said two mouzas. "But it will be satisfactorily proved that the mouzas have all along been in our possession by the use and occasional sale of coal that is seen on the surface." There is, however, no oral evidence of any sale. The defendant Behari Trigunait, while asserting that he takes coal for fuel, admits at page 763 of his evidence that the mouth of the pit has been closed. The evidence suggests at the most that the defendants have taken small quantities of coal from the outcrop for domestic purposes and for burning lime alone; and for no other purpose. That does not, to our minds, appear to convey the impression that they ever exercised the mineral rights in the mouza. On the other hand it is clear that the coal they used was that seen on the surface of the incline near the river. We are satisfied that the defendants' user of the mouza was merely confined to the enjoyment of the surface rights whether by cultivation of land or building of houses or excavation of tanks. One other matter as to the user of the defendants is of importance. On the 27th July 1890 a question arose as to who was liable to pay cess on the value of the minerals of this Mouza Kumarjuri. The Raja contended that he was the owner and liable for the cess; the defendants contended that they were the owners and liable for the cess; and they relied, then as now, upon this grant of the 21st March 1830. Mr. Pugh wants us to refer to this judgment only to see what had been decided, and not for the purpose of examining the grounds and reasons for the decision. We decline to yield to that contention and we consider we are entitled to look at the conclusions and reasons upon which that judgment was based. It was held by the Deputy Collector, twice affirmed on appeal, that the mineral rights of this Mouza Kumarjuri were not vested in the defendants but that they were vested in the Raja, and that the Raja alone was liable for cess:

Defendants' second contention is that even if they have not got the mineral rights vested in them but merely the surface rights, and even if the mines and the minerals are vested in the Raja, he (the Raja) cannot work them—nor can his assignees work them—without the defendants' consent because they, being the tenure-holders of the surface, have the right to exclude any person who enters upon their land without their consent. We shall deal with this aspect of the defendants' case at a later stage.

The third defence put forth by the defendants is that arising under the Statute of Limitation, but this has not been expressly pleaded.

Now prior to and at the time of the grant Mouza Kumarjuri was vested in the Raja and his predecessors as zamindars. If a grant is to be presumed in favour of the defendants it must be consistent with their user. The mineral rights were never in contemplation of the parties in 1830, nor do we believe the defendants ever exercised any mineral rights whatsoever. Thus we have a grant by the zamindar of the surface rights of a village containing 380 bighas at the abnormally low rent of Rs. 17 per annum and we must presume, in the absence of the original document, having regard to the evidence before us, that only the surface rights were conveyed to the defendants as presumed grantees. We think that it has been conclusively held by the Privy Council that in such a case the mines and minerals and the property in the sub-soil remain, and must be presumed to remain, the property and in the possession of the zamindar. At any rate, prior to the date of the grant both the right of property and ownership in the surface and the right of property and ownership in the sub-soil were vested in the zamindar. At the time of the grant there must be presumed to have been a severance of the surface rights from the property in the sub-soil. The surface rights with their incidents became vested in the defendants as tenure-holders; and the mines and minerals in the Raja as the owner of the sub-soil. If there was any doubt as to the interpretation to be put upon the decision of the case of Hari Narayan Singh Deo v. Sriram Chakravarti (1) as decided by the Privy Council, it has been entirely removed by the decision of the Privy Council in the later case of Durga Prashad Singh v. Brojo Nath Bose (2), in which it was laid down finally and conclusively, in a case almost identical in its facts with the present one, that it must be presumed that the mines and mineral rights remain the property of the Raja as zamindar thereof and that the same are thus vested in him as such. In this connection it is of vital importance to notice that in the case of Sriram Chakravarti v. Hari Narain Singh Deo (3) the Subordinate Judge who tried the case made a declaration in favour of the Raja, declaring him entitled to the underground minerals, and awarding him khas possession of the same. This was the order upheld on appeal by the Privy Council, and I think their Lordships clearly intended to decide that as the zamindar was entitled to the sub-soil mineral rights, he was also entitled to possession of the same. This is the law, and legal effect can only be given to it by holding that at the date when the grant was made, or is presumed to have been made, there was a severance of the right and property in the surface from the right and property in the sub-soil, both of which had antecedently been vested as one entire tenement in the Raja and his predecessors as zamindars. Mr. Pugh sought to contend that on the facts of this case, the character of the defendants' tenure is such that it could be distinguished from the cases of Hari Narayan Singh Deo v. Sriram Chakravarti (1) and Durga Prashad Singh v. Brojo Nath Bose (2), but we think that the decision of Mr. Justice Fletcher in the case of Kunja Behari Seal v. Raja Durga Prasad Singh (4) prevents him from taking advantage of any such argument and that in fact, having regard to the Privy Council cases to which I have referred, permanent tenure-holders, even if their estate be hereditary, do not enjoy the mineral rights and the same are not vested in them. Therefore, if there be a severance in the tenement, the tenure-holder taking the surface rights, the rights in the sub-soil must be taken to remain in the zamindar as if there had been a reservation of the mines in his favour; otherwise it would be impossible to give legal effect or meaning to the decisions of the Privy Council. If the mines are presumed to be vested in, and to be the property of, the Raja, his rights must be just the same as those of a fee simple freehold owner of land according to English Law who makes a grant with an express reservation of the mines to himself together with the incidents that follow therefrom. We hold that by reason of that presumption and by reason of the severance of the tenement and the reservation that must be deemed to arise in favour of the Raja, the latter had, as incident to his rights of property and ownership in the mines, the right by implication of law to enter upon the surface of the tenure-holder's mouza for all reasonable and necessary purposes to enable him to work the mines and exercise his mineral rights. Mr. Pugh argued that even though we may hold that the mineral rights remain in the Raja, nevertheless his clients, the defendants, being in possession of the surface, could prevent the landlord from working the mines without their (the defendants') consent; and he has relied very strongly on Mr. Justice Mukerjee's judgment in Prince Mahomed Buktyar Shah v. Rani Dhojmani (5) in support of that argument; and certainly that judgment at first sight would give one the impression that he was right. But we feel satisfied that the learned Judge in some way misapplied the English Law governing copyholds to that applicable to the case of owners and tenants of freehold land in England. A copyholder has certain rights in excess of the ordinary tenant of freehold land. The case referred to [Eardley v. Granville (6)] clearly distinguishes between the rights of a copyholder and the rights of an ordinary lessee or tenant on a freehold estate. A virtual severance having been effected by the exception of the mines, the lessee or grantee of the surface gets no possession of the sub-soil. It is, therefore, the principles of freehold and not copyhold law which are to be applied, the distinction being, that under the latter there is no division into strata and the tenant obtains possession of the entire surface and sub soil to the centre of the earth, so that the lord of the manor cannot work the mines unless he proves a right or custom to that effect. It is this distinction which appears to us to have been lost sight of by Mookerjee, J., in the ruling under reference. It is only under the copyhold law, and where there is no reservation or custom proved, that a deadlock occurs and neither landlord or tenant can work the mines. Under the law applicable to freehold land, there can be no deadlock, for if the mines be excepted, the grantor has an implied right to work them incidental to such exception; if there be no exception then that right is with the grantee as the owner of the surface and sub-soil. The case of Batten Poole v. Kennedy (7) clearly shows that where a tenement is severed, the person in whose favour the reservation is made is the absolute owner of the sub-soil; and in Ramsay v. Blair (8) the rights of such a person are clearly dealt with and laid down, and it is there stated that he has by implication of law the power to go upon the surface and do all things reasonably necessary in order to exercise the enjoyment of his property. Sir S. P. Sinha's argument on the first aspect of the case has convinced us of its soundness and accuracy.

The third defence put forward by the defendants was one of adverse possession. They claim to have been in adverse possession so long that even if they are not entitled by grant, they have succeeded in prescribing a title for themselves as against the Raja as their landlord. However, on the question of fact, we have no difficulty in disposing of this issue. We think that the defendants in December 1891, in making a lease of the mineral rights of Kumarjuri to Dr. Walter Saise, were demising property of which they were not the owners and over which they had no control; and if his assignees, the East India Coal Company, did enter and work the coal mines, as they apparently did in 1895, they did so as trespassers and not under a legal claim or title. Thus up to 1899 they were in possession as trespassers and from 1899 onwards they were not in possession of the mines or minerals up to March 1911, when the acts were committed giving rise to the cause of action in this suit.

The Subordinate Judge has, we think, dealt with the plaintiffs' evidence of possession in a somewhat intemperate and unreasonable manner. The witness Fleischer was no doubt in some respects unreliable, but his evidence regarding the possession of the Nawagarh Company of the Mouza Kumarjuri from 1899 to 1904 as corroborat-ed by the cash books is of a most convincing nature. These books are clearly genuine and they exhibit a series of payments for excavation of inclines, erection of huts and other purposes indicative of occupation by the plaintiff Company during that period. There is documentary evidence showing that the Company was put into possession of the village under the orders of the Deputy Commissioner in March 1899, and the order of the High Court in April 1900 at page 710 indicates that the Company was at that time in possession. Subsequent to 1904 the Company do not appear to have exercised any possessory rights upon the surface of the village, but they were extracting the coal in Kumarjuri from an incline in the neighbouring village of Malkera.

Under these circumstances, and in view of the fact that there was no adverse possession by the defendants, no cause of action arose until the plaintiff was obstructed in March 1911. The defendants can only succeed in establishing adverse possession by the joint act of themselves and the East India Coal Company. Thus it will be seen that from March 1899 to March 1911 neither the defendants nor the East India Coal Company worked, or sought to work, the coal or mineral rights in Kumarjuri. It appears to us, therefore, perfectly clear that the defendants have acquired no title by adverse possession to the mines or minerals of Kumarjuri.

Are the plaintiffs entitled to succeed in this action?

The Raja has the mineral rights, as we have held, in the village of Kumarjuri; he has, as incident to that right, the right to go upon the land and take the minerals; and has by the lease of the 2nd of October 1899 assigned to the plaintiffs all the rights which he himself possessed. That lease gives the plaintiffs, during the term to which it extends, all the rights of the Raja to the mines and minerals coupled with the legal implication which should be attached to these rights, viz., a right to enter on the surface of the mouza by way of necessity to work the mines. It is contended for the defendants that by the express terms of the lease itself, there are certain restrictions and conditions imposed which prevent the plaintiffs from working the mines; and that, therefore, they are not entitled to the declaration sought in this action.

The argument is that by clause 3 of part 2 of the lease the plaintiffs have merely power and liberty to enter upon lands in direct possession of the Raja himself in order to exercise the mineral rights vested in them; and that accordingly by this clause the plaintiffs' rights were strictly limited and by no means co-extensive with those the Raja enjoyed.

The implied liberty to enter and work the mines subject to reasonable restrictions is not to be curtailed by the express conditions of the lease, unless the intention is apparent. That the intention was to enlarge, and not to restrict, is indicated by the fact that, if the lease were construed in the manner contended by Mr. Pugh, the lessees would obtain thereunder no rights whatever in the village by reason of there being no land in the Raja's khas possession. In our opinion, clause 3 of part 2 merely determines the compensation to be paid to the Raja in the event of the plaintiffs' acquiring land, whether permanently or temporarily, in connection with their mining operations. The clause, therefore, was inserted with a totally different object from that for which Mr. Pugh contends.

Part 3 is headed "Restrictions and conditions as to the exercise of the above liberties, powers and privileges." We think that part 3 must be construed as only restricting the liberties and privileges conferred by part 2, and not as any restriction upon the general right of access which is implied by law as between the Raja and the defendants and which right, so far as the Raja is concerned, is now vested in the plaintiffs. The cases of Earl of Cardigan v. Armitage (9) and Bartlett v. Downes (10) are directly in point.

Therefore, we think that the plaintiffs are entitled to the mineral rights under the lease of the 2nd of October 1899 and that they are entitled to enter the muzai of Kumarjuri to bore and do all acts reasonably incident to the enjoyment of their property in the mines and minerals, and that if in the development of the mines and the extraction of the minerals they cause damage to the defendants or others by subsidence of the soil or injury to the houses or tanks therein and thereon, there is ample power to injunct them and to prevent them from so doing. In our opinion, neither the Raja nor the East India Coal Company are necessary to be joined as parties, to entitle the plaintiffs to maintain this action.

On the 21st of March 1911, therefore, the defendants illegally obstructed the plaintiffs in the exercise of their lawful rights and the plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to the full measure of relief which they claim in this action. We, accordingly, set aside the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge and decree the plaintiffs' suit in the form of prayer (1) in the written plaint and grant an injunction in the form of prayer (2), with costs of this action against the defendants in both Courts.

VARU—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

RAVUR CHENGAMA NAIDU AND OTHERS

—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage—Prior and puisne incumbrances—Decree for sale in first mortgagee's suit and purchase by decree-holder—Puisne mortgagee, non-joinder of, in suit—Renewal of puisne usufructuary mortgage after first mortgagee's decree, effect of—Merger—Suit for possession by auction-purchaser, maintainability of.

A first mortgagee purchased the mortgaged properties in execution of the decree passed in the suit on his mortgage, to which a second usufructuary mortgagee was not made a party. The latter got a renewal of his mortgage after the said decree. The first mortgagee decree-holder brought a suit for possession under Order XXI, rule 103, Civil Procedure Code, against the owner and the second usufructuary mortgagee:

PRAYAG DOSS JEE VARU v. RAVUR CHENGAMA NAIDU.

Held, that, in the absence of proof of any intention on the part of the usufructuary mortgagee to give up his security under the first deed, he must be presumed to have intended to keep it alive and he was entitled to rely on it against the plaintiff's decree and the sale thereunder. [p. 461; col. 2.]

Held, also, that, the defendant being in the position of a puisne mortgagee with possession and the plaintiff in that of a first mortgagee who had purchased the property in execution of the decree on his mortgage to which the puisne mortgagee was not a party, the plaintiff's suit for possession must fail. [p. 462, col. 1.]

The question whether previous incumbrances paid off or renewed are to be treated as still kept alive or as extinguished against mesne incumbrancers is one of intention of the parties to the transaction, and where there is no clear evidence of that intention from express declarations or attendant circumstances parties must be presumed to have intended what is for their benefit: the mere fact that the incumbrance has been paid off or renewed does not decide the question. [p. 458, cols. 1 & 2.]

Gokuldas Gopaladas v. Purnmal Premsukh Das, 10 C. 1035; 11 I. A. 12; 8 Ind. Jur. 396; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 543; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 692 Crosbie Hill v. Sayer, (1908) 1 Ch. 866; 77 L. J. Ch. 466; 99 L. Where a subsequent incumbrancer alleges that a prior incumbrance has been extinguished by payment or renewal, it must be clearly established by cogent evidence, whether direct or inferential, that the person making the payment or taking the renewed deed, deliberately and with the knowledge that it was to his benefit to keep the prior incumbrance alive, elected to extinguish it for all purposes; otherwise the presumption that a man intends what is to his benefit should be allowed to prevail. [p. 460, col. 2.]

The principle under which protection is granted to persons renewing prior incumbrances against intervening incumbrancers applies also to cases of intervening decrees under which property has been sold. [p. 460, col. 2.]

In a usufructuary mortgage possession is an essential part of the security and what is kept alive is not merely the security but the rights of the mortgagee on the property under the deed. [p. 462, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, North Arcot, in Original Suit No 50 of 1914.

The Advocate-General and Mr. S. Gopalaswami Iyengar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. V. Venkatarama Aiyar and R. Ananthanarayana Iyer, for the Respondents.

This appeal coming on for hearing and having stood over for consideration, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, Offg. C. J.—I agree in the judgment which my learned brother is going to read.

KRISHNAN, J.—In this appeal we have a case of competition for possession between a first mortgagee who purchased the properties in execution of his own mortgage-decree against the owner and a second usufructuary mortgagee, whose mortgage was before the decree and who was not a party to the 1st mortgagee's suit or decree but who had taken a new usufructuary mortgage after the date of the decree from the owner.

The material facts on which the question in this case arises are undisputed and are these. The plaint lands were part of the zemindari of Karvetnagar. The then Raja and his eldest son executed a simple mortgage-deed, Exhibit A, of the plaint lands in 1877 for Rs. 18,000 in favour of two persons whose interest is now represented by the plaintiffs. In 1884 the said son who had then become the Raja gave a usufructuary mortgage, Exhibit I, for Rs. 14,00,000 to the then mohant of Tirupati, whose representative-in-interest now is the defendant, over 194 villages in the zemindari among which the plaint villages are all included. In 1886 the 1st mortgagees under Exhibit A brought a suit on their mortgage, Original Suit No. 11 of 1886, against the Raja alone without making the 2nd mortgagee under Exhibit I a party and obtained the usual mortgage-decree for the amount due to them, viz., Rs. 37,305 with interest and costs. In 1889 the mortgagee under Exhibit I took a fresh usufructuary mortgage-deed, Exhibit II, from the Raja for a sum of Rs. 19,67,330, being the amount due on his mortgage Exhibit I together with a sum of three lakhs due on another simple mortgage Exhibit VI which the Raja had executed to him at the same time as Exhibit I on certain other properties, as well as an amount due on certain small items of credits and debits between the parties. The properties under Exhibit II were, with the exception of two villages released from the mortgage, the same as in Exhibit I, and included the plaint lands. Plaintiffs got their decree made absolute in 1896 and in execution thereof sold the plaint properties and with leave of Court purchased them themselves in January 1912. The sale was duly confirmed and plaintiffs were put in possession in 1913. Thereupon the defendant applied to the Court to have himself put back into possession on the ground that he was entitled to possession as against the plaintiffs; the Court, agreeing with his contention, directed re-delivery of the properties to him and this was carried out. Thereupon plaintiffs brought this suit under Order XXI, rule 103, of the Code of Civil Procedure for the establishment of their right to and for possession as auction-purchasers against the defendant. Defendant's case is that plaintiffs' decree and auction-purchase are subject to his rights under his 1st mortgage-deed of 1884 on which he is entitled to rely against the plaintiffs notwithstanding the execution of Exhibit II and, therefore, the plaintiffs' suit for possession must fail. The learned Advocate-General who appeared for the defendant does not contest the position that his client's rights under Exhibit II are subject to the plaintiffs' rights under their previously obtained mortgage-deed and the sale in execution of it. He contends, however, that he is entitled to rely on Exhibit I as against the plaintiffs in spite of the execution of Exhibit II. Plaintiffs deny this and contend that by the execution of Exhibit II the rights under Exhibit I have been abandoned or extinguished and that defendant can no longer rely on them as they are non-existent.

Numerous authorities have been cited before us to show in what cases Courts have held that previous incumbrances paid off or renewed were to be treated as still kept alive or as extinguished against mesne incumbrancers. The principle deducible from these cases is that the question is really one of intention of the parties to the transaction and where there is no clear evidence of that intention from express declarations or attendant circumstances, parties must be presumed to have intended what is for their benefit; the mere fact that the incumbrance has been paid off or renewed does not decide the question. Their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down these principles in Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Puranmal Premeek Das (1), the leading case on the point. They also held in that case that the doctrine enunciated in Toulmin v. Steere (2) should not be applied to India and the question should be treated as one of justice, equity and good conscience. The presumption that a man intends to act for his own benefit is so strong that very clear and cogent evidence to the contrary is necessary to replace it. Lord Justice Parker has stated the result of English authorities in his judgment in Crosbie-Hill v. Sayer (3) thus: "Even in the case of a purchase of an equity of redemption, where the first mortgagee is at the same time paid off and joins in a conveyance of the property to the purchaser, so that questions of merger arise, it will require strong evidence of contrary intention to preclude the Court from holding that the first mortgage-debt is still alive for the purpose of protecting the purchaser of the equity of redemption from mesne incumbrances, whether at the time of purchase he knows of such incumbrances or otherwise. The question in such cases is not whether the purchaser has shewn an intention to keep the security of the first mortgagee alive for his own protection, but whether the Court can gather that he has shewn an intention to merge it for all purposes." His Lordship has also quoted with approval the following observations of Lord Justice Lindley, in the case of Liquidation Estates Purchase Co. v. Willoughby (4): "Because in that case (i. e., if the mesne incumbrancer is preferred) the purchaser would not have got what he bargained for, namely, the property free from incumbrances, and it would be manifestly unjust to allow a third party to avail himself of the terms of a deed to which he is a stranger in order to defeat the real intentions of the parties to it. It is on this ground that the Courts have gone a long way, and very properly, to prevent a second or third incumbrancer from obtaining a priority by a mere accident, and at the expense of other people who have never intended to benefit him." These are the observations in the case of a merger where the presumption of extinguishment is greater and as his Lordship observes, where there is no question of merger it is easier to hold that the prior incumbrance paid off is kept alive for protecting the person paying against subsequent incumbrancers. In the case of renewals where the money is not paid off at all but continues charged on the property, the presumption that the prior mortgage is not extinguished is much stronger. In the case of renewals, Sir Edward Sugden, afterwards Lord St. Leonards, made the following remarks in Tenison v. Sweeny (5) so long ago as 1844 and they are very pertinent: "Then another point was started, that as the successive mortgages were for the sums secured by the prior mortgages and for the sums subsequently advanced, the old securities were merged in the new, and that the judgment-creditor had a right to come in before the last mortgage. That is a very novel view of the operation of the deeds. I have had considerable experience in this particular department of the law, and I never before heard of such a doctrine. It is clear that the former mortgages continued untouched and operative notwithstanding the new mortgages." This was cited and followed in Goluknath Misser v. Lalla Prem Lal (6), where their Lordships held that a mortgagee does not surrender his mortgage or lower its priority by taking a subsequent mortgage including the same lands with other lands for the same debt and that the question whether the earlier mortgage is extinguished or not is a question of intention. It was similarly held in Alangaran Chetti v. Lakshmanan Chetti (7) that the execution of a new mortgage-deed in renewal of an earlier one did not extinguish the security under the latter; in that case the argument that the equitable principle enunciated by the Privy Council in Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Puranmal Premeukh Das (1) was not applicable to renewals, an argument which was also urged before us, was repelled. In another case which arose on the Original Side of this High Court and was appealed against, reported as Yellapaddi Mahalakshammal v. Sriman Madhva Siddhantha Oonahini Nidhi Ltd. (8), it was held that a mortgagee by deposit of title-deeds who had obtained a mortgage-decree and had taken a fresh mortgage for the decree amount and for further advance, was still entitled to use his first mortgage against a puisne mortgagee whose deed though subsequent to the date of the former's first mortgage was before his decree and second mortgage and who had obtained a decree and purchased the property himself, and this notwithstanding the fact that in his second mortgage there was a statement that his charge and his decree-debt were both extinguished. The learned Judge on the Original Side observed: "The law imputes to a person an intention to act according to his interest. That presumption is made even when the mortgagee, as in this case, may not have been aware of the circumstances indicating what course of conduct would be for his interest." The learned Judge also held that "an intention to give up his charge against a puisne incumbrancer cannot be imputed in the absence of any knowledge on his part of that incumbrance." The learned Chief Justice who was one of the Judges who heard the appeal in that case remarked: "The effect of Exhibit O (the second mortgage-deed) was unquestionably to put an end to the plaintiff's subsisting judgment debt against his mortgagor, but the fact that the debt was extinguished leaves open the question whether the security was put an end to" and following the rulings in Bhawani Koer v. Mathura Prasad (9) and In re Jennings' Estate (10), held that neither the security nor its priority was defeated by the new deed. The intention has to be inferred not from the facts as they appeared to the persons paying off the prior incumbrance at the time but from the real facts of the case: see Subramania Pillai v. Palaniappa Madali (11).

It is not necessary to refer to all the cases cited but I shall refer to one other case, as the facts of that case are somewhat analogous to the facts in the present case and that is the case of Gopal Chunder Sreemany v. Herembo Chunder Hoblar (12). In that case one A had mortgaged to plaintiff his $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share in a house in 1882; he again mortgaged the same $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share to one B in January 1884. Again in May 1884 he and his two brothers mortgaged the whole house to plaintiff for the money due under the 1st mortgage and a further advance then paid. It was recited in the deed that the money was borrowed in part to liquidate the debt under the 1st mortgage and that that debt was paid off. The interest charged under the new deed was different and the property mortgaged, as stated above, had been added to. The mortgage-deed was left with the mortgagee, but only as one of the title-deeds. Their Lordships held that, looking at what was done in fact, and not to the words, the transaction was in reality a fresh advance upon fresh security being given for both the old debt and the new advance and upon a fresh arrangement being made as to interest, that the old security for the old debt remained untouched; and further that, even if it was taken that the old debt was paid off, that did not destroy the security, and that the circumstances referred to above did not show an intention to extinguish the security and that, therefore, it should be presumed that the security was kept alive for the plaintiff's protection.

It is thus apparent from the authorities above cited that Courts in this country have liberally applied the equitable doctrine in question to prevent a puisne incumbrancer obtaining an unfair advantage of priority and an unjust enrichment of himself by the accident of the prior incumbrance being paid off or renewed by third parties, which was not intended to benefit him. I, therefore, think that where a subsequent incumbrancer alleges that a prior incumbrance has been extinguished by payment or renewal, it must be clearly established by cogent evidence, whether direct or inferential, that the person making the payment or taking the renewed deed, deliberately and with the knowledge that it was to his benefit to keep the prior incumbrance alive, elected to extinguish it for all purposes; otherwise the presumption that a man intends what is to his benefit should be allowed to prevail.

It is argued that as the plaintiffs were the prior mortgagees in this case and the defendant seeks to have recourse to the equitable doctrine and rely on his first mortgage only for the purpose of getting rid of the effect of plaintiffs' decree obtained between the dates of the two mortgages, and not of a mesne incumbrance, the doctrine should not be applied. No case exactly bearing on this question has been cited to us. But there does not seem to be any reason why the protection granted to persons renewing prior incumbrances against intervening incumbrancers should not be extended to cases of intervening decrees. By the plaintiffs' decree and the sale in execution thereof the defendant would lose all his rights in the plaint properties if he is not allowed to rely on his first mortgage. I think the principle does apply to intervening decrees where property has been sold as in this case. I shall now examine the evidence in the case in the light of the principles I have stated above. A comparison of the two deeds Exhibits I and II shows that there is nothing in the second deed to justify a finding, as the Subordinate Judge has come to, that the defendant has expressly extinguished his rights under the first deed for all purposes and that he cannot any longer rely on it as against plaintiffs. Apart from the terms of the two deeds there is no evidence of any intention on defendant's part to abandon his security. In fact the defendant is not shown to have known of the existence of the plaintiffs' decree at the time of Exhibit II. In paragraph 2 of Exhibit II it is true that some mortgages and decrees are referred to, but there is nothing to show that the reference is to plaintiffs' decree. The list referred to there is evidently the list of properties we find attached to that document as filed in Court. It is difficult to see how without knowing of the existence of the decree the defendant could be held to have intended to give up his rights under it as against plaintiffs. But even if defendant knew of the plaintiffs' decree there is nothing to show that his intention was to abandon his original rights. The very paragraph referred to indicates that the defendant bargained for a mortgage free of the mortgages and decree-debts referred to therein, as he stipulates that the mortgagor is to pay them off.

Exhibit II recites Exhibit I and purports to be executed for the amount due under Exhibit I with certain other sums added thereto; this is not a case where the previous debt is paid off. It is true two out of the 194 villages included in Exhibit I are not included in Exhibit II, but this fact cannot affect the 192 villages on which the amount due under Exhibit I continues charged. The charge on the two released villages no doubt is extinguished. Under Exhibit I the mortgagee was to have possession for 20 years and if at the end of the period the money was not paid, he was to continue in possession or after giving six months' notice enforce the personal covenant to pay. See paragraph 19 of Exhibit I. The same possession is continued under Exhibit II with the difference that the period is increased to 25 years. Though the deed, Exhibit II, says that the properties were again delivered possession of to the mortgagee by means of it, as pointed out by the Subordinate Judge, the fact is the defendant continued in possession without any break. No doubt as between the zemin dar and the defendant his subsequent possession should be regarded as under the new deed; and it would be so in the case of every renewal of a usufructuary mortgage.

In paragraph 23 of Exhibit II it is the mortgage-deed alone that is cancelled and not the mortgage itself; even the deed is left with the mortgagee though only for reference. There is no doubt a change in the stipulation as to interest, originally interest at six per cent. on Exhibit I and the interest on Exhibit VI were to be paid from the usufruct, the mortgagee keeping accounts; under the new deed the usufruct is to be taken in full satisfaction of the whole interest payable. All these circumstances existed in the case of Gopal Chunder Sreemany v. Herembo Chunder Holder (12) and yet it was held that the substance of the transaction should be looked at and not mere words, that the old deed was not paid off and even if it was, it did not affect the question of the security for the old debt which remained untouched. Following the view taken in that case with which I agree and looking to the substance of the transaction in Exhibit II, it is clear to my mind that it is only a renewal of Exhibit I, that there was no payment of the money due under Exhibit I but that that amount remained charged on the 192 villages still included in Exhibit II and that the latter document is really a continuation of the old security on slightly varied terms.

Finding as I do that there is no proof of any intention on the part of the defendant to give up his security under Exhibit I and as it is manifestly to his advantage now to rely on it, I must give effect to the presumption that he intended what was to his benefit, and hold that defendant is entitled to rely upon Exhibit I against the plaintiffs' decree and sale under it.

It was then argued for plaintiffs that even if defendant is entitled to rely on Exhibit I against them he has abandoned his possession under Exhibit I and his present possession is under the terms of Exhibit II and as the latter deed is of no avail against them, his present possession under it cannot be availed of either, as against them. It was also said that the defendant's right to possession under Exhibit I was only for 20 years and that period having now expired, he could not use it against plaintiffs' right to possession. This last argument is erroneous on the facts, as under Exhibit I defendant can remain in possession at his option until the money due to him is fully paid off, and that has not been done. It is difficult to understand the first part of the argument. If defendant is entitled to rely on Exhibit I, as I have held, his right to possession under it must prevail against the plaintiffs and their claim to possession must fail. It is not his present possession that the defendant puts forward against the plaintiffs but his right to possession under his first deed. There is no force in the suggestion that right to possession is not part of the security in a usufructuary mortgage-deed and that it is the security alone, meaning thereby the money charge, that is kept alive for the defendant's benefit. In a usufructuary mortgage possession is an essential part of the security; and what is kept alive is not merely the security but the rights of the defendant on the property under the deed.

Taking then that the defendant can rely on his rights under Exhibit I against the plaintiffs including his right to possession, what is the effect of it on the plaintiffs' present claim for possession? The defendant is in the position of a puisne mortgagee with possession and plaintiffs in the position of first mortgagees who have purchased the property in execution of the decree on their mortgage to which the puisne mortgagee was not a party. The question whether in these circumstances the suit of the prior mortgagee purchaser for possession should be allowed subject to the second mortgagee's right of redemption or should be dismissed, was considered and decided by a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Mulla Veetil Seethi v. Achuthan Nair (13). It was held that a suit for possession failed. Following that decision I hold that plaintiffs' suit must fail.

I, therefore, allow the appeal and reversing the decree of the lower Court dismiss the suit and direct the plaintiffs to pay the defendant's costs here and in the Court below.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), ss. 108, 127—Tenant, position of, when ejected by trespasser—Trespasser, suit against, for assessment and recovery of rent.

An ordinary tenant who has been wrongfully ejected from his holding (which was either under his own cultivation or under that of a sub tenant) by a person other than his own landlord, can treat such person as his sub-tenant and sue him for assessment and recovery of rent under section 127 read with section 108 of the Oudh Rent Act. [p. 463, col. 2.]

Badlu v. Ramzan, 4 O. C. 24, dissented from.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated the 3rd September 1915, reversing the order of the Assistant Collector, Rae Bareilly, dated the 5th January 1915.

Babu Lachhman Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. Hakim-ud-din Siddiqui, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has been referred to a Bench for decision, and the question for determination is whether an ordinary tenant who has been ejected from his holding by a trespasser can be allowed to treat such trespasser as his sub-tenant and sue him for the assessment and recovery of rent under section 127 read with section 108 of the Oudh Rent Act. The plaintiffs are the guzaradars of Tabuka Bahrouli, which is now owned by Musammam Mithan Kuar. The village Khajuba forms a part of that taluka and Chak Manau is a hamlet of that village. The dispute in this case relates to the rent of a plot of land, which the plaintiffs describe as bearing No. 340 Khasra measuring 15 biswas, in Chak Manau. Their allegation was that they were also the guzaradars of plot No. 340 Khasra along with other plots situated in Chak Manau, that the said plot was in the cultivation of their tenant, Lokai, and that on his death the defendant, Kali, wrongfully took possession of it without the consent of the plaintiffs in 1318 Faski. They claimed its rent from Rabi 1319 to the end of Kharif 1322 Fasli.

The defendant admitted that the plaintiffs were the guzaradars of Taluka Bahrouli, but denied that they had any concern with Chak Manau or the land situated in it. He further stated that the plot in dispute was not situated in Chak Manau, but formed part of plot No. 1598 Khasra in the village Pahu, which was owned by Drigpal Singh, and that he had been cultivating the said plot of land from a period of ten or twelve years and paying its rent annually to the talukdar of Pahu. He asserted that Lokai was not a tenant of the said land and that the plaintiffs had never been in possession of it. The issues framed by the Court of first instance were:

"Are the plaintiffs landlords of the land in suit?"

"If so, what rent, if any, is due to them from the defendant?"

They were not sufficiently comprehensive to cover the various defences raised in the case. The finding of the Court of first instance on those issues was that the plaintiffs and their father were entered in the khatauni under clause 5, and that the defendant had no right to hold the land without the consent of the plaintiffs. A decree for Rs. 12.14.3 was accordingly passed against the defendant. On appeal the learned District Judge directed the Court of first instance to determine whether the plaintiffs were the guzaradars of the land in dispute or ordinary tenants and whether the talukdar of Bahrouli was the proprietor of Chak Manau. The findings of that Court were that the plaintiffs were ordinary tenants of the land in dispute and that the talukdar of Bahrouli was not the owner of Chak Manau. The learned District Judge accepted those findings, though by oversight he misdescribed the latter, and proceeded to dismiss the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs, being ordinary tenants, had no right to sue for the assessment and recovery of rent against a trespasser under section 127 of the Rent Act. He relied in support of that view on a decision, Badlu v. Ramzan (1). It was held in that case by Mr. Spankie that the expression "landlord" in section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act did not include an ordinary tenant and that the provisions of that section did not cover a case where a person occupied, without the consent of an ordinary tenant, a part of his holding. The definition of "landlord" as contained in section 3, clause (11), of the Oudh Rent Act is, however, wide enough to include any person to whom a tenant is liable to pay rent, and the definition of the word "tenant" in section 3, clause (10), of the same Act is also sufficiently comprehensive to include a person who is liable to pay rent. As between an ordinary tenant and a person whom he is willing to treat as a sub-tenant, the relationship is of the same nature as that between a proprietor of the land and the tenant thereof; and if an ordinary tenant is entitled to claim rent from a sub-tenant he must be treated, in the absence of anything in the subject or context to the contrary, as a landlord for the purposes of the Oudh Rent Act. We have, therefore, to examine whether there is anything in the subject or context of section 127 of the Act to exclude the case of an ordinary tenant, claiming the rent of his land from a person who had trespassed on his tenancy, from its purview. The language, used in sections 24, 67 and 68 of the Act, cannot be of any help in elucidating the matter, for the rights, conferred by sections 24 and 67, have been expressly declared by section 68 to be inapplicable to thekadars, mortgagees and sub-tenants. Section 127 gives an option to a person entitled to the rent of land either to treat the person in possession of it without his consent as a trespasser and sue for his ejectment in the Civil Court, or to claim rent from him at the rate payable in the year preceding the wrongful occupation or, if the rent was not payable in that year, at such rate as the Court may determine to be fair and equitable, and the mere fact that the section denies to such a person in the latter instance any of the statutory privileges conferred by the Act on ordinary tenants makes no difference. It is also immaterial whether the person ousted had prior to his ouster been in cultivatory possession of the land, or was in possession of it through a previous sub-tenant; for in the former case the law permits an equitable rate to be charged, and in the latter case the rent levied previous to the trespass can be recovered. The case would be the same, whether the person claiming is the proprietor of the land or a tenant ejected from his holding by a person other than his landlord. Any other interpretation would leave a tenant wrongfully ejected from his holding practically at the mercy of the trespasser, if he is not sufficiently well off to wait and seek his remedy in the Civil Court, and would deprive him of the shorter and summary remedy for the redress of his rights, which the above section was intended to provide. We are unable, therefore, to agree with the reasoning upon which the judgment in Badlu v. Ramzan (1) proceeded, and feel inclined to take the view that section 127 is wide enough to cover cases in which an ordinary tenant is wrongfully ejected by a person other than his own landlord.

The other issues arising in the case connected with the claim of adverse possession set up by the defendant and the situation of the land and the payment of its rent to the talukdar of Fahu have not been tried.

We allow the appeal accordingly, and setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court remand the case to that Court with a direction to re-instate it under its original number and to dispose of it, after determining the remaining pleas urged in defence, in the manner required by law. The costs here and hitherto will abide the result.

Where the question was whether compensation for land compulsorily acquired by Government should be awarded to the collateral heir of the last male owner, or to a person who had been in possession of the land for more than twelve years prior to the acquisition proceedings without payment of rent:

Held, that the latter was the person entitled to receive the compensation.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Gaya, dated the 18th March 1913.

Messrs. Akbari and Khurshed Hasnain, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—A plot of land was acquired for the purposes of the East Indian Railway Company on the 23rd March 1912, and a certain sum of Rs. 580 odd was assessed as the compensation to be paid for the land. For this sum there were two rival claimants, Rai Mahabir Prasad and Rajbans Sahay. The plot was originally held by Rai Gudar Sahay. Rai Mahabir Prasad claimed to be the reversioner to the estate left by Rai Gudar Sahay who appears to have died in March 1897, leaving a widow and a daughter, both of whom are since dead. The other claimant, Babu Rajbans Sahay, claimed to have been the family mukhtear and to have been in possession of the plot rent-free. His case was that his father had been in possession before him. The finding of the learned District Judge, which is based apparently upon evidence common to both sides, is that Rajbans Sahay took possession of the property soon after the death of Rai Gudar Sahay during a dispute between the widow of Rai Gudar Sahay and Rai Gudar Sahay's daughter-in-law, Sabodra Koer. The respondent has not appeared, but upon the evidence offered on either side there can be no doubt that Rajbans Sahay had been in possession of the property for at least twelve years before the 23rd March 1912, when the property was acquired, and that during that period he has paid no rent for it. He asserts now that the landlord's title lies with Sabodra Koer. It is not clear when he first asserted this, but it is clear that he has been in possession for twelve years, and, therefore, Rai Mahabir Prasad had lost his right to recover possession from him before the land was acquired. At the time of the acquisition Rajbans Sahay appears to have acquired by adverse possession the title to hold the land without paying any rent for it. We are of opinion that the learned District Judge was wrong in awarding the full amount of compensation to Rai Mahabir Prasad, and we set aside that direction, and we direct that the amount be paid to the appellant, Rajbans Sahay.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 302—Murder—Sentence—Extenuating circumstances—Murder in the heat of passion.

A sentence of death should ordinarily be passed for the crime of murder unless there are extenuating circumstances, and a mere absence of aggravating circumstances is not enough to justify a sentence of transportation for life.

The fact that a murder was committed without premeditation in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel is not an extenuating circumstance.

Crown v. Nga Tha Sin, 1 L. B. R. 216; Hamid v. Emperor, 2 L. B. R. 63 and Shwe Cho v. Emperor, 3 L. B. R. 111; 3 Cr. L. J. 25, referred to.

Review of the order of the Sessions Judge, Hanthawaddy, dated the 4th April 1916, passed in Sessions Trial No. 12 of 1916.

JUDGMENT.

TWOMEY, J.—(May 23rd, 1916.)—The appeal of Myat Kaing has been dismissed summarily. But I have serious doubts whether the learned Sessions Judge exercised his power under section 367 (5), Code of Criminal Procedure, in accordance with law in this case. It has been held that a sentence of death should ordinarily be passed for murder unless there are extenuating circumstances, and that a mere absence of aggravating circumstances is not sufficient to justify a sentence of transportation for life. In the present case the lesser sentence was passed because the Judge found that the crime was committed "without premeditation in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel". These are not, in my opinion, extenuating circumstances as contemplated in the rulings of this Court, Crown v. Nga Tha Sin (1), Hamid v. Emperor (2), Shwe Oho v. Emperor (3). The facts were that the accused and deceased had words with one another in a gambling waing, when accused drew a knife and stabbed deceased in the abdomen wounding him mortally.

Nga Myat Kaing will be called upon to show cause before a Bench of this Court why the sentence passed on him should not be enhanced.

ORDER.

Fox, C. J.—The learned Sessions Judge appears to have overlooked the rule adopted by the Full Bench of this Court in Crown v. Nga Tha Sin (1), which laid down that to justify the passing of a sentence of transportation for life in cases of murder, the Judge should find that there are really extenuating circumstances and not merely an absence of aggravating circumstances.

It was also stated that mere absence of premeditation was ordinarily an insufficient reason for not passing a capital sentence. If these rules had been borne in mind, a sentence of death in the present case should have been passed.

It appears to me, however, doubtful whether this Court would have felt bound to confirm a sentence of death for a crime committed 19 years ago, when the accused had apparently not been guilty of excesses of violence since. Whilst of opinion that there were no really extenuating circumstances in connection with the accused's crime and that a sentence of death should have been passed by the Sessions Judge upon the accused, I do not think enhancement of the sentence of transportation for life is called for. That sentence will stand.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 147.—

SARAT CHANDRA MADAK C. MOBARAK MALLIK.

Dispute concerning right to collect tolas from hat, whether falls within the section.

The words "concerning the right of use of any land or water" in section 147, Criminal Procedure Code, are wide enough to include the right to go upon a hat for the purpose of collecting gratuities; therefore, a dispute concerning the right to collect tolas (gratuities) from a hat falls within the purview of the section. [p. 467, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the 1st class Magistrate at Arambagh, dated the 10th April 1916.

Babus Rishindra Nath Sarkar and Ramesh Chandra De, for the Petitioners.

Babu Bibhuti Bhusan Saha, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the dispute was with reference to the right to collect tolas, or small perquisites, from Dewangunge hat. The first party on behalf of the local Mahomedans was claiming the right to collect the tolas only on one day every year, for performing a certain religious ceremony. The second parties who were Hindus were objecting to this, saying that the Mahomedans had no such right to collect tolas from the hat as alleged by the first party.

Now, the first ground upon which this Rule was issued was that the case was not one falling within section 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the reason why it is alleged that the case did not come within that section was that the dispute was not one concerning the right of use of any land.

Now, in our opinion, it was a dispute concerning the right of use of land. As far as I can understand, the facts of this case show that the hat was held every week in the particular village. It was held always on the same vacant piece of ground somewhat about the middle of the village, and when the hat was held, people who wanted to sell their goods came and took up their position upon different places on this vacant piece of ground in the ordinary course of events. It may be described as a kind of market, and the place where it is held may be described as a kind of market-place. The Mahomedans were alleging that they had the right on one day in the year to go upon this piece of land when the hat was held for the purpose of collecting from the people who were there, the shopkeepers I suppose, and also people who frequented the shops, gratuities for the purpose of performing a particular religious ceremony, and the dispute was with reference to the right of the Mahomedans to do that.

The question is whether that is a dispute concerning the right of use of any land.

The first observation, I would make, is that the words which are used in section 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code are not the same as those used in section 145 of the same Code. The words used in section 145 are these: "a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning any land or water." It has been held by this Court that what is contemplated there is immovable property, something of which actual physical possession can be given and taken. But when you come to section 147, as I have already pointed out, the words used are not "concerning land or water", but "concerning the right of use of any land or water." The words used are of wider and more general application. The marginal note describing this section is "disputes concerning easements, etc." It has been held by this Court that the words of a section cannot be limited by the marginal note in accordance with the usual rule of construction of Statutes. It has, however, been held that the word "easements" was not used in this section in the limited sense in which it is used in English Law. It has been expressly so held by this Court in the case of Dukhi Mullah v. Halway (1) (and the part of the judgment to which I wish to refer is at page 59) that the word "easements" was not used in a limited sense as in English Law: and the judgment goes on to point out: "In the first place the section speaks of 'easements, etc.', and in the second place there is nothing to show that the British Indian Legislature uses the term 'easements' in the restricted sense in which it is used in English Law so as to exclude profits a prendre, while on the contrary a reference to the definition of easements in the Limitation Act (XV of 1877, section 3), which was passed four years before the Criminal Procedure Code, and in the Easements Act

(1) 23 C. 55; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 37.

SARAT CHANDRA MADAK V. MOBARAK MALLIK.

(V of 1882, section 4), passed in the same year as the Criminal Procedure Code a little more than a month before, shows that the term is used as including profits a prendre. There is then nothing to show that the words 'the right to do anything in or upon tangible immoveable property' in section 147 do not include the right to fish in a jhil."

Now, those words "the right to do anything in or upon any tangible immoveable property", which had been in section 147 of the previous Criminal Procedure Code, are not to be found in the corresponding section of the present Code and the material words now are, "concerning the right of use of any land or water." Having regard to the ordinary meaning of the words and to that decision, I am of opinion that the words are wide enough to include such a right of use of the land as is claimed by the Mahomedans in this case, namely, the right to go upon the land for one day in the year for the purpose of collecting gratuities to be used for a certain religious purpose.

With regard to the second point, this was of an entirely different nature. It was based on the ground that there was no finding as to the last exercise of the right. This arises in this way. There is a proviso to section 147 which says this: "Provided that no order shall be passed under this section permitting the doing of anything where the right to do such thing is exercisable at all times of the year, unless such right has been exercised within three months next before the institution of the inquiry; or where the right is exercisable only at particular seasons or on particular occasions, unless the right has been exercised during the last of such seasons or occasions before such institution." The latter part of this proviso applies to this case; and it is alleged on behalf of the petitioners that there is no finding here that this particular right claimed by the Mahomedans was exercised during the last of such seasons or occasions before the institution of the inquiry; and, therefore, he argues that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to make the order.

It is quite true that there is no express finding to that effect in his judgment. But we have got his explanation and from it we find that 'although there had been opposition' by the petitioners, that opposition was not successful: and, the evidence of the witnesses for the first party, that is the Mahomedan party, showed that the right was exercised by the first party Mobarak Mallik during the last three years: and that witnesses for the first party proved that the right had been exercised by the first party upto the last year and that they could not only this year collect any tola owing to violent opposition by the second party: and then the Magistrate goes on to refer to the particular witnesses whose evidence I need not specifically mention. Now, if the evidence as to these facts was accepted by the Magistrate, as I gather from his explanation he intended to do, he in fact had jurisdiction. The only thing is that he did not expressly state that finding in his judgment. The only result of making the Rule absolute asking the Magistrate to reconsider the matter would be to ask him to insert that, the effect of which he had stated in his explanation. My learned brother and myself are satisfied on the facts that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to make the order: and we do not think that that is a good ground for making the Rule absolute.

With regard to the third point, that there is no finding that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace, in my opinion, there is a finding to that effect. If it is not express it is certainly implied. Further than that, it was not one of the grounds on which the Rule was granted.

For these reasons, we think that the Rule must be discharged.

Rule discharged.

*Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439—Revision, grounds for—Inferences not warranted by

Inferences not warranted by the evidence, drawn to the prejudice of the accused, are good grounds for a criminal revision [p. 468, col. 1.]

Review of the order of the Special Power Magistrate, Prome, dated the 14th February 1916, passed in Criminal Regular Trial No. 317 of 1915.

ORDER.—The applicant Shwe Kyaw was convicted of having in his possession a mould for making counterfeit rupees and seven counterfeit rupees and was sentenced under section 235, Indian Penal Code, to rigorous imprisonment for three years. The Sessions Court dismissed his appeal. I admitted the application for revision, mainly because it appeared from the judgment of the Sessions Court that several inferences not warranted by the evidence had been drawn to the prejudice of the accused.

The incriminating articles were found under a small paddy bin behind the accused's house. The mould or press consists of two flat pieces of iron which fit on to one another, one piece having a circular depression the size of a rupee and when the two pieces of iron are placed together there is an aperture at one end of the mould, which is apparently adapted for pouring in molten metal. Although the circular depression has no wax or other material for receiving the impression of a coin, there can be little doubt that the two pieces of iron were designed for the purpose of making counterfeit rupees.

But this mould and the counterfeit coins were admittedly found in a place where it would have been a matter of no particular difficulty for an outsider to "plant" them. The paddy bin is close to a path leading to the high road to Hmattaing and the village fence has holes in it. It would apparently have been easy enough for an outsider to put the things under the bin at night without the knowledge of the accused, and though he has not succeeded in proving to the satisfaction of the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge that the informer Po Thaw and the headman Po Kyaw bear him ill-will, the mere fact that the articles were found in such an outlying position gives rise to doubts as to conscious possession on the part of the accused.

It appears that Shwe Kyaw had been under suspicion for a long time and that his house had already been searched twice within the year but without result. I cannot agree in the Sessions Judge's opinion that the previous unsuccessful searches were likely to increase Shwe Kyaw's sense of security. It seems to me that a man who had such excellent grounds for knowing that he was suspected would be unlikely to keep incriminating articles at any place where it could be said they were under his control. The Sessions Judge appears to have gone so far as to count the remoteness of the paddy bin and its accessibility from outside as circumstances indicative of Shwe Kyaw's guilt, the argument being that the accused would keep the mould, etc., far from his house so as if need be to avail himself of the defence which has actually been set up. Carrying this argument to its logical conclusion it would follow that the more remote the place of concealment and the more accessible to "planters", the greater is the probability of guilty knowledge. But the Sessions Judge seems to have been influenced also by a consideration which is inconsistent with the above. It appears that Shwe Kyaw particularly asked the searchers not to pull his paddy bin about lest they might damage his property, and the Sessions Judge accepted the view of the prosecution that his remonstrance betokened guilty knowledge of what was under the bin. If Shwe Kyaw had designed to rely on the remoteness of the bin and its accessibility, he would surely not spoil the effect of this defence by showing nervousness when the search became "hot". It is natural for a man to protest if his property is roughly handled and the fact that Shwe Kyaw did so, appears to me to be in his favour rather than otherwise. If he knew what was under the bin it was obviously his best policy to hold his tongue and rely on the defence which, according to the Sessions Judge's argument, he had already planned.

The supplementary evidence produced by the prosecution as to false coins having been issued previously by Shwe Kyaw is in every case of a very dubious kind. The witnesses all speak to incidents which happened 8 to 10 months before the search and a good deal of the evidence is mere hearsay. Even if these witnesses are speaking the truth, there is no proof that any of the coins which they refer to were really counterfeit.

I think the prosecution entirely failed to establish the charge against the applicant. The conviction and sentence are set aside and the applicant Shwe Kyaw is acquitted.

Conviction set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 195, 476—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 225B—Sending persons to Magistrate for abetting escape from custody—Omission to make preliminary enquiry—Jurisdiction.

A Court has no power to accord sanction for prosecution of a person under section 225B, Indian Penal Code, for snatching away a judgment-debtor from the custody of one of its process peons, as section 225B, Indian Penal Code, is not mentioned in section 195, Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 469, col. 2.]

A Court acts without jurisdiction under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, in sending a person to take his trial, for an alleged offence, without making a preliminary enquiry as to the circumstances constituting the alleged offence. The enquiry may be unnecessary when the Court is already in possession of the material facts from the evidence recorded at the trial, but where the incident constituting the alleged offence took place outside the Court as to which the Judge himself has no knowledge, it is incumbent on the Court to make an enquiry preliminary to passing orders under the section. [p. 470, col. 1.]

Rule against an order of the 2nd Munsif, Howrah, dated the 20th May 1916.

Babu Monmotha Nath Mookerjee, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—In this case we think the Rule should be made absolute. What happened was this. It was brought to the knowledge of the learned Munsif who had tried a particular case; No. 614 of 1915, that certain persons, one of whom was the petitioner to this Court, had endeavoured to rescue a certain person from the custody of the execution peon. The learned Munsif directed these persons to appear before him and to show cause why they should not be committed for trial in the Criminal Court. Then it came to his knowledge that a relation of his was assisting to conduct the case for some of the accused. He, therefore, very properly felt that he ought not to adjudicate upon the case. Consequently, he proceeded to send "the aforesaid persons to the Magistrate to try them on the charge of snatching away Sadhan Chandra Nandy from the lawful custody of the said peon." He also sent "the said Sadhan Chandra Nandy to the Magistrate to take his trial before him for abetting the aforesaid persons in the commission of the offence". To my mind it is clear that he purported to act under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code.

The question arises whether he had power so to do. In my opinion he had not; first, because the section in pursuance of which the accused persons were charged was section 225B of the Indian Penal Code. That is a section which is not mentioned in section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Therefore for that reason the learned Munsif would not have power to send the accused for trial for that offence.

But there is another reason which to my mind is a more important reason, and it is this. Section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, says, "when any Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court is of opinion that there is ground for enquiring into any offence referred to in section 195 and committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding, such Court, after making any preliminary enquiry that may be necessary may send the case for enquiry or trial to the nearest Magistrate of the first class". Now it is quite evident in this case that the learned Munsif made no preliminary enquiry whatsoever. It was reported to him that these persons had snatched away or endeavoured to snatch away the judgment-debtor from the custody of the peon. He did not make any enquiry. It is quite true, as has been pointed out by Mr. Mookerjee, that the words are "any preliminary enquiry that may be necessary", and I can quite imagine that in certain cases no preliminary enquiry is necessary. It may be that in a case where the Judge is trying the case and all the facts which are material to the charge have been brought to the notice of the learned Judge, or have come out during the course of the hearing of the case, it would be mere waste of time and quite unnecessary to hold a preliminary enquiry, because the learned Judge is already in possession of all the material facts on which it is necessary for him to form the judgment. But in such a case as this, where the incident took place outside the Court, and as to which the learned Judge himself could have no knowledge and as to which evidence must be called for, in my judgment, unless he does hold such a preliminary enquiry as may be necessary to enable him to determine whether or not there is any case fit to be sent to the Magistrate, he has no jurisdiction to send the accused under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code.

For these two reasons in my judgment the learned Munsif had no jurisdiction.

I think one ought to say that our decision does not necessarily put an end to any such proceedings as ought to be taken against the accused persons. A complaint may be laid before the Magistrate in the ordinary way in respect of this matter and the learned Magistrate may proceed to enquire into it in the usual course.

In our opinion, this Rule, which is obtained by the petitioner in this case, should be made absolute. But we think that it ought to be made applicable to all the accused persons.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—In this case a second class Magistrate convicted the petitioners before us of rioting and sentenced them to various terms of imprisonment. The case came on appeal before the District Magistrate and the District Magistrate, while upholding the convictions, altered the sentences and at the same time called upon the petitioners to shew cause why they should not be bound down under the provisions of section 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1898. Cause was shown by the petitioners, with the result that the District Magistrate ordered each of the petitioners to execute a bond for Rs. 300 with two sureties of Rs. 300 each. The matter now comes on revision before us on a point of law. It is submitted by the learned Vakil for the petitioners that the learned District Magistrate was not competent to order the petitioners to give security as the Court of first instance was itself not competent to do so, and he has invited us to refer to the corresponding provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1872 for the purpose of shewing what the intentions of the original framers of the Code were. But we are not concerned with the terms of that Code which were superseded by section 106 of the Code of 1882, which again was amended by the present Code of 1898. After the Code was amended in 1882 some Courts took the view that an Appellate Court had no longer power to bind down an accused person of its own motion. Section 106 of the present Code was then expressly enacted in order to declare and affirm the Appellate Court's power to do so. But I cannot admit that the effect of the enactment is to place upon the Appellate Court the limitations which the learned Vakil for the petitioners now desires to impose upon the exercise of its powers.

Apart from the plain language of the section the weight of authority is entirely against the learned Vakil. In the case of Emperor v. Bhausing Dhumalsing (1), the Court held that under clause 3 of section 106 of the Code of 1898, an Appellate Court was fully competent to pass an order binding down an accused under section 106, even though the Court convicting in the first instance was not competent to do so. That decision was followed in Dharam Das v. Emperor (2) and again in Solai Gounden, In re (3), where a Full Bench of three Judges of the Madras High Court, expressly dissenting from Muthiah Chetti v. Emperor (4) and Paramasiva Pillai v. Emperor (5), adopted the reasoning of the Bombay Court in Emperor v. Bhausing Dhumalsing (1). This Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court was passed in 1914 and is the latest exposition of the law on this point. On the other hand the only authority upon which the learned Vakil for the petitioners can rely is the case of Emperor v. Momin Malita (6), passed in 1908 by a Divisional Bench of the Calcutta High Court. In that case the learned Judges did not enter into any discussion of the provisions of the new Code, but they relied on the two Madras cases reviewed by the Full Bench in 1914 and upon the case of Mahmudi Sheikh v. Aji Sheikh (7) which was decided under section 106 of the Code of 1882. In my opinion the terms of that section having been amended by the present Act, the decision in the case of Mahmudi Sheikh v. Aji Sheikh (7) and the reasoning of the Court in that case do not apply to the case now before us, and the weight of authority is conclusively in favour of the view taken by the Madras High Court in Solai Gounden's case (3).

I would, therefore, dismiss the present application and confirm the sentences.

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the District Magistrate, Jhelum, dated the 21st August 1916, affirming that of the Magistrate, 1st class, Chakwal, dated the 12th July 1916, directing the petitioner to furnish a bond in Rs. 500, with two sureties jointly and severally responsible in the same amount, to be of good character for the period of one year, or in default to undergo one year's rigorous imprisonment.

Dr. Muhammad Iqbal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Bhagat Ram Puri, for the Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the petitioner Nur Muhammad has been ordered under section 110 (f), Criminal Procedure Code, by Mr. P. J. Anderson, Magistrate of the first class, Chakwal, to execute a bond for Rs. 500 with two sureties to be of good behaviour for a period of one year. The petitioner has applied to this Court for revision of the order of the Magistrate, on the ground that the evidence adduced by the Police against him is not sufficient to bring his case within the purview of clause (f) of section 110 aforesaid, and after hearing Counsel for the petitioner and for the Crown, I think that this contention is sound and must be allowed. Seven witnesses have given evidence against the petitioner in the Court below, and the gist of their evidence is that the petitioner had committed two murders in 1910 and 1915, was suspected in 1911 of having committed burglary in the house of one Hassa in connection with which his house was searched but nothing incriminating was found, that he associates with bad characters in the neighbourhood, and that he is a desperate and dangerous person and people are afraid of him.

As to the murders said to have been committed by the petitioner in 1910 and 1915, the petitioner was tried on both occasions in respect of the alleged crime but was ultimately acquitted in the earlier case by the Court of Session and in the later case by this Court (see judgment of this Court. Criminal Appeal No. 999 of 1915, decided on the 6th December 1915). Having been acquitted in the two capital cases, it is clear that in the eye of the law he must be held to have been innocent; and the Magistrate was, therefore, in error in referring to and relying upon the criminal trials of 1910 and 1915 as showing that the petitioner was a dangerous person. Next, we have the fact that the petitioner's house was searched in 1911 on suspicion of his connection with a burglary in the house of one Hassa. That fact has no bearing whatever on this case, inasmuch as the petitioner has been held to be a dangerous character under clause (f) and not an habitual offender under any one of the other clauses of section 110, Criminal Procedure Code.

As regards the applicability of clause (f) of the aforesaid section to the present case, it is clear that evidence of general repute is not admissible in proceedings taken under that clause [Akhor Kumar Chatterjee v. Queen Empress (1), Wahid Ali Khan v. Emperor (2), Kalai Hallar v. Emperor (3), Muthu Pillai, In re (4), Emperor v. Bidhyapati (5)]. I have carefully gone through the evidence of the witnesses produced by the Police in this case and I find that it is mostly evidence of general repute, such as would be admissible only in proceedings taken under clauses (a) to (e) of section 110, and is wholly insufficient to establish that the petitioner's case falls within clause (f) of that section. In order to bring the petitioner's case within clause (f) of the section it is necessary to prove by definite evidence that he is so desperate and dangerous as to render his being at large without security hazardous to the community. The witnesses for the prosecution do not allege or prove any specific acts as having been done by the petitioner from which the Court could draw a reasonable inference that the petitioner was so desperate and dangerous as to render his being at large without security hazardous to the community. They all content themselves with making the bold statement that the petitioner is a desperate and Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 439, 476—Order by Civil Court under s. 476—Revision.

Section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not confer jurisdiction on the High Court exercising criminal jurisdiction to revise an order made by a District Court under section 476.

Ramzan Ali v. Oporno Charan Chowdry, 4 L. B. R. 138; 7 Cr. L. J. 416; San Gaing v. King-Emperor, 4 L. B. R. 339; 9 Cr. L. J. 24; Kali Prosad Chatterjee v. Bhuban Mohini Dasi, 8 C. W. N. 73; 1 Cr. L. J. 21, referred to.

Mr. McDonnell, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise and set aside an order, made by a District Judge under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code after the decision of a suit before him, sending to a Magistrate for inquiry a case against the applicant of having committed the offences of giving false evidence and using evidence known by him to be false.

The petition is headed as a civil revision, but the learned Advocate who appeared in support of it has not asked for the exercise of the Court's civil revisional powers under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

He has asked that the application may be dealt with in exercise of the Court's revisional powers under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code,

MAULA BAKHSH v. LAL CHAND

In Ramzan Ali v. Oporno Charan Chowdry (1) and in San Gaing v. King-Emperor (2) Irwin, J., held that section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code did not confer jurisdiction on this Court exercising criminal jurisdiction to revise an order made by a District Court under section 476 of the Code. He followed a decision of the Madras High Court and the case of Kali Prosad Chatterjee v. Bhuban Mohini Dasi (3) in the Calcutta High Court. The learned Advocate has contended that these decisions as well as others in the Allahabad High Court were erroneous, and should not be followed.

The correctness of the decision in Kali Prosad Chatterjee v. Bhuban Mohini Dasi (3) has been expressly affirmed by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court [Har Prasad Das v. Emperor (4)] after very full and elaborate argument and consideration of all the decisions and provisions of law bearing on the questions involved.

We are not prepared to differ from this decision and hold that it is not open to us to revise the District Judge's order under powers conferred on the Court by section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The application is rejected.

Under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, the Chief Court has full powers to examine the record of a case and pass such orders as may be necessary. [p. 475, col. 2.]

Before granting sanction under section 195 it is advisable to give notice to the accused, although the issue of such a notice is not provided for in the Code. [p. 475, col. 2.]

There is no Court of a Munsif of the 1st class as a permanent Court with a perpetual succession of Judges, and on the transfer of a Munsif from a District, the Court of the Munsif who takes over the pending work is not identical with the Court of the Munsif who has been transferred. Therefore, a Munsif before whom an offence has not been committed cannot grant sanction to prosecute under section 195, merely because he has succeeded a Munsif in that particular place or district. Case reported by the District and Sessions Judge, Hissar, with his No. 230 J. of 27th March 1916.

FACTS.—There was a civil dispute between Lal Chand, plaintiff, and Maula Bakhsh, defendant, about a wall in the Court of Mr. Marsden, Munsif, 1st class, Palwal. In this case Maula Bakhsh made a statement on 18th August 1914 as defendant regarding this wall. The statement does not appear to be clearly recorded, so far as the disputed wall was concerned. The defendant also stated that when plaintiff bought from Bute Khan there were two chhappars. In the same case on 8th December 1914 before Mr. Spence, Munsif, 1st class, Palwal, Maula Bakhsh as a witness of the plaintiff stated that when Bute Khan owned the plaintiff's house it was inhabited by Kalu, son of Mangtu, in one chhappar and Alim Ullah in the other, Bute Khan lived in a chhappar outside. There are three chhappars in all. This case was decided by Mr. Spence on 17th December 1914. There was an appeal made by Maula Bakhsh, defendant. The appeal is said to be still pending before the Additional District Judge sitting at Karnal. On 13th May 1915, Lal Chand appears to have applied to the Sub-Divisional Officer, Palwal, (then Mr. Raghbir Singh) for sanction to his prosecuting Maula Bakhsh on the alleged discrepancies in his statements as a defendant and subsequently as a witness of the plaintiff. It is admitted that as a witness of the plaintiff his statement was true.

Lal Chand, plaintiff, was by order, dated 11th June 1915, granted sanction by Kanwar Raghbir Singh, Sub-Divisional Officer, Palwal, under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, to prosecute Maula Bakhsh under section 193, Indian Penal Code.

GROUND.—Mr. Raghbir Singh thought that as successor of Messrs. Marsden and Spence he could give the sanction, and gave to Lal Chand sanction to prosecute Maula Bakhsh signing the order of sanction, dated 11th June 1915, in his capacity of Magistrate, 1st class. He passed this order without hearing Maula Bakhsh. Lal Chand lodged a complaint on the basis of this sanction on 17th November 1915 in the Court of Lala Prabhu Dayal, Magistrate, 1st class, Gurgaon. Maula Bakhsh applied to that Court on 17th January 1916, bringing to the notice of the said Court the illegality of the order of sanction passed against him without giving him any notice and without hearing him, and he was directed to seek his remedy by appeal, if advised. After this Maula Bakhsh petitioned to this Court on 4th March 1916. Appellant's petition as an appeal is time-barred but the illegalities committed are so material and the order of sanction so carelessly given by the lower Court, which had no jurisdiction whatever to give such sanction, that I consider it a fit case for submission to the Chief Court with a recommendation that the order be set aside.

First, Mr. Raghbir Singh as successor of Messrs. Marsden and Spence had no jurisdiction to grant the sanction. He should have sent up the petition for sanction to the Appellate Court,

MAULA BAKHSH v. LAL CHAND.

Second, the first statement of Maula Bakhsh was as a defendant and regarding the subject-matter of the suit and was itself not a clearly recorded one. There was no second contradictory statement on the subject of the ownership of the wall. It was in this first statement only that questions were put about the wall, and the defendant corrected himself in this very statement. The second statement of Maula Bakhsh was as a witness of the plaintiff and it is said in this subsequent statement he gave correct answers about the chhappars.

I cannot understand how did the lower Court give sanction to Lal Chand to prosecute the petitioner, under the circumstances above mentioned, without hearing what he had to say against it.

Mr. Rup Ram, for the Petitioner.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—Mr. Tek Chand on behalf of Lal Chand raised a preliminary point that no revision lay in this matter for the following reasons:—

(i) sanction to prosecute was granted on 11th June 1915;

(ii) complaint was filed by Lal Chand on 17th November 1915;

(iii) the first hearing of the case was on 26th November 1915; and that on that date the petitioner became aware of the existence of sanction.

In spite of this knowledge, however, the case proceeded and witnesses for the prosecution were examined on the 11th January 1916, on which date all that petitioner did was to object to the legality of the sanction, and that it was not till the 4th March 1916 that he took any steps to have the sanction set aside. He contended that inasmuch as an appeal lies from an order granting sanction under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, it was the duty of the petitioner to file such an appeal. He further contended that Article 154 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, was applicable and that by making use of section 5 of that Act the petitioner could have filed an appeal on becoming aware of the existence of the sanction on the 26th November 1915, and that as the petitioner did not take any steps to get the sanction set aside till the 1st March 1916, this Court should not consider the revision at all.

I am, however, unable to accede to the contention. I consider that section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, gives this Court full power to examine the record and to pass such orders as may be necessary.

No doubt when there has been inordinate delay in moving the Court, it would not be considered necessary or advisable to take any action under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, but in this case the circumstances are such that I consider it necessary to examine the record of the proceedings in order to ascertain how far the sanction accorded on the 11th June 1915 is legal.

As pointed out in the order of reference, these proceedings have arisen out of civil litigation between the parties.

This civil litigation was commenced before Mr. Marsden, as Munsif, 1st class, at Palwal and before him Maula Bakhsh, on the 18th August 1914, made a statement as defendant.

Mr. Marsden was transferred and Mr. Spence succeeded him as Munsif, 1st class, at Palwal. Before him Maula Bakhsh, on the 8th December 1914, made a statement as a witness produced by the plaintiff. The suit was decided by Mr. Spence on the 17th December 1914, and an appeal is, I understand, pending against his decision.

In his turn Mr. Spence was transferred and was succeeded by Mr. Raghbir Singh as Munsif, 1st class, at Palwal. It was before this officer that Lal Chand filed an application under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, praying for sanction to prosecute Maula Bakhsh under section 193, Indian Penal Code, in respect of the two statements above referred to.

Mr. Raghbir Singh without issuing notice to Maula Bakhsh granted the sanction prayed for on 11th June 1915.

Mr. Rup Ram for Maula Bakhsh has attacked this sanction on various grounds. He complains that notice was not given to his client before sanction was granted. The Code does not provide for the issue of such a notice and, therefore, a sanction granted without notice is not illegal. It has, however, been repeatedly held that it is usual and advisable to give notice—and in cases like the present I am of opinion that notice should invariably issue, although on this ground alone I would not be inclined to interfere under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code. It is next argued (1) that Mr. Raghbir Singh granted sanction as a Magistrate, 1st class, whereas the offence (if any) was committed in a Civil Court; and (2) that there being no Court of a Munsif, 1st class, with a perpetual succession of Judges, Mr. Raghbir Singh had no jurisdiction to grant the sanction, the offence (if any) not having been committed before him.

As to (1) I am of opinion that a mere misdescription, such as this, would be no ground for holding a sanction to be bad in law.

Mr. Raghbir Singh was at Palwal in a dual capacity, he was Munsif, 1st class, as well as a Magistrate, 1st class, and his erroneously describing himself as a "Magistrate" when he should have written "Munsif" would not vitiate the sanction accorded. In any event I consider that section 537, Criminal Procedure Code, would clearly cover such a misdescription.

The second contention, however, is on a totally different footing, and is one of the main points taken by the learned Sessions Judge in his order of reference.

It was held in Phina Singh v. Empress (1) by Plowden, J., that "there is no Court of a Magistrate of the 1st class as a permanent Court with a perpetual succession of Judges"—and that, therefore, a Magistrate before whom the offence had not been committed could not grant sanction to prosecute under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, merely because he succeeded a Magistrate in that particular place or District.

The case was followed by Reid, J., in Sobha Singh v. Lal Chand (2) and on this point Sobha Singh v. Lal Chand (2) was not differed from in Mela Ram v. Emperor (3).

In Emperor v. Dauli (4), Phina Singh v. Empress (1) was referred to with approval by a Division Bench of this Court, and finally Beadon, J., followed Phina Singh v. Empress (1) in Muhammad Ishaq v. Muqim-ud-Din (5) and held that there was no Court of a Subordinate Judge as a permanent Court having a perpetual succession of Judges.

Mr. Tek Chand urges that this decision is bad in law and apparently section 18 of the Punjab Courts Act, 1914, was lost sight of. He also has referred me to Runga Ayyar v. Emperor (6), In re Lakshmidas Lalji (7), Shaikh Bahadur v. Shaikh Eradatullah Mallick (8), Rati Jha v. Emperor (9) and 5 A. L. J. 17* and on the ground that other High Courts in India have taken a different view on this point of law, has invited me to refer this case to a Division Bench.

I see no reason for thinking that the learned Judge who was responsible for the decision in Muhammad Ishaq v. Muqim-ud-Din (5) overlooked the provisions of the Punjab Courts Act then in force and as I hold the same view of the law, I see no reason for making the reference asked for.

Referring to the cases cited by Mr. Tek Chand I find that Runga Ayyar v. Emperor (6) was dissented from in Emperor v. Dauli (4) by a Division Bench of this Court; and In re Lakshmidas Lalji (7) has no bearing on the point under consideration.

No doubt Shaikh Bahadur v. Shaikh Eradatullah Mallick (8) is to some extent in point as also is Rati Jha v. Emperor (9), but the former case dealt more particularly with the provisions of section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, and the latter treats the matter as concluded and gives no reason for the decision arrived at. In these circumstances I can see no reason for taking a different view on this question to that taken by this Court consistently since 1889.

DEBI MAHTO v. EMPEROR.

I have also had my attention drawn to Karim Baksh v. Mul Chand (10), but I cannot see that that case is to the point—probably in those times there was a Court of the Judicial Assistant and the Madras decision relied on in that case seems to have been discussed and distinguished by Plowden, J., in Phina Singh v. Empress (1).

I have been unable to find the ruling cited as 5 A. L. J. 17.* No doubt section 18 of the Punjab Courts Act, 1914, establishes certain classes of Courts, among which are (a) the Court of the Subordinate Judge and (b) the Court of the Munsif. In precisely the same way section 6 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1908, provides for the establishing of certain classes of Courts, among which is to be found the Court of "Magistrate of the 1st class." As was held in Phina Singh v. Empress (1) with regard to the Courts of Magistrates and in Muhammad Ishaq v. Mugim-ud-Din (5) with regard to the Courts of Subordinate Judges, I hold that there is no Court of a Munsif of the 1st class as a permanent Court with a perpetual succession of Judges, and that on the transfer of a Munsif from a District, the Court of the Munsif who takes over the pending work is not identical with the Court of the Munsif who has been transferred. It follows, therefore, that in the present case Mr. Raghbir Singh was acting beyond his jurisdiction when he granted the sanction under consideration.

Whether or not this illegality (or irregularity as Mr. Tek Chand would call it) could be cured by section 537, Criminal Procedure Code, is doubtful and as at present advised I do not think it could [Subrahmaniya Ayyar v. King-Emperor (11)], but I do not see how I can ignore this illegality when it has been brought to my notice before the trial has concluded.

I accordingly set aside the sanction granted by Mr. Raghbir Singh on the 11th June 1915 and quash the proceedings that have been commenced under it.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 7 of 1916.

May 25, 1916.

Present:—Mr. Justice Roe and Mr Justice Jwala Prasad.

DEBI MAHTO—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 476—Order directing prosecution on result of findings in civil proceeding—Appeal, pendency of, against findings—Stay of criminal proceedings, expediency of.

Proceedings in a Criminal Court initiated as the result of an order by a Court under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, should be stayed pending the disposal of an appeal against the order or decree in respect of which the order was passed under the section. [p. 478, col. 1.]

The Court to which the application for stay of proceedings is presented, should not prejudge the appeal by making any declaration as to the correctness or otherwise of the order appealed against to determine whether the prosecution should be postponed or not, but should leave it to the Court which has cognizance of the appeal, staying proceedings meantime. [p. 478, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Saran, dated the 16th March 1916.

Mr. Rajendra Prasad, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—In this case one Debi Mahto applied for a succession certificate in the matter of the estate of one Raghbir Mahto. This certificate was granted ex parte, but upon the application of one Sadhu Mahto was subsequently revoked. In the course of proceedings upon Sadhu Mahto's application for revocation, the learned Judge found, not only that Debi's allegation that he was the nearest heir of Raghbir was not proved, but also that it was conclusively shown that Debi Mahto was not related to Raghbir in any way. He, therefore, ordered enquiry under section 476 to be made and, on the result of that enquiry, directed the prosecution of Debi Mahto under sections 193 and 209.

Debi Mahto has filed an appeal to this Court, one of the grounds of the appeal being that the finding of the learned District Judge on the essential issue of fact was an erroneous finding. He now comes to this Court with a prayer that the proceedings in the Magistrate's Court at Saran in the matter of the prosecution of Debi Mahto be stayed, pending the result of the appeal to this Court. No one appears against the Rule issued upon the District Magistrate. The District Magistrate has himself written showing cause why the application should not be granted. In the course of that letter he says that in view of the fact "that justice delayed means too often justice denied", and in view of the fact that there is a danger of Debi Mahto's tampering with the witnesses for the prosecution, this Court should not interfere with the present proceedings, unless it is patent upon the face of the record that the decision of the learned Judge is wrong. While fully sympathising with the learned Magistrate in his desire to dispose quickly of the cases in the Courts subordinate to him, we must point out that the point of view of the learned Magistrate is clearly a wrong point of view. It may be that this Court should not postpone a prosecution of this nature, if it is satisfied that the finding of the District Judge is clearly right. But to make such a declaration would be to prejudge an issue which is likely to come before another Bench. That Bench may decide that Debi Mahto's story is true and that he is the nearest heir. Debi Mahto may succeed in his civil appeal and take out a succession certificate, and also suffer rigorous imprisonment for having made an application to do so. We are not prepared to prejudge the issue by saying that Debi Mahto's appeal has no chance of success. We order that the proceedings against him under sections 193 and 209 be stayed, pending a final finding of fact by this Court.

That this was the view taken by the District Judge is clear from the order made by him on the 14th April 1916, in which he says that Debi Mahto, if he wishes the proceedings to be stayed, should appeal and obtain an order from the Appellate Court staying proceedings.

We note that proceedings in regard to this matter have also been taken against Ambica Lall and Mahadeo Rai, on a charge of abetting the institution of a false proceeding under section 209 read with section 109. We direct that this proceeding be also stayed pending the hearing of the appeal of Debi Mahto.

We direct the Registrar to take such steps as may be necessary for expediting the civil appeal of Debi Mahto.

Proceedings stayed.

Disease is a thing to be combated, and descriptions of it, with cures suggested, printed in a paper intended to reach sufferers and doctors and not likely to come into the hands of others are not criminal. On the other hand, descriptions of defective sexual enjoyment, with advice for heightening and prolonging such enjoyment in the case of normal persons, should be kept out of public prints, as they amount to incentives to sensuality. JUDGMENT.

JOHNSTONE, J.—The accused persons are Thakar Datt and Devi Chand, respectively Proprietor, and Printer and Editor of the "Desh Upkarak." They were arraigned under section 292, Indian Penal Code, on account of alleged obscenity in the issues of 18th August, 1st September and 8th September of 1915, but have been acquitted by the learned District Magistrate. Against this acquittal Government has appealed, and we have read the evidence, examined the obnoxious passages and heard arguments of Counsel. The District Magistrate, marshalling the points in favour of the accused, lays stress upon (a) the fact that the paper is not sold about the streets (or apparently through newsagents), but only to some 485 subscribers, whose names are to be found in a register, (b) that the questions and answers objected to all relate to concrete questions of human health and seem to the Magistrate bona fide; (c) that, though matters of this sort are in the west looked upon as too private to be blazoned in a paper that may be seen by thousands, "in the east modesty is of a different texture," a proposition which he illustrates by two examples based on his own observation; ($\frac{c}{1}$) that much good is done; (d) that, though the publication is cheap, one anna a copy, it is on much the same footing as the well-known English books of family medicine, which do not inflame the imagination of the average purchasing father of a family, though they might have this effect in the case of a prurient schoolboy; (e) that on the face of it there is no reason "to suppose that they (the objectionable passages) are written with intention to corrupt or deprave."

Mr. Herbert attacks this reasoning, but, before stating his line of attack, it is as well to hear what Mr. Shafi has said by way of supplement to the District Magistrate's views. Mr. Shafi's arguments may be summarised thus:—(f) The paper is called Tibbi Akhbar on first page, is wholly devoted to medical subjects, contains no news or articles on non-medical subjects and has no advertisements; shewing that it appeals solely to medical practitioners and actual sufferers.

(g) A publication does not come within the purview of such a law as that in section 292, Indian Penal Code, unless it causes general demoralisation or real danger to public morals—Russell on Crimes, Volume II, page 1878, paragraph 5.

(h) In many periodicals and books of the medical kind are to be found innumerable passages much more objectionable from the point of view of the general reader than the passages complained of here, and, so far as is known, no prosecutions have been launched against those papers—e.g., "British Medical Journal," page 1587, dated December 16th, 1905; "Medical World" (American), page 445, dated October 1909; "Charaka Samhita" (Indian), subscribed to by the Government of India, page 1077 of A. D. 1910; "The M. S. Journal," an Indian monthly, of 15th March 1909, page 95; "Practical Medicine," page 194, of September 1915;

(i) In the passages objected to can be found no descriptions of "lurid scenes or passions," the phraseology is careful and restrained and so technical as to be unintelligible to the casual reader, and only actual cases with symptoms, history and treatment are touched upon.

(j) All sorts of diseases are discussed in the paper and not only sexual matters.

(k) The paper has been in existence for thirteen years and has always been run on the same lines. On this ground and also because other publications of a more objectionable character have escaped prosecution, the accused might reasonably have been under the impression that they were not transgressing the law, which deals with a matter incapable of mathematical discrimination and the application of which is always difficult and must always depend on the personal equation of the Judge.

(l) This Court should not set aside an acquittal save in very exceptional cases and to remedy a clear miscarriage of justice: Emperor v. Kiru (1), a Lahore case, which we think might well be printed in the Punjab Record.

Some of these arguments Mr. Herbert has no difficulty in meeting. For example he rightly argues that section 292, Indian Penal Code, makes no exception in favour of books and papers only sold to registered subscribers, nor does it extend immunity on the ground of the publisher having no *intention to corrupt or deprave, or because the publication is a "medical" one. He is also right in saying that, if the passages under consideration are "obscene" within the meaning of the law, the mere fact that other persons have published "obscene" matter with impunity is no defence, though it might indirectly affect the question of quantum of punishment; and he is on safe ground also in contending that obscene passages are not excused because the rest of the publication is unobjectionable*. But as regards the other arguments set forth by the District Magistrate and Mr. Shafi, we hardly think a sufficiently strong case has been made out for interference.

No doubt section 292 says nothing about intention, or about medical works, or about agency for distribution, or about immunity because only concrete cases are dealt with; but these points nevertheless have a bearing on the problem. We think this publication is not shown actually to reach the general public. On the face of it the paper is one that would not be subscribed to except by medical men or by sufferers from disease; and we cannot assume that the morals of such persons would suffer from what they read in this paper, which, in the absence of general news or writing on ordinary journalistic topics, would not appeal to the man in the street. We have had the obnoxious passages carefully translated, and have anxiously scrutinised the wording, and we find that for the most part highly technical and unusual arabic words are employed, some of which would convey little or nothing to the average reader. There is no attempt at what might be called lewd writing, though, of course, some of the things discussed are in their nature disgusting; and, in short, we cannot find anything distinctly calculated to incite a reader to indulge in acts of indecency or immorality. The only point we would like to emphasize for the future guidance of the Editor is one in connection with which we find he has at least reached the limits of decency and has written of things which many might think—and not altogether without reason—should not appear in a public print. We would like to see a distinction drawn between (i) descriptions of disease, with remedies and treatment therefor, and (ii) description of defective sexual enjoyment, with advice for heightening and prolonging such enjoyment in the case of normal persons. Disease is a thing to be combated; and descriptions of it with cures suggested, printed in a paper intended to reach sufferers and doctors and not likely to come into the hands of others, are not criminal; but advice of the kind mentioned in (ii) above is on a different footing and should be kept out of public prints, as it amounts to an incentive to sensuality. In the present case we do not go further than this that two or three of the passages under consideration come dangerously near the boundary line between the above categories, even if they do not overstep that line.

It will be useful to note some of the remaining principal authorities on this difficult subject. In Reg. v. Hicklin (2) at page 371 Lord Chief Justice Cockburn said: "The test of obscenity is this, whether the tendency of the matter charged... is to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influences and into whose hands a publication of this sort may fall. Now, with regard to this work it is quite certain that it would suggest to the minds of the young of either sex, or even to persons of more advanced years, thoughts of a most impure and libidinous character."

That case was noticed in Queen-Empress v. Parashram Yashvant (3), a ruling arising out of a reference by a Sessions Judge asking that a conviction regarding certain pictures should be set aside. The learned Bench refused to interfere, remarking that the law leaves to the Magistrate "the question of obscenity, which is very much one of fact."

The whole question is discussed in Volume I of Gour's Penal Law of India under section 292, Indian Penal Code, where, inter alia, intention is held to be immaterial and the question is said to be one of fact and not of law. At page 1052 the law as laid down in the well-known Bradlaugh and Besant case (4), making criminal the publication of a book advocating checks on conception and explaining the means, is, on the strength of a Bombay unreported case, found not to be the law in India. We are far from endorsing this view, as we have already indicated above.

NASIRUDDIN SIRCAR v. GOFURUDDIN MOHAMED.

Our conclusion, then, is that we should not interfere and this appeal is dismissed.

LEROSSIGNOL, J.—I agree with all that the learned Chief Judge has written above. The difficulty of applying the law in cases of this nature is very considerable, for in one sense most medical treatises contain obscene chapters.

In particular I concur heartily with the learned Chief's remarks on the advertisements of aphrodisiacs for use by normal persons, and I trust that the respondent will take warning therefrom, for the advertisements are essentially obscene and respondent escapes punishment solely by reason of the technical and recondite terms he employs.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 107, 145—Concurrent proceedings—Order under s. 145 after passing order under s. 107—Jurisdiction.

Proceedings under sections 107 and 145, Criminal Procedure Code, may go on concurrently between the same parties. [p. 481, col. 2.]

A Magistrate by reason of having passed an order under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, does not lose his jurisdiction to make an order under section 145 in proceedings pending before him, though the order may be defective on other grounds. [p. 481, col. 2.]

Emperor v. Abbas, 12 Ind. Cas. 833; 39 C. 150; 14 C. L. J. 429; 12 Cr. L. J. 569; 16 C. W. N. 83, referred to.

Babu Monmotha Nath Mookerjee, for the Petitioner.

Babus Bankim Ohandra Sen and Profulla Charan Chatterjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a petition was presented for proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, by the first party on 8th September 1915. On 15th September 1915, the same Magistrate passed orders against both the parties in this case under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, binding them down to keep the peace for one year. It should be stated that the parties are relations and co-sharers and are now apparently at logger heads. In spite of the order under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, the section 145 proceedings continued. Both the parties filed their written statements. One we have before us of 29th September 1915. That was the petition of the 2nd party, one of whom is the petitioner before us. In that the second party did not plead any want of jurisdiction in the Magistrate by reason of the order under section 107. On the contrary they pleaded that they had done nothing which was likely to lead to a breach of the peace. The proceedings continued before the Magistrate, the first hearing taking place on 28th October and the final order being passed on 11th December. The Magistrate ultimately found that neither party was in actual possession of the land in dispute and so he passed an order under section 146, Criminal Procedure Code. It is argued for the petitioner before us—who is one of the second party—that the Magistrate having passed an order under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, had no jurisdiction to continue the proceedings under section 145. It appears clear from the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Emperor v. Abbas (1) that there would be no want of jurisdiction in such a case. The Court there said: "Whether after proceeding under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, it will be proper for a Magistrate to act under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, must depend on the circumstances of each case as it arises. It may be that after an order under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, no likelihood of a breach of the peace would continue." That contemplates that proceedings under both sections may go on concurrently. It may be that the order of the Magistrate was defective in this particular that he did not, so far as his judgment shows, consider what the effect would be upon the parties of the order under section 107. This, however, would not affect his jurisdiction, though it might affect the propriety of the order which he passed. In this case, however, it is clear that both parties, with full knowledge of that order, went on with the section 145 proceedings, each hoping, no doubt, to get an order of possession in its favour. In this neither party was successful. We do not think that, under these circumstances, it is a case in which this Court ought to interfere. The sooner the parties have recourse to the Civil Court to settle their differences with regard to this property the better. The Rule is discharged.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898, ss. 195, 109, 439—Sanction to prosecute—Magistrate exercising jurisdiction in one district, whether can delegate powers to Magistrate in another district—False statements made in ultra vires proceedings—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 193.

A Magistrate exercising jurisdiction in one district has no jurisdiction to make an enquiry into the sufficiency of security required under section 109, Criminal Procedure Code, by a Magistrate of another district. Therefore, persons making false statements in the course of such enquiry cannot be prosecuted for perjury under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 483, col. 1.]

Obiter.—The inquiry by the former Magistrate would be illegal even if the latter were to authorise it. [p. 482, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Multan, dated the 17th June 1913, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge and Magistrate, 1st class, Muzaffargarh, dated the 7th March 1916, granting sanction for prosecution of the petitioner.

FACTS.—Sardar Taj Mohammad Khan, Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Bhakkar in Mianwali District, passed an order against certain vagrants to give security of Rs. 500 each under section 109, Criminal Procedure Code. Ghulam Haidar and Ghulam Kadir stood sureties for them.

As the sureties were residents of Muzaffargarh District, they were asked to appear before the District Judge, Muzaffargarh. On 12th January 1916, they and the witness K. stated before Sheikh Rukn-ud-din, Sub-Judge, Muzaffargarh, that the sureties had property sufficient to meet the Government demand in case of forfeiture of the bonds.

On the request of the District Superintendent of Police, the said Sub-Judge of Muzaffargarh made further inquiry and after sending for the report from the Tahsildar of Muzaffargarh he found that the statements of the sureties and the witness were false; consequently on 7th March 1916, he gave permission under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, to prosecute the sureties and the witness under section 193, Indian Penal Code, for intentionally making false statements.

They then applied to the learned Sessions Judge to cancel the order, but on 17th June 1916 he rejected the application. Hence an application for revision to the Chief Court.

Lala Hargopal, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—There is nothing whatever on the record to show what authority Sheikh Rukn-ud-Din, Subordinate Judge, 1st class, Muzaffargarh, had for taking down the statement on oath of the petitioner and the two sureties, Ghulam Kadir and Ghulam Haidar, in connection with the security bonds executed by the two last-named persons on behalf of the vagrants against whom an order under section 109, Criminal Procedure Code, was passed by Sardar Taj Muhammad Khan, Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Bhakkar. There is no order of Sardar Taj Muhammad Khan delegating to Sheikh Rukn-ud-din the duty of inquiring into the sufficiency of the security tendered by Ghulam Kadir and Ghulam Haidar; and even if such an order had been passed by Sardar Taj Muhammad Khan, it would have been bad in law and Sheikh Rukn-ud-din's proceedings connected with the inquiry into the sufficiency of the security would have been ultra vires: see Emperor Kaim Khan (1) and Mahala v. Emperor (2).

Sheikh Rukn-ud-din had, therefore, no authority under the Code of Criminal Procedure to take down the statements of the petitioner and the two sureties after administering an oath to them; and it follows that the sanction granted by him for the prosecution of these persons for an offence under section 193, Indian Penal Code, is illegal. I accordingly accept this revision and set aside the order of Sheikh Rukn-ud-din, dated the 7th March 1916, and that of the Sessions Judge, Multan, dated the 17th June 1916.

In exercise of my revisional jurisdiction I also quash orders of the same date so far as they affect the sureties, Ghulam Kadir and Ghulam Haidar; and the proceedings in the Magistrate's Court under section 193, Indian Penal Code, against these three persons, the petitioner and the sureties, are hereby set aside.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 420—Cheating, elements of—Inducement to execute document, whether offence—Charge, framing of—Practice.

In a case of cheating it must be shown exactly how the complainant has, in the first instance, been misled and what loss he has suffered, or what attempt to obtain a benefit to his prejudice has been made by the accused. [p. 484, col. 1.]

A decree-holder in a certain suit in consideration of the judgment-debtor executing two bonds promised to get a postponement of the sale and the judgment-debtor accordingly executed the bonds which, to the knowledge of both were for fictitious amounts. The decree-holder failed to obtain the postponement and retained the bonds in his possession. He was charged by the judgment-debtor with the offence of cheating under section 420, Indian Penal Code:

Held, that the offence of cheating was not made out as the failure to get a postponement of the sale was only a breach of contract for which the decree-holder was liable in damages for any loss proved to have been caused to the judgment-debtor and the retention of the bonds was not an offence by itself. [p. 484, col. 2.]

It is not an offence to induce a person to execute a document, unless it is shown that the inducement was made by some false or fraudulent representation. [p. 483, col. 2.]

A charge of cheating was drawn up as "that you on.....cheated and induced him to execute two documents in favour of.....":

Held, that the frame-work of the charge showed no offence at all. [p. 483 col. 2.]

In a criminal trial there is less difficulty and less liability to error if the Court throughout the trial keeps before it the frame-work of the charge in order to see whether the evidence fits into it. [p. 483, col. 2.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Budaun.

Messrs. C. Ross Alston and Satya Chandra Mukerji, for the Applicants.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This conviction cannot be sustained. It is perhaps better, rather than to attempt to speculate as to the true interpretation of these proceedings, to see whether the charge, as stated, is made out by the evidence. Now the charge, as originally framed, was in these terms:—that you, that is, the present appellants, on the 18th of February 1906, cheated Lal Singh and induced him to execute two documents in favour of Niranjana Lal and Ishwari Prasad. So stated there is no offence in law at all. There are considerable gaps in the statement. It is not a crime to induce a person to execute a document. It has to be shown that the inducement was made by some false or fraudulent representation, if the charge is that you induced him to do it for the purpose of cheating. Nor is it alleged in the charge in what way, when the documents were executed, he would be a loser and the accused would be the gainers. In complicated matters of this kind nothing is more important than that the Criminal Court trying the case should, either by itself or through the prosecution, frame the process with the nature of the fraudulent inducement which constituted the fraudulent intent and the alleged resultant gain to the accused which constitutes the cheating. There is less difficulty and less liability to error if the Court throughout the trial keeps before it the frame-work of the charge, in order to see whether the evidence fits into it. Now in this case the frame-work of the charge shows no criminal offence at all, but the judgment of the Appellate Court does state, in more or less precise language, what it believed the complaint to be. The statement of the charge and the judgment is this, that Niranjana Lal promised that if the complainant would execute two documents for a total of Rs. 1,200 he would get the sale postponed. Assuming that to be the correct interpretation of the object for which these bonds were executed, the failure to obtain the postponement was no more than a breach of duty or a breach of contract on the part of the decree-holder, which rendered him liable to deliver up the bonds and possibly, if any loss had been suffered by the failure to postpone, to pay damages to the judgment-debtor. What appears to have happened afterwards is this: that being in possession of these bonds (whether or not he ever intended to use them for the purpose of obtaining a postponement is for this purpose immaterial), after promising to return them he retained them in his possession, apparently contemplating making some future use of them. Whether if he had attempted to do so, that in itself would have been an offence against the criminal law, or would have been sufficient evidence of his proposed fraudulent intent, it is not necessary to discuss; because before he made any attempt to make use of them, the complainant was too quick for him and brought a suit for the cancellation of the bonds. Whatever defence the decree-holder set up in that suit has no bearing on this charge. To my mind the obtaining of the bonds either under a pretence of attempting to obtain a postponement of the sale or with a bona fide intention of using them for that purpose, has the same result so far as this charge is concerned. I have read through the evidence of the complainant and it is only fair to say that he did not attempt either to say or to suggest that he had been cheated by anybody. He was, no doubt, aggrieved at the non-postponement of the sale and at being compelled to bring a suit for the return of the bonds, but according to his own statement, the bonds were perfectly worthless and the moment it appears that they were given for fictitious amounts, and were given to his knowledge for fictitious amounts for the purpose of obtaining the postponement, the fictitious nature of the consideration ceases to have any bearing upon the criminal intent or alleged criminal intent of the decree-holder in obtaining it. The Appellate Court realised that criminal intent ought to be established. It discussed four witnesses who were called to establish it and dismissed them with contempt. It then proceeded, as far as I follow its judgment, to draw the conclusion that the decree-holder's intention was fraudulent, because the debts for which the bonds were executed were fictitious. To my mind that is clearly immaterial. They were fictitious to the knowledge of the executant, and the bonds in the hands of the decree-holder, the moment the chances of postponing the sale had been lost, were worthless as against the complainant, and it is extremely difficult to say how he was ever cheated or an attempt to cheat was perpetrated by the mere execution of the bonds for fictitious amounts. It may be that the decree-holders pretended to oblige him by obtaining a postponement of the sale and did not in fact do so, being desirous of getting the property for themselves. That, however, is not the charge made against them, and there is no evidence that even if that were so, that the judgment-debtor suffered any loss. It looks to me like one of those cases in which neither the prosecution nor the Court has really ever cleared its mind as to the actual charge which was being made against the accused. Relevant topics have been mixed up with irrelevant topics and the resultant total of prejudice and suspicion has been considered sufficient to justify a conviction for cheating. That will not do. In a case of cheating, it must be shown exactly how the complainant has, in the first instance, been misled and what loss he has suffered, or what attempt to obtain a benefit to his prejudice was made by the accused. I think the conviction must be reversed and the accused acquitted. I, therefore, acquit all the accused and order them to be forthwith released. The bail-bonds of all the appellants are discharged.

Conviction set aside.

power to inflict a penalty for abuse of discipline but only to recommend to the High Court the course to be taken. It is neither civil nor criminal, but purely designed for the purpose of discipline. [p. 455, col. 2; p. 486, col. 2.]

Proceedings under section 14 of the Act cannot be transferred under section 24, Civil Procedure Code, read with section 141 of the Code or by virtue of the powers of superintendence vested in the High Courts under section 107 of the Government of India Act. [p. 485, col. 2; p. 486, cols. 1 & 2.]

Neither section 24 nor section 141, Civil Procedure Code, applies to the Legal Practitioners Act, because the proceedings under the latter Act are not civil proceedings in a Court of civil jurisdiction to which alone the Civil Procedure Code is applicable. [p. 485, col. 2; p. 486, col. 1.]

Section 141, Civil Procedure Code, is controlled in its operation and effect by the concluding words of the section, which limit its application to proceedings in any Court exercising civil jurisdiction. The procedure under the Legal Practitioners Act is self-contained. [p. 486, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Mullick, J.—The terms of section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act make it incumbent that the enquiry under the section should be made by the presiding officer of the Court. It cannot be delegated or transferred to another officer who is not the presiding officer of the Court in which the malpractices complained of were committed. [p. 486, col. 1.]

Without expressing any opinion as to the applicability of section 107 of the Government of India Act, it is sufficient to say that the High Court should not interfere with the progress of an enquiry in which nothing final can be done by the presiding officer. [p. 486, col. 1.]

Per Atkinson, J.—The 'general superintendence' vested in the High Court under section 107 of the Government of India Act applies only to cases where a subordinate officer, be he a Judge or otherwise, acts without jurisdiction or in excess of jurisdiction. When a duly constituted officer acting within jurisdiction makes a charge and proceeds to hold an enquiry, the High Court will not interfere under the Statute unless he has grossly abused his powers. [p. 486, col. 2.]

Petition against the order of the District Judge, Darbhanga, dated the 25th July 1916.

Mr. S. Sinha (with him Mr. Rajendra Prasad), for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—The petitioners in these three Rules are Legal Practitioners against whom proceedings under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act were taken by the Munsif of Samastipur. After the proceedings were taken, but before any evidence was recorded, the petitioners moved the District Judge for the transfer of the inquiry from the Court of the Munsif to some other Court. The District Judge, while holding that he was competent to order a transfer under section 24 of the Civil Procedure Code, found that the balance of convenience was in favour of the inquiry being held by the Munsif, and he accordingly declined to transfer the proceedings from the file of the Munsif to that of any other officer. The petitioners then came to us and obtained these Rules directing the Munsif to shew cause through the District Judge why the proceedings should not be transferred. Cause has now been shewn, and learned Counsel on behalf of the petitioners has argued their cases very fully and ably before us.

The first point urged is, that the learned Munsif is wrong in maintaining that this Court has no jurisdiction to direct a transfer under section 24 of the Civil Procedure Code. Now, although the fact that the case of Purna Chunder Pal, In the matter of (1) was, in consequence of a difference between two Judges of a Division Bench, referred to a third Judge under section 575 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, may lead to the inference that in the opinion of the Calcutta High Court a proceeding under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act was subject to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, yet on a careful perusal of the three judgments passed in that case it is quite clear that the precise point whether the Civil Procedure Code was or was not applicable to a proceeding under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act was never considered. In that case two Judges of a Division Bench having disagreed, the Chief Justice referred the matter to a third Judge for final decision; and although in the order of reference mention is made of section 575 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, the point whether that section was really applicable to the proceeding was not raised or argued before any of the learned Judges. Giving my best consideration to the arguments advanced by the learned Counsel before us to day, I have no doubt that the Civil Procedure Code is not applicable to inquiries under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act. The learned Counsel relies upon section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908. In my opinion that section does not apply, for the simple reason that the disciplinary proceedings taken by the Munsif were not proceedings in a Court of civil jurisdiction. I am of opinion that section 141, Civil Procedure Code, does not contemplate an inquiry of an administrative nature, such as is prescribed by section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act.

(1) 27 C. 1023; 4 C. W. N. 389; 14 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 671.

In the matter of JANAK KISHORE.

The learned Counsel then falls back upon section 107 of the Government of India Act of 1915, and he asks us in exercise of our powers of superintendence to interfere and to direct a transfer. Without expressing any opinion as to the applicability of section 107 I think it sufficient to say that in the case before us we ought not to interfere with the progress of an inquiry in which nothing final can be done by the learned Munsif.

But apart from that it is clear that we are precluded from interfering even if we wished to do so by the very terms of section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act, which make it incumbent that the inquiry should be made by the presiding officer of the Court. The section leaves no room for the contention that the inquiry may be delegated or transferred to another officer who is not the presiding officer of the Court in which the malpractices complained of were committed.

In this view of the case I would discharge the rules without costs.

ATKINSON, J.—Mr. Sinha, who argued this case with his usual candour and ability, admitted that the applications in these three cases were instituted under section 24 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and he said under that section these applications came under the words "other proceeding"; that they constituted in effect a proceeding which would give this Court jurisdiction to exercise its power of transferring the proceedings from one Court to another. He supported that argument by a reference to section 141 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But on reading section 141 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it appears to me obvious and plain that that section can have no reference whatsoever to a proceeding instituted under the Legal Practitioners Act of 1879. Section 141 is controlled in its operation and effect by the concluding words of the section, which limit its application to proceedings in any Court exercising civil jurisdiction. Those words are the key-note for the construction of the section itself. In my opinion, it is clear that a proceeding under the Legal Practitioners Act is not a civil proceeding. The intention of the Act of Parliament (sic) was to provide a procedure or remedy of a disciplinary character for practitioners practising in subordinate Courts. It provides a procedure to be followed, and nominates the person who should hold the inquiry and make the charge. It gives no power to inflict any sentence or penalty. It merely gives the power of recommendation, with a safeguard of a very wide right of appeal to the High Court upon the entire evidence that has been taken and upon the recommendations that have been made. The procedure under this Statute is, in my opinion, self-contained. It is neither criminal nor civil, but purely designed for the purpose of discipline in controlling the procedure and the conduct of practitioners practising in subordinate Courts.

Mr. Sinha, finding that the latter argument cannot be sustained, then falls back on section 107 of the Government of India Act, and relies upon the general power of superintendence which that section confers upon the High Court to support his present application. I am not at all too sure that he has not, in the course of his argument, given far too wide an interpretation to the words "general superintendence"; because, as I gather, in this Court it has now been held that superintendence applies only to cases where a subordinate officer, be he Judge or otherwise, acts without jurisdiction or in excess of jurisdiction. If, having jurisdiction, he decides a case or a fact wrongly, that does not give the High Court jurisdiction under its power of superintendence to interfere with his finding of fact. I ask them, had this officer jurisdiction? I find that he had jurisdiction to enter upon this inquiry. If I find he had jurisdiction to enter upon this inquiry, under the Statute he had power to make the charge he did against these professional gentlemen. How can I then say that section 107 gives us any power to exercise the right of superintendence, irrespective altogether of the argument of my learned brother, who points out that the person who is nominated by Statute is the presiding officer in whose Court the misconduct takes place? Nevertheless I find that a duly constituted officer acting within jurisdiction makes a charge and proceeds to hold an inquiry under the Statute; I cannot say that we have under section 107 that right to interfere, unless we find that he has grossly abused his powers, or that he has acted in excess of his jurisdiction, or done something without jurisdiction. But that is not this case.

Irrespective of the construction that may be put upon section 107 of the Government of India Act, I am of opinion that it is not open to the parties at this stage of the proceedings to entirely amend or frame a new application which was not the application on which they came before the Court and on which they obtained their Rule. Suffice it to say that under section 24 I am of opinion that this application is not sustainable and it should be dismissed without the usual penalty.

Application dismissed.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 476, 177, 195—“Brought to its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding,” meaning of—S. 476, scope of—Offence committed in another province—Jurisdiction—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 209, 210.

Per Chamier, C. J.—Section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not appear to restrict the action of the Court to offences committed within its own jurisdiction or even within the province in which the Court is situated. [p. 438, col. 2.]

Per Sharfuddin, J.—Section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, is a self-contained section and the reference made to section 195 of the Code is only for the purpose of avoiding the enumeration of the sections mentioned in section 195. The most important element in section 476 is that the offences referred to in section 195 should either be committed before the prosecuting Court or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding, when that Court may proceed as provided by section 476. [p. 439, col. 1.]

If an offence has been committed, no matter where, and if in the course of a judicial proceeding it is brought to the notice of a Court that such an offence has been committed, that Court has jurisdiction to proceed under section 476. [p. 439, col. 1.]

Petitioner instituted a suit at Bilaspur against a resident of Arrah and obtaining a decree, sought to execute it at Arrah by means of a transfer. The judgment-debtor then instituted a suit at Arrah to have the decree of the Bilaspur Court set aside, on the ground that it had been obtained by fraud. The suit was decreed, and petitioner's appeal to the District Judge, Arrah, was dismissed. The District Judge, finding that the petitioner had brought a false suit and had obtained a decree by fraud and by tampering with the service of summonses, etc., directed his prosecution under sections 209, 210, Indian Penal Code:

Held, that the District Judge had jurisdiction to take action against petitioner under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, as the offences alleged to have been committed by him were brought to the notice of the District Judge in the course of a judicial proceeding. Criminal revision against an order of the District Judge, Shahabad, dated the 4th February 1916.

JUDGMENT.

CHAMIER, C. J.—This is an application for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge of Arrah, directing the prosecution of the three applicants for offences under sections 209 and 210 of the Indian Penal Code.

The first applicant brought a suit in a Small Cause Court at Bilaspur in the Central Provinces against Ramkesawar Koir, a resident of the Arrah district in this province, and obtained a decree ex parte. The decree was at his instance transferred for execution to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Arrah and application was made for the arrest of the judgment-debtor. The latter then brought a suit in the Court of the 1st Munsif of Arrah to have the Bilaspur decree set aside on the ground of fraud and obtained a decree which was confirmed on appeal by the District Judge of Arrah. The learned Judge directed the prosecution of the three applicants for offences under sections 209 and 210 of the Indian Penal Code, as he found on the evidence that they had combined to bring a false suit against Ramakesawar Koir and had obtained a decree against him by concealing from him the institution of the proceedings and tampering with the service of summonses.

An appeal has been presented to this Court against the decision of the District Judge in the civil case and has been admitted.

RAJKUMAR SINGH v. EMPEROR.

The first ground on which the order under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure has been challenged is that the first Munsif of Arrah had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit to set aside a decree passed by a Court in another province. In view of the decision in Jawahir v. Neki Ram (1) in which I took part and the authorities there cited, I doubt whether there is much force in this contention. But we are not now concerned with the question of the jurisdiction of the Munsif, for there can be no doubt that the District Judge of Arrah had jurisdiction to entertain an appeal against the Munsif's decision. The hearing of the appeal by the District Judge was a judicial proceeding and the offences alleged to have been committed by the three applicants were brought to his notice in the course of that proceeding.

The second point taken is that section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure should be read with section 195 of the same Code, and that the words in the former section "any offence referred to in section 195" mean only the offences mentioned in that section which are committed under the qualifying circumstances mentioned in that section, i. e., to come to the particular case before us, the contention is that section 476 does not authorise a Court to take action in respect of offences under sections 209 and 210 of the Indian Penal Code, unless those offences were committed in or in relation to a proceeding in a Court. This is a matter upon which there has been some difference of opinion. On one side are the decisions in In re Derji (2), In re Keshav Narayan Manolkar (3) and Akhil Chandra Sen v. Queen-Empress (4), while on the other are the decisions in Abdul Khadar v. Meera Saheb (5) and Jadumandan Singh v. Emperor (6), in which the Court endeavoured to distinguish the case of Akhil Chandra Sen v. Queen-Empress (4) from the case then before it. It is unnecessary for us in this case to choose between these two conflicting views, for the offences supposed to have been committed by the applicants were committed, if at all, in a proceeding in a Court—the case against them being that they fraudulently brought a false suit or claim in a Court and fraudulently obtained a decree for a sum which was not due. So far as this point is concerned, it must be held that the District Judge had jurisdiction to take action against the applicants under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The third point taken is that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to take action in respect of offences committed outside the local jurisdiction of his Court, and reliance is placed upon section 177 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. No authority has been produced in support of this contention and there are at least two reported cases in which Courts took action in respect of offences committed in another district or province. [See Girwar Prashad v. Emperor (7) and Kamta Prasad v. Emperor (8)]. Section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not appear to restrict the action of the Court to offences committed within its own jurisdiction or even within the province in which the Court is situated. In my opinion, the District Judge of Arrah had jurisdiction to take action in this case under section 476.

In the last resort it was urged that criminal proceedings should not be taken against the applicants until the second appeal to this Court has been disposed of.

• It may be undesirable to allow criminal proceedings to be taken during the pendency of civil proceedings in which the same question of fact is in issue, but that is not the case here. In the appeal to this Court the question for decision is whether the Munsif of Arrah had jurisdiction to entertain a suit to set aside the Bilaspur decree. Even if the appeal is allowed on that ground, the applicants should be prosecuted if they fraudulently brought a false claim and fraudulently obtained a decree for a sum which was not due to them.

I would reject this application.

This order will govern Civil Revision No. 9 of 1916 also.

SHARFUDDIN, J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of the learned Chief Justice and, fully agreeing with the views expressed therein, I desire to observe that it appears to me, from the wording of section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, that it is a self-contained section and that the reference made to section 195 of the Code is only for the purpose of avoiding the enumeration of the sections mentioned in section 195. The most important element in section 476 is that the offences referred to in section 195 should either be committed before the prosecuting Court or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding, when that Court may proceed as provided by section 476. It is clear, therefore, that if an offence has been committed, no matter where, and if in the course of a judicial proceeding it is brought to the notice of a Court that such an offence has been committed, that Court has jurisdiction to proceed under section 476. Learned Counsel on behalf of the appellant urged that the words "brought to its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding" mean that the offence should have been committed in reference to the judicial proceeding then pending in that Court. In the present case, the false case was instituted in one of the towns of the Central Provinces and an ex parte decree was obtained by the plaintiff of that suit from the Central Provinces Court. That decree was attempted to be executed in the District of Shahabad, on a transfer. It was then that the defendant of that suit for the first time came to know that such a decree had been passed against him by the Central Provinces Court. It appears that the decree-holder, who is now the petitioner, obtained that decree by suppression of the summons in the Shahabad District. It was then that the defendant of that suit instituted a suit in the Munsif's Court at Arrah for a declaration that the ex parte decree was obtained by fraudulent means. The Munsif of Arrah gave a decree to the plaintiff of this suit, on which there was an appeal to the District Judge. There can be no doubt that this appeal lay to the District Court. The hearing of this appeal by the District Court was a judicial proceeding, and in the course of this judicial proceeding it was brought to the notice of that Court that the present petitioner had obtained an ex parte decree against the opposite party by suppression of the summons in the District of Shahabad; and hence I am of opinion that the Arrah District Court had jurisdiction to put the law in motion under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and the application on the above ground is rejected.

Application rejected.

Jurisdiction—Magistrate, sweeping prohibitory order of—Closing burial place—Omission to record provision of law—Ultra vires.

A District Magistrate acts without jurisdiction in issuing a sweeping public prohibitory order without referring to any provision of law as authorising such an order. [p. 489, col. 2.]

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge, Broach.

FACTS.—The District Magistrate of Broach issued orders prohibiting on sanitary grounds the burial of corpses in a place previously used by the public for the purpose. On the petition of the applicant the following order of reference was made by the Sessions Judge of Broach:—

"As remarked by Heaton, J., in Bhagubhai Dwarkadas v. Emperor (1), 'the District Magistrate has no power whatever to issue a prohibitory order to the public unless that power is specifically conferred by some provision of the law:' see also the observations in the case of Queen-Empress v. Saminadha Pillai (2). In the present case, the District Magistrate has not stated anywhere under what provision of law the notice was issued. The learned Public Prosecutor relied upon section 39, clause (1), of the District Police Act (IV of 1890). That section, however, merely authorises the District Magistrate to 'make rules or orders regulating the hours during which and the manner in which any place for the disposal of the dead may be used so as to secure the equal and appropriate application of its advantages and accommodation and to maintain orderly conduct amongst those who resort thereto.' The section nowhere authorises the District Magistrate to prevent the public, either wholly or partially, from using a place previously set apart for the disposal of the dead. Where a place is used both for cremation and burial, it cannot be said that prohibiting its use for burial is 'regulating the manner in which it shall be used so as to secure the equal and appropriate application of its advantages,' etc.

There is also no provision in the Criminal Procedure Code empowering the District Magistrate to issue the prohibitory order in question. The only sections which could conceivably be thought to apply are sections 133 and 143. The former section empowers the District Magistrate to make a conditional order requiring the person causing a nuisance in any public place to remove it within a certain time, or appear on a certain date and move to have the order set aside or modified. Assuming burial in Dashaswamedha site to be a nuisance within the meaning of the section, still the section does not contemplate the issue of a prohibitory order to the public generally, but only to a particular individual [cf. section 144, clause (3)], and the order is, moreover, to be conditional in the first instance and the person to whom it is addressed has to be given an opportunity to be heard before it is made absolute. In the present case, it is obvious that the District Magistrate was not acting under this section, and even if he was, the order would be illegal as the prescribed procedure was not followed.

Next, as to section 144. That section empowers the District Magistrate to 'order any person not to repeat or continue a public nuisance, as defined in the Indian Penal Code or any special or local law.' As observed in Queen Empress v. Saminadha Pillai (2), 'under the section no Magistrate can prohibit what was lawful before the date of his order, and thereby make such an otherwise legal act, committed after the date of the order, punishable as a nuisance under the Indian Penal Code. For he is by that section empowered to enjoin a person from repeating or continuing only a public nuisance as defined in the Indian Penal Code or any special or local law.' The same case lays down that the disposal of a corpse in a place set apart for the purpose is not a public nuisance within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code, so long as the act is performed in a decent and inoffensive way. I am, therefore, of opinion that section 143 cannot also be called in aid here.

The result is that, in my opinion, the District Magistrate's order was made without jurisdiction and is consequently invalid. It seems to me that the Government has advisedly reserved to itself the power to close a place used for the disposal of the dead, as being a matter deeply affecting the religious feelings of a community and requiring deliberation by the highest authority."

Mr. G. N. Thakore, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The District Magistrate in issuing this sweeping public prohibition has omitted to refer to any provision of law as authorising such an order. We are, therefore, left to guess under what authority he conceived himself to be acting, and upon this reference there is no appearance before us in support of the order. For the reasons given in the careful letter of reference by the Sessions Judge, Mr. Taleyar Khan, we are of opinion that the order in question is wholly without jurisdiction. We, therefore, set it aside.

Order set aside.

Four persons of the accused's party were digging a drain. They were attacked by the complainants. Partisans of the parties ran up and a free fight ensued. One of the accused's party was killed and the arm of one of the complainants' party was fractured. The accused were convicted of offences under sections 148 and 325, Indian Penal Code:

Held, that the accused must be acquitted, as there was no safe ground for holding that they acted otherwise than in self-defence either of themselves or of the deceased.

Rai Sahib Lala Mul Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are set forth in Criminal Appeal No. 190 of 1916, and the questions in this appeal are the guilt or innocence of Shah Nawaz's party and the nature of their offence, if any.

There is no serious contention that all the appellants did not take part in the fight and I am satisfied that all were concerned.

The main plea is that they were attacked and acted solely in self-defence.

That they were the assailed I have no doubt, the injuries inflicted by them on the other side were comparatively slight, whilst their side was very seriously handled.

The worst that can be said is that Shah Nawaz, Khuda Yar and Nur Khan must have known that their action in digging the nali was likely to provoke a quarrel: but I cannot find that at the first this side comprised more than four men. When they were attacked, partisans ran up and a free fight ensued, but I can find no safe ground for holding that the appellants acted otherwise than in self-defence either of themselves or of Nur Khan who had been felled to the ground, Nur Khan was killed and the only grievous hurt inflicted on the other side was a fractured arm. In the circumstances I am not prepared to hold that the appellants committed any offence and I acquit them.

JUDGMENT. This is an appeal by the Government of Bombay against an order of the first class Magistrate of Bail-Hongal, who discharged the accused after investigation of a charge of possessing 2,300 lbs of crackers under the Indian Explosives Act, whereas his license only entitled him to possess 200 lbs. The accused imported Chinese crackers of various kinds, and the 2,300 lbs with which we are now concerned are entirely crackers spoken of in the evidence as lavangi-crackers or patakhas, that is to say, clove-shaped crackers. They are strings of very small sticks hardly longer than a clove, each of which, when ignited, emits a small report. The Governor-General-in-Council has issued rules under the Explosives Act, under section 35 of which an explosive shall not be possessed except under and in accordance with the conditions of the license granted under the rules. It is provided, however, by rule 3 that nothing in the rules shall apply to the possession of toy fire-works such as paper caps for toy pistols. The first question we have to determine is whether the clove-crackers in question are explosives. The definition of 'explosives' requires that they should be either for a practical explosive effect or be used to give a pyrotechnic effect. There can be no question, we think, that the crackers in question have no practical explosive effect. They may, however, be fire-works intended to produce a pyrotechnic effect, if that term is used in its broadest possible sense, although the light produced from the explosion of one of these crackers is momentary. But assuming for the purpose of argument without deciding that they might be treated as fire-works falling within rule 5, clause 7, of the statutory definition, we think that they should be treated as "toy fire-works" within the rule just mentioned. As such they will be exempt from rule 35 imposing the necessity of a license. We, therefore, think that the learned Magistrate came to the right conclusion. We may observe that there is no technical evidence whatever as to these fire-works, and the only knowledge of their effect which we have been able to obtain has been from the ignition of one of them in Court during the progress of the arguments. We dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

ATKINSON, J.—This reference comes before us under sections 13 and 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act. The facts of the case are very short. A mukhtear by name Leakut Hussain apparently practises his profession as a mukhtear at Shahabad. He is a certified mukhtear under the Statute and Rules made pursuant thereto. The offence with which he is charged is one involving professional misconduct, in that he purported to file a petition on behalf of certain decree-holders in an execution matter then pending before the Munsif of that district, alleging on behalf of the decree-holders that the amount of the decree had been paid in full and had been satisfied by the judgment-debtors. That petition was based upon a mukhtarnama purporting to have been executed by one of the judgment-creditors. The mukhtarnama was accepted and acknowledged by this mukhtear Leakut Hussain as having been received by him from the hand of the decree-holder whose name he expressly mentions and is endorsed on the mukhtarnama. It is alleged that he received no instructions from this man Din Dayal or from any one of the decree-holders and in acting as he did he acted in collusion with the judgment-debtors or agents on their behalf. It appears that on the 3rd January 1916 the judgment-debtors had filed a petition in which they objected to execution issuing for the sale of their property, on the ground that they had satisfied by payment the decree of the decree-holders. On the 29th January 1916 the decree-holders filed a petition alleging that their decree had never been satisfied by payment. The 29th was fixed as the date for the hearing of the petition of the 3rd January and upon that date the decree-holders had filed their counter-petition and the matter stood adjourned for the hearing of both petitions until the 5th February. On the 2nd February this man Husain, the party here impleaded, took the step which has involved him in this trouble. It appears when he was examined on the 5th February 1916 that he said that he had got his instructions, not from Din Dayal Rai at all, but from Ambika who was alleged to be in some sort of privity with Din Dayal. This mukhtear also says that Ambika came to him with Din Dayal Rai and that Din Dayal Rai consented to his acting on his behalf, and that the mukhtear in good faith relied upon the representations made to him by Ambika and that, therefore, he was an innocent man; that he had not been guilty of a breach of duty and that he had been imposed upon in pursuance of a conspiracy between Din Dayal and Ambika.

One most significant fact in this case seems to be unaccounted for in the course of the argument on behalf of the mukhtear, and that is the fact that the judgment-debtors never appeared in this case on the 5th February in support of their petition filed on the 3rd January. Their absence is most significant and cannot be accounted for, except on the assumption that they were the moving parties to get this man Husain to file the petition on the 2nd February, which would have dispensed with the hearing of this enquiry on the 5th February itself. It was a bold and daring act of this man to take, because it was an attempt to deceive and mislead the Court. The Court is here to protect all litigants and it is incumbent on the Court and its bounden duty in these matters to see that frauds of this kind are not practised with impunity. The Court's duty must be exercised with care and diligence; otherwise the administration of justice will be paralysed and polluted. You have this mukhtear taking no steps to conform with his obligations and duties under the rules of which he is bound to know the contents; and we must assume that he does know what are the rules and that as a certified officer of this Court he has perused those rules. What are the duties of this mukhtear? One of them is that he must take his instructions directly from his clients, or if from an agent that he is duly empowered to act. But this man Husain took no steps to satisfy himself that the representations made by Ambika were bona fide. I can find no evidence that he made any enquiry and his own statement endorsed on the mukhtarnama itself shews that the man never took any steps to inquire. The endorsement is to the effect that he received the mukhtarnama from the hands of Din Dayal and from no one else. He is pinned to that admission on the 2nd February, the same day that the petition is filed. He says that he got the petition and the mukhtarnama at one and the same time and in doing as he did, he acted innocently though wrongly. We are inclined to think that he was not a party to any express fraud in conjunction with the judgment-debtors; but we do think that he acted in violation of his duty under circumstances which shew the greatest possible negligence on his part. We cannot altogether condone these malpractices and misconduct. There must be a limit. It is a pity that an old man should be the first victim to be sacrificed; but that is his own look-out. It may serve as a warning to others who may be attempted to act as he did. We do not think that this mukhtear Leakut Husain was guilty of express fraud. If we did our duty would be a very painful one indeed. But we do think that he acted negligently, with gross negligence and that for that negligence and in the interests of justice and its purity he must be punished. It is said that the Munsif recommends a suspension of the grant of a certificate for a period of six months. The learned District Judge, Mr. Macpherson, at the time took a most lenient view in favour of this old man grounded upon his age and the possibility that he might not return to work again. But six months had not elapsed from the time that Mr. Macpherson's order was made when this old man had the hardihood again to apply for his certificate. Without that certificate I understand he cannot practise. The question is whether we should give him that certificate now. I, for one, am of opinion that we should not give it to him for a considerable period of time. Bearing in mind all that has been

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order of the District Judge of Chapra, directing the prosecution of the applicants for various offences alleged to have been committed by them in respect of a suit brought by the applicant Lachmi Singh in the Darbhanga District in the Court of a Munsif exercising Small Cause Court powers on the basis of a hand note.

It appears that Lachmi Singh having obtained a decree ex parte caused the decree to be transferred to the Chapra District for execution, and in execution the defendant Brij Mohan Raut was actually arrested in the Chapra District on August 21st, 1913. Brij Mohan Raut then brought a suit in the Court of the 2nd Munsif of Chapra to have the decree obtained by Lachmi Singh set aside on the ground that it had been obtained by fraud. Brij Mohan Raut obtained a decree in June 1914 setting aside the decree. Lachmi Singh appealed but his appeal was dismissed on March 8th, 1915, and a second appeal by him to the High Court was also dismissed on July 13th, 1915. Brij Mohan did not become aware of the order of the High Court dismissing Lachmi Singh's appeal until January 1916. On February 2nd, 1916, he presented an application to the 2nd Munsif of Chapra for sanction to prosecute Lachmi Singh and others who had assisted him in various ways in the false suit. The Munsif dismissed the application. Thereupon Brij Mohan Raut appealed to the District Judge of Chapra, who has ordered the prosecution of Lachmi Singh and others for various offences set out at the end of his order.

The case came before Mr. Justice Roe during the vacation and that learned Judge, thinking that there was some conflict between two rulings of this Court referred the case to this Bench. One of the cases referred to by him was that of Ambica Tewari v. Emperor (1). In that case what was decided was that as no appeal lay to the District Judge against an order of a Small Cause Court rejecting an application for sanction, the District Judge could not at the hearing of the appeal pass an order under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. That case seems to have no bearing on the present case. The other case referred to is Rajkumar Singh v. Emperor (2) decided by this Bench on June 2nd, 1916. In that case we held that the District Judge of Arrah had jurisdiction to direct the prosecution of certain persons in connection with a false suit brought by them in the Central Provinces. It is suggested that the cases against the present applicants cannot be made over to a Magistrate in Chapra for trial inasmuch as the offences were committed in the Darbhanga District. It appears to us that the requirements of section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure have been satisfied. The District Judge's order under section 476 was passed in the course of a judicial proceeding. Certain offences referred to under section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure were brought to his notice in the course of a judicial proceeding and he was, therefore, authorised by section 476 to send the case for enquiry or trial to the nearest Magistrate of the first class. In our opinion, the proper Magistrate at Chapra will have jurisdiction to try the cases which have been sent to him under the order of the District Judge of Chapra.

The only defect in the order of the District Judge is that he has failed to specify the Magistrate to whom the cases are to be sent. On receipt of our order the District Judge will specify the Magistrate to whom the cases are sent in order that the provisions of section 476 may be complied with.

Subject to this, the application is dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 341—Deaf and dumb accused, trial of—Procedure—Conviction.

The law in England as well as in India with regard to the trial of a deaf and dumb person is that though great caution and diligence are necessary in the trial of such a person, yet if it be shown that such person had sufficient intelligence to understand the character of his criminal act he is liable to punishment.

Rex v. Steel, (1887) 1 Leach C. C. 651; Queen v. Bowka Hari, 22 W. R. 35 Cr.; Queen v. Bowka, 22 W. R. 72 Cr.; Queen-Empress v. Reubin Samuel, (1894) Rat. Unrep. Cr. C. 696; Cr. Rg. No. 26 of 1894, referred to.

NARAYANA NADAN v. PALANIAPPA NADAN.

Criminal reference made by the first class Magistrate, at Bhusawal.

Mr. S. S. Patkar (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the accused, a deaf and dumb man, has been convicted of theft under section 380 of the Indian Penal Code, and the proceedings have been submitted to this Court, under section 341 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Section 341 provides that in such a case as this the High Court should pass such orders as it thinks fit. The law in England appears to be that though great caution and diligence are necessary in the trial of a deaf and dumb person, yet if it be shown that such person had sufficient intelligence to understand the character of his criminal act, he is liable to punishment: see Russell on Crimes, Volume I, page 62; Archbold's Criminal Practice, page 11 and Rex v. Steel (1), Queen v. Bowka Hari (2) and Queen v. Bowka (3) Queen-Empress v. Reubin Samuel (4) are authorities to show that the same is the law and practice in India. In this case we are satisfied from the learned Magistrate's judgment that he was right in finding that the accused understood the nature of the act, which he was committing when he committed this theft.

We, therefore, confirm the conviction and sentence the accused to one month's rigorous imprisonment.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195,

NARAYAN NADAN v. PALANIAPPA NADAN

cl. (b) (c)—Sanction, grant of—Case committed to Sessions Court—Statement before Committing Magistrate, sanction by Sessions Judge in respect of, legality of—'In relation to any proceeding in any Court,' meaning of—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 193—Perjury—Contradictory statements, when indictable.

A Sessions Judge has power to grant sanction for perjury in respect of statements made by a witness before a Committing Magistrate, though appeals do not lie to him from the latter's Court within the meaning of clauses (6) and (7) of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code.

Such statements which are brought to the notice of the Sessions Court trying the case are made in relation to the proceedings of the latter Court within the meaning of section 195 (1) (b), Criminal Procedure Code.

Reddi Rami Reddi v. Public Prosecutor of Kurnool, 25 Ind. Cas. 524; (1914) M. W. N. 793; 27 M. L. J. 586; 15 Cr. L. J. 612, distinguished.

High Court Proceedings, dated 17th January 1877, No. 120, 2 Weir 160, followed.

Sanction should not be accorded for prosecution on the ground of contradictory statements, unless there is a direct contradiction, especially when they are immediately corrected and explained.

Petition praying that in the circumstances stated therein the High Court will be pleased to set aside the order of the Sessions Court of Ramnad at Madura, in Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 14 of 1916 (Sessions Case No. 5 of 1916), granting sanction to prosecute the petitioner herein.

Dr. S. Swaminadhan and Messrs. R. Shadagopachariar and V. K. Venkatarama Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Mr. P. R. Narayanasami Iyer, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—In respect of the sanction to prosecute for an offence under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code, there is no evidence on the record that the petitioner knew that there was no just or lawful ground for the charge of arson.

As regards the alternative sanction for perjury, the point is taken that the Sessions Court, not being the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie from the second class Magistrate, could not grant a sanction with respect to statements made before that Magistrate holding the preliminary enquiry.

The case of Reddi Rami Reddi v. Public Prosecutor of Kurnool (1) is no authority for this proposition. In that case the statement was made to a Sub-Magistrate in proceedings under section 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The question does not turn on the construction of clauses 6 and 7 of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure but on clause 1 (b) of that section, and we are satisfied that a statement made before a Committing Magistrate and brought to the notice of the Sessions Court trying the case is made in relation to the proceedings before the latter Court. This is the view taken by this High Court in High Court Proceedings, dated 17th January 1877, No. 120 (2) and has, we believe, been acted on ever since.

With regard to the first set of contradictory statements the Sessions Judge has not correctly set out the language used in the Magistrate's Court, but assuming that it is open to the meaning given to it, the statement was corrected at once in the Court in which it was made.

The Public Prosecutor does not suggest that there is a direct contradiction as regards the third set of statements.

With regard to the second set there is undoubtedly a direct contradiction and we have had grave doubts whether we should not uphold the sanction in this case. The petitioner evidently intended to convey to the Sub-Magistrate that he did not know the accused before the receipt of the letters. In the Sessions Court he frankly admitted at once that he had known him and he gave full details of the nature of his acquaintance and the reasons for his antipathy to the accused. We think that his conduct in the Sessions Court in admitting this so freely should be taken into consideration and we have decided to revoke the sanction, and we do revoke it accordingly.

Petition allowed; Sanction revoked.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 66, O. XXI, 11. 98 to 103—Execution sale, purchase at, benami—Resistance to certified purchaser by person deriving title from judgment-debtor—Suit for possession by benamidar purchaser, whether lies.

A certified benami purchaser at an execution sale who has been obstructed in securing possession by a person deriving title from the judgment-debtor cannot maintain an action in ejectment against the latter. There is no distinction between ordinary suits for ejectment and suits by benami purchasers at Court sales. [p. 497, col. 2.]

There is nothing in section 66 of the Civil Procedure Code which confers such a right. That section is designed to protect the person who has obtained a sale-certificate and has acquired possession under it. It has no application to a purchaser who seeks to oust another from possession. [p. 497, col. 2.]

Tenkata Suryanaraina Jayapatiraju v. Goluguri Bapiraju, 7 Ind. Cas. 60; 34 M. 143; 8 M. L. T. 154; (1910) M. W. N. 286, Rarji Appaji Kulkarni v. Mahadev Bapuji Kulkarni, 22 B. 672 at p. 678; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1030, explained and distinguished.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Kistna, at Ellore, in Appeal Suit No. 271 of 1912, preferred against that of the District Munsif, Narasapur, in Original Suit No. 287 of 1911.

Mr. P. Nagabhushanam, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. Prakasam, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The Receiver of the Nidadavole Estate obtained a decree for money against defendants Nos. 1 to 3. The properties in suit were attached in execution and were purchased by the plaintiff. He obtained a certificate of sale, but when he applied to be put in possession, he was resisted by the 4th defendant who claimed to have purchased the property at a private sale from defendants Nos. 1 to 3. The present suit is to recover possession.

The contention of the 4th defendant, among other pleas, is that the plaintiff is a benamidar for the Receiver, and that consequently he is not entitled to sue in eject-ment. The Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff was a benamidar. In a careful judgment, after reviewing the authorities, he came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was not entitled to sue.

We think he is right. Mr. Nagabhushanam, who appeared for the appellant, conceded that in an ordinary suit in ejectment, a benamidar cannot recover possession. He argued, however, that in a suit necessitated by resistance or obstruction in execution, the holder of the certificate of sale, whether he be a benamidar or not, is entitled to maintain a suit for possession. It was not seriously argued that anything in section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure can confer such a right. That section is designed to protect the person who has obtained a sale certificate and has acquired possession under it. It has no application to a purchaser who seeks to oust another from possession.

Reliance was placed by the learned Vakil upon certain observations in Tenkata Suryanaraina Jayapatiraju v. Goluguri Bapiraju (1). A careful perusal of the judgment leaves no room for doubt that that decision is no authority for the contention now advanced. The learned Judges in that case drew a distinction between contractual rights and rights arising from title. In the former class of cases, the person, who is eo nomine the contracting party, is entitled to enforce the terms of the contract. It will not be open to the other party to the contract to turn round and say that although he did enter into the contract with the party suing, as that party is only a name-lender for another, he can refuse to perform his part of the contract. The analogy of the sections relating to the rights of agents of undisclosed principals was relied upon for this purpose. We can conceive cases where even possession may be claimed under the contract against the party who has agreed to deliver possession. But the person sued in this case is not the person who entered into the contract; he is a third party who claims possession in his own right. The plaintiff, in such cases, must show that he has a better title than the person whom he seeks to eject. Consequently, it is open to the defendant to plead that such a plaintiff has no right to recover possession. It is on this ground, we take it, that in suits in ejectment, the benamidar is not allowed to recover possession.

(1) 7 Ind. Cas. 60; 34 M. 143; 8 M. L. T. 154; (1910) M. W. N. 286.

Mr. Nagabushanam contended that under Order XXI, rules 97 to 103, the person entitled to move the Court in cases of obstruction to possession is the certificated purchaser and none else, and that, therefore, he is the only person who can sue under rule 103. We are not prepared to hold, as at present advised, that the real purchaser is not entitled to take action under these rules. Even granting the premises, it does not follow that the real owner has no remedy. The fact that he could not sue to remove the obstruction under rule 103, does not show that the ordinary right of a suit for possession on title is not open to him.

A stray observation in Rajji Appaji Kulkarni v. Mahadev Bapuji Kulkarni (2) that the benamidar can sue for possession was relied on. This was a suit for damages against the judgment-debtor for cutting and carrying away the crops after the auction-sale. The learned Judges very guardedly say that as between the benamidar and the judgment-debtor, the former may have a right to recover possession. We do not think that that observation can help the appellant.

We are of opinion that the view of the Subordinate Judge is right and dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff's half-share in certain joint ancestral property sold by his father, is unaffected by the sale. Plaintiff's case was that the sale was a nominal transaction. The first Court found in favour of the plaintiff and decreed the claim. The lower Appellate Court has held that there was consideration for the sale, and that Rs. 500 out of Rs. 2,000 represented an antecedent debt of the father. But as no legal necessity was alleged or proved, the Divisional Judge has confirmed the decree of the first Court. The only point argued in this second appeal is that there should not have been an unconditional decree, but that the plaintiff should have been ordered to refund Rs. 500 found to have been an antecedent debt of the father.

This Court has held, following the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Chandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (1), that a Hindu father governed by Mitakshara Law cannot alienate ancestral family property, so as to bind his sons, except to pay off an antecedent debt or for legal necessity [Hira Ram v. Udhe Ram (2)]. If the case had been one of mortgage, it would have presented no difficulty. But here we are concerned with a sale, which, being for valuable consideration, is binding on the alienor's share, as on this point this Court follows the Bombay and Madras view, as opposed to the view taken by the High Courts at Calcutta and Allahabad. The plaintiff does not contest that his father's share is bound by the sale, but only asks for relief in respect of his own half-share. The question for decision is whether there is an equity in favour of the purchaser in respect of the amount of the antecedent debt, for which the father could, no doubt, have sold joint family property of that value, and for which a proper charge could have been created on the family estate. The appellant's learned Counsel merely relies upon authorities which show that it is the pious duty of a Hindu son to pay his father's debts not tainted with immorality. This is not disputed by the learned Counsel for the respondents whose contention is that, as no charge has been created, no effect can be given in this suit to any such obligation. This is perfectly correct, but it does not touch the question whether there is an equity in favour of the purchaser in the present case. The Bengal case cited for the respondents, Banwari Lal v. Sheo Sankar Misser (3), is not of much help for the right of a co-parcener to sell his share is not recognized there. As laid down by Mookerjee, J., at page 822*, "When...an alienation made by a co-parcener is set aside at the instance of another member of the family, the Court orders that the property should be possessed in defined shares and the shares of the transferor should be subject to the lien of the transferee for the return of the purchase-money." The next case cited for the respondents is Virabhadra Gowdu v. Guruvankata Charlu (4), which must be read with the case of Sabapathi v. Somasundaram (5), on which it is based. In neither of the cases was there legal necessity, nor an antecedent debt justifying the sale. The only case which I have been able to find out, which is really in point, is the case of Marappa Goundan v. Rangasami Goundan (6). I entirely concur with the following observations of Subramania Ayyar, J.: "One must hesitate to countenance the introduction of a new rule such as that suggested, having regard to the practical inconvenience which is likely to arise in giving effect to it. Now a sale of joint property by a co-parcener, though made without legal necessity, is in this Presidency valid to the extent of the vendor's share. Suppose that that share is really worth the whole of the amount paid by the vendee as the price, why should he get anything more? Next, suppose that the share is worth less than the price paid. The vendee cannot, in such a case, reasonably ask for a charge for more than the difference between the real value of the share which he gets and the price which he has actually paid. It is scarcely necessary to say that questions as to such valuation are often not capable of easy or satisfactory settlement. The simpler and the better view undoubtedly is that if the vendee wishes to stand by a sale which is valid only partially, such as the present, he must be content with the vendor's share but that if he wishes to repudiate the transaction altogether, his remedy is only against the vendor in a suit for the return of the price paid, on the ground that the consideration for the payment failed. This view will, on the one hand, avoid all necessity for enquiry into matters alluded to before and, on the other, tend to act as a check on a disposition on the part of speculative persons to enter with some co-parceners into transactions calculated to affect the rights of other co-parceners who are not parties thereto."

The cases in which an equity has been recognized are cases in which the sale as a whole has been set aside, but I have not been able to find one in which the sale is upheld in part. In the absence of any authority to the contrary I follow the view taken by the Madras High Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Profits, suit for share of—Village permanently settled—Revenue, enhancement of, for purpose of determining amount of cesses—Division of profits, method of.

A taluka was permanently settled by way of reward for the talukdar's loyal services. Subsequently, a person was declared by the Privy Council to be entitled to a share of the profits of a village situated in the taluka. At the time of the recent Settlement the revenue of the village was enhanced, not for the purpose of subjecting the talukdar to any additional liability as to payment of revenue but for the purpose of determining the amount of cesses:

Held, that in estimating the profits of the village the talukdar was not entitled to treat the new assessment of revenue as a real and substantial thing and to deduct the newly assessed amount of revenue from the gross income of the village before coming to any division of profits with the said person. JUDGMENT.—This second appeal has arisen out of a suit for the recovery of a one-third share of the profits of Manza Sissendi Khas for the years 1317—1320 Baski, and the only dispute now remaining is with regard to the method by which the profits of the village are to be ascertained.

The village is included in the Sissendi Taluka now owned by Raja Chandra Sekhar. The estate is under the control of the Court of Wards and this village has been made over by the Court of Wards to the Raja's wife, Rani Subhadra Kuar, by way of provision for her maintenance. She was the defendant in the Court of first instance, and is the appellant in this Court. It appears that at the time of annexation the talukdar of this estate was Raja Kashi Prasad, one of the loyal talukdars whose property was exempted from the confiscation declared by Lord Canning's Proclamation after the Mutiny.

By way of reward for his loyal services the Government of India directed that Raja Kashi Prasad should be entitled to hold his estate under a Permanent Settlement, and should also be entitled to a reduction of the Settlement jama to the extent of 10 per cent. (cf. Notification No. 1300 of 9th April 1868, in the Oudh Government Gazette of the 18th April 1868, page 154). The revenue was assessed at Rs. 2,300 at the first Regular Settlement and the result, therefore, was that the Raja and his successors became entitled to hold this village on payment of Rs. 2,300 per annum Government revenue less ten per cent., and as the Settlement was permanent it also followed that the Raja and his successors were never thereafter to be called upon to pay Government revenue at any higher rate.

The sum of Rs. 230 per annum, i.e., 10 per cent. of the revenue, which the Raja was to be allowed to retain under the terms of the notification just referred to, goes apparently by the name of "haqq istimrari."

In the year 1864 a litigation was started which was finally disposed of by a judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council dated the 29th July 1873. A full report of this judgment is to be found in Messrs. Rafique and Jackson's Collection of Oudh Privy Council Decisions, second edition, page 135 [Widow of Shankar Sahai v. Rajah Kashi Pershad (1)]. The claimant in this litigation was the widow of one Shankar Sahai and the defendant was Raja Kashi Prasad. The Raja's wife was the daughter of one Mohan Lal who was the real uncle (father's brother) of Shankar Sahai.

It is unnecessary for the purposes of this case to discuss the nature of the claim put forward by Shankar Sahai's widow. It is sufficient to say that by the decree of the Privy Council which modified in some respects the order of Colonel Barrow, Financial Commissioner, dated the 7th of November 1868, it was laid down that Shankar Sahai's widow was entitled to a

(1) 4 I. A. 195; Rafique & Jackson's P. C. No. 23; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 4; 3 Ser. P. C. J. 289.

SUBHADRA KUAR v. SHANBHU PRASAD.

Hindu widow's estate of inheritance in four villages comprised in the Sissendi Taluka, and to a one-third share of the profits of seven other villages of the estate, one of which is Sissendi Khas, the village of which the profits constitute the subject-matter of the present dispute.

It is not denied that the plaintiffs-respondents are entitled to the benefits of this decree of the Privy Council. It is conceded that they can claim a one-third share of the profits of Sissendi Khas.

The question is as to the manner in which the total amount of the divisible profits is to be ascertained and it has arisen in this way. Although Sissendi Khas is a permanently settled village the revenue of which has been fixed at Rs. 2,300, there was at the last revision of Settlement a re-assessment of revenue not for the purpose of subjecting the talukdar to any additional liability in the matter of payment of Government revenue, but for the purpose of determining how much should be paid on account of certain cesses. For this latter purpose the revenue was declared to be Rs. 3,100, but of course it is not pretended that the Raja or the Rani who for the time being represents him is liable to pay this sum. On the contrary all that is payable on account of Government revenue is the amount of the old assessment, Rs. 2,300, less the ten per cent. which the Raja is allowed to retain by way of reward for the services rendered by his predecessor Raja Kashi Prasad.

But it is claimed that in estimating the profits which by the decree of the Privy Council are divisible between the parties in the proportion of $\frac{1}{3}$ rd to $\frac{2}{3}$ rd, the talukdar, or rather his representative Rani Subhadra Kuar, is entitled to treat this new assessment as a substantial and real thing and to deduct the amount from the gross income before coming to any division of profits with the plaintiffs, and so in the accounts put forward by the Rani we find inter alia an annual deduction of Rs. 1,043 which is described as "haqq istimrari." How this actual figure is arrived at is not quite clear, but the notion apparently is that the Rani is entitled to retain Rs. 230, being 10 per cent. on the assessment at the First Settlement, plus Rs. 800, being the difference between the former assessment (Rs. 2,200) and the new or nominal assessment (Rs. 3,100). The ground upon which this method of calculation is sought to be justified is that the benefit of the Permanent Settlement was conferred upon Raja Kashi Prasad as a personal mark of favour, and that the plaintiffs are in no way entitled to participate in that benefit. And so it is argued that to allow the plaintiffs to claim their one-third share of the profits after deduction from the gross income of only the amount which the Raja is liable to pay for Government revenue under the permanent assessment, is to admit them to a share of a boon to which they have no right. In other words, because it is a village which but for the fact that it is permanently settled would now be liable for a revenue of Rs. 3,100 per annum, the plaintiffs must submit to a deduction of this sum from the amount of the gross income, although admittedly the talukdar is not called upon to pay a half penny more than the sum fixed at the first Regular Settlement.

Both the Courts below have refused to accept this method of calculating the profits and in my opinion they have done right.

We have the decree of the Privy Council by which the talukdar is under an obligation to surrender to the widow of Shankar Sahai or to the persons who now represent her interest a one-third share of the net profits of Sissendi Khas, and those net profits consist of what is left of the gross income after deduction of all proper items of expenditure including the amount actually paid for Government revenue plus any sum which the talukdar is entitled to retain for his own benefit. It would be altogether absurd, in my opinion, to allow the talukdar to deduct from the gross income annually a sum which he admittedly is not called upon to pay. I am unable to comprehend the statement that the rights of the talukdar are in any way invaded by a refusal to allow him to deduct from the amount of the gross income a purely imaginary item of expenditure. What are the rights conferred upon him by the Notification of 1865? They are (1) a right to hold the village at a permanent rate of revenue and (2) a right to retain for his own benefit a one-tenth share of the revenue so fixed.

It is not disputed that the liability for revenue remains the same as it was, and it is also not disputed that he is entitled to retain

CHINNAM RAJAMANNARU v. LINGAMALLU RADHAKRISHNIAH.

Rs. 230 per annum, being one tenth of the permanent revenue rate.

To permit the talukdar to claim now that he is entitled to deduct from the gross income a further sum of Rs. 800, which he admittedly is not called upon to pay, would be to confer upon him a benefit over and above those which the Government has bestowed upon him and to which, in my opinion, he has no right whatever. He has his Permanent Settlement, and he gets his 10 per cent. of the permanent jama and he is entitled to no more.

I am satisfied that the Courts below have dealt with the case correctly and I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 110—Appeal to Privy Council—Claim for legacy under Rs. 10,000—Interest decreed, addition of, for purposes of appeal—Decision affecting future claims of other legatees, whether within clause (2) of the section.

Where the subject-matter of a claim is less than Rs. 10,000, there is no right of appeal to the Privy Council merely by reason of the decree amount exceeding the said sum at the date of application for leave to appeal by the addition of subsequent interest allowed by the decree. [p. 502, col. 2]

Where, in a claim based on a legacy under a Will, the value whereof is below Rs. 10,000, a decision is given as to the source from which the legacy is payable, the aggrieved party has no right of appeal to the Privy Council under section 110 (2), Civil Procedure Code, on the ground that the decision would affect, though not conclude, future claims by other legatees which may exceed that amount. [p. 503, col. 1.]

involving a larger claim, i.e., there must be something in the decree which affects the larger subject-matter. In effect, the smaller decree must have the effect of estopping either by the rule of res judicata or otherwise a party from claiming rights under a larger claim. [p. 503, col. 1.]

Petition, presented under sections 109 and 110 and Order XLV, rules 2 and 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure, praying that in the circumstances stated therein, and in the affidavit filed therewith, the High Court will be pleased to grant a certificate to enable the petitioner to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the decree of the High Court in Appeal Suit No. 338 of 1913, preferred against that of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Cocanada, in Original Suit No. 11 of 1910.

Mr. A. Krishnasami Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. T. Ramachandra Rao, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. It was admitted that the value of the subject-matter was below Rs. 10,000 in the suit and in the appeal to this Court. Mr. Krishnasami Aiyar made a faint suggestion that, as at the time of the presentation of the petition, the decree amount with subsequent interest thereon aggregated to Rs. 10,000, his client was entitled to appeal. This contention is clearly untenable.

The real question is whether the decree of this Court indirectly involves a claim or question respecting property over Rs. 10,000 in value.

The suit was instituted for a legacy under the Will of a testator. One of the questions related to the source from which the legacy was payable. It may be conceded that the reasons for our conclusion about the source would be applicable to other legacies payable under the Will, and that the amounts covered by all the legacies would exceed Rs. 10,000 in value. It is, therefore, probable that our decision in the present case may be quoted as an authority in the cases that may be, but which have not yet been, instituted by other legatees. It is not suggested that our decision would conclude the other claims. Is the probability of our decision being relied upon in similar cases arising under the same Will sufficient to bring it within the second clause of section 110? We think not. That clause refers to the decree involving a claim. There must be something in the decree which affects the larger subject-matter. For example, there may be a suit to recover interest upon a heavy claim based on a document. In refusing interest, the Court may hold that the document is not genuine or is not binding. In such cases, although the claim for interest might relate to a sum below Rs. 10,000 the decree indirectly would involve the rejection of a claim for the principal amount as well. In effect, the smaller decree must have the effect of estopping, either by the rule of res judicata or otherwise, the party from claiming rights under the larger claim. The decision in Sri Kishan Lal v. Kashmiro (1) is reconcilable with this proposition. As for Afzul Hossain v. Musammat Umda Bibi (2), it is enough to point out that the learned Judges granted leave under section 109 (c) and not under section 110 of the Code. It was held in Muofti Mohummud Uddoollah v. Baboo Mootechund (3) that where separate suits, each being for a sum less than Rs. 10,000 but involving the same contention were decreed, no leave should be granted against either or both of them, as neither of them directly or indirectly involved a claim for over Rs. 10,000. Applying that analogy, supposing different suits were brought by different legatees under the Will in question and separate judgments were passed in each of them, although there may be a point common to all the suits, the decree in none of them would be regarded as satisfying the conditions of section 110. It may be that where one common judgment is pronounced and no separate adjudication is necessary in the connected cases, the decision in the main case may be construed as involving a claim indirectly for the aggregate amount covered by all the cases. There is authority for this proposition. Byjnath v. Graham (4). The present case does not come within the principle of that case.

It may also be pointed out that the pronouncement which is complained of in our judgment only followed an earlier one by Subramania Aiyar, J., in Chinnam Rajamannar v. Tadikonla Ramachendra Rao (5) and that that decision was never sought to be appealed against.

For these reasons we are unable to grant the certificate. The petition is rejected. No order as to costs.

KEDARNATH V. ZUMBERLAL.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the appellate decree of the District Judge of West Berar. It has been filed one day beyond time, and I am asked to extend time under section 5, Indian Limitation Act, 1908, as applied to Berar. I am of opinion that no sufficient cause has been made out for not preferring the appeal within the period of limitation prescribed therefor.

The decree appealed from was made on the 28th March 1916. Copies of the judgment and decree were not applied for till the 2nd May 1916, and they were delivered on the 9th June 1916. The last day of the prescribed period expired on the 26th July 1916. The appeal was presented on the 27th July 1916. The explanation of the delay is given in an affidavit made by the second appellant Motilal. He affirms that owing to the river Purna being in flood he was delayed in his journey from his village to Akola, which place he reached on the 26th July—too late, according to the learned Advocate for the appellants, to catch the mail train to Nagpur that day. Consequently he arrived at Nagpur on the 27th July—a day late. I accept this statement as perfectly true for the purposes of this order, and I say that, by itself, far from showing any sufficient cause for the failure to file the appeal within time, it exhibits nothing but negligence of a kind which the Courts ought not to condone and encourage.

I have examined the district map, and questioned the appellant Motilal, and I find that his village (spelt Pathuldee in the map) is 12 or 13 miles from Wagholee, where the Purna river is crossed, and that Akola is another 12 miles from Wagholee. Thus this appellant had 25 miles to travel across country, in the middle of the monsoon, before he reached the railway. He also knew that the only train by which he could reach Nagpur on the 26th July, in time to get the appeal filed, was timed to leave Akola at 1.40 A. M. on that date. He admits before me that he left his home on the 25th July. He must be assumed to know that a flooded and temporarily impassable river is a common incident during the monsoon. It will thus be seen that he deferred his journey, and the filing of the appeal, to the last available moment, and that, owing to an obstruction which he ought to have foreseen, he missed the last train which he hoped to catch. But this is not all. The endorsement on the court-fee stamp of the memorandum of appeal shows that it was purchased by the Hon'ble Mr. M. V. Joshi in Nagpur on the 27th July 1916. Thus, apparently, not merely the presentation of the appeal, but the retaining of a legal adviser to draw it up, and the purchase of a stamp on which to engross it, were all left to be done on the last day of the prescribed period.

In following the above course, the appellants in this case acted in accordance with an almost universal habit, among litigants in the Central Provinces and Berar, of filing plaints, memoranda of appeals, and all applications subject to a time limit, on the last day, and almost the last hour, of the period prescribed by law. In the case of appeals this custom entails much additional labour on the ministerial staff of the Courts, in making careful and exact computations of time, with reference to the time requisite for obtaining copies, which would be avoided if appeals were filed obviously within time. Controversial questions as to the correctness of the computation are frequently raised when cases are filed on the boundary line between "within time" and "beyond time." Frequently, as in this case, some contingency defeats the effort of the litigant by a few days or hours, and then the Appellate Court has the trouble of considering whether relief can be given under section 5, Limitation Act: and, in many cases, a very lenient view seems to have been taken of such failures, and an easy interpretation of the words "sufficient cause" may have encouraged the habit of leaving things to the last moment.

This habit has its origin in laxity and negligence, and, in my opinion, having regard to the increasing pressure of business in the law Courts and the many facilities now available for the punctual filing of suits, appeals and applications therein, it is high time that litigants and their legal advisers were made to realize the dangers of the procrastination which defers the presentation of a suit, appeal or application to the last day of the limitation prescribed therefor. In the case of an appeal efforts should be made to file it as soon as possible, and not as late as possible, after the date of the decree to be appealed from. A legal adviser should be given time to study the record and consider his case thoroughly before he draws up a memorandum. The present practice, of receiving cases on the last available day, and putting in an ill-considered memorandum based on a perusal of the judgment, is anything but satisfactory. It wastes the time of the Courts and the money of the appellants. If the Bar were to make an universal practice of refusing to receive appellate briefs, unless time were given by clients to send for and see records, and otherwise consider those briefs, litigants would speedily realize the unwisdom of procrastination. But this is not to be expected under existing circumstances; and I think it is necessary that the Courts should apply the law so as not to encourage eleventh hour procedure of the kind followed in this case. I concur with the judgment of Drake-Brockman, J. C., in Vithia v. Sakhya (1). The law is clear, and section 5, Indian Limitation Act, 1908, was not provided to encourage negligence, procrastination and laxity. I enunciate nothing new. As far back as in 1880, in Hukum Chand v. J. Bailey (2), this Court laid down that inability to get stamps, on the last day allowed by law for instituting a suit, is not one of the conditions under which the time allowed by the Limitation Law can be extended. I follow the same principle when I rule that an appellant, who wilfully leaves the preparation and presentation of his appeal to the last day of the period of limitation prescribed therefor, is guilty of negligence, and is not entitled to an extension of time, if some unexpected or unforeseen contingency prevents him from filing the appeal within time.

For the above reasons I reject the above appeal as time-barred.

Appeal rejected.

S. and R., two Muhammadan ladies, executed a general power-of-attorney in favour of E. on 14th November 1905, constituting him as their agent and authorising him to manage all their affairs and properties to the best advantage. E. collected money under the power on 12th October 1907. On 24th October 1910 he executed a release in favour of his principals of his rights in certain properties in satisfaction of the moneys collected and appropriated by him, avowing his inability to pay. On 27th October 1910 he was adjudicated insolvent. The release having been declared void under section 56 of Act III of 1909, S. and R. put in their claims before the Official Assignee, which the Insolvency Judge disallowed as barred, more than three years having elapsed from the date of collection by E., when, His Lordship held, the agency terminated:

Held, (1) that as the power-of-attorney was general in its terms, the agency did not terminate on the collection of debts by E., but on the execution of the release deed; [p. 506, col. 2.]

(2) that the claim was governed by Article 97 of the Limitation Act and was within three years from the date when the release was declared to have no effect in law, when the consideration for it should be taken to have failed. [p. 506, col. 2.]

A statement by an agent that he finds it inconvenient or is unable to pay the debt due to his principal is not a 'refusal to pay' within the meaning of Article 89 of the Limitation Act. [p. 506, col. 2.]

ROKHIA BI v. OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE, MADRAS.

Enayatulla Saib & Co., Insolvents.

Messrs. Rencontre & Tirumalai Pillai, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Short Beves & Co., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Two ladies Saram Bi and Rokhia Bi wanted to prove their claim in the insolvency proceedings of one Enayatulla, the son of Saram Bi and brother of Rokhia Bi. It appears that the father of Rokhia Bi and Enayatulla had money owing by a certain firm and two ladies, the claimants, executed a power-of-attorney on the 14th November 1905 in favour of Enayatulla to manage "all their affairs and all their properties to their best advantage and for the purpose of recovering moneys due to them." Enayatulla received moneys from time to time on behalf of these ladies from the firm which was indebted to his father, and the last instalment received on account of interest was on the 12th October 1907. Then on 5th November 1908 while the ladies were going to Mecca on pilgrimage, they executed a second power-of-attorney in favour of Enayatulla. There also they authorized Enayatulla to manage "all their affairs and all their properties to the best advantage, to sell or mortgage moveable and immoveable properties and to sign any deed or necessary papers on their behalf." Enayatulla was adjudicated insolvent on 27th October 1910 but on 24th October 1910, i.e., three days before the adjudication, he executed in favour of his mother and sister a release of his rights in certain immoveable properties in satisfaction of the money which he had collected on their behalf and which he had not paid to them.

Under section 56 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act that release was void as against the Official Assignee. The two ladies put in their claims before the Official Assignee and the learned Judge has disallowed the claims as barred. He is of opinion that the agency of Enayatulla terminated when he collected the money due to the ladies. Both the powers-of-attorney, however, are in general terms, giving general power to Enayatulla to manage all the affairs of these ladies and it is difficult to see why the first power-of-attorney, Exhibit A, should be construed to be limited to the collection of debts. That being so, it is quite clear that the agency of Enayatulla did not terminate when the debts due to the claimants were collected.

It is argued by Mr. Barton on behalf of the Official Assignee that unless the first power-of-attorney was limited to the collection of debts, there is no good reason why the second power-of-attorney should have been executed. But whatever might have been the motive in executing the second power-of-attorney, the first power-of-attorney constituted Enayatulla attorney to manage all the affairs generally of the ladies. It is also argued by Mr. Barton that Enayatulla refused to pay the money which he had collected to his mother and sister. But his evidence only shows that he did not pay. It is because he had not paid the money that he executed the release in 1910. If a debtor says that he does not find it convenient or is unable to pay his debts, that does not amount to 'refusal to pay'. The agency of Enayatulla, so far as the property in the suit is concerned, terminated when he executed the release. But the release was found to have no effect in law by an order dated 29th September 1912 and on that date the consideration for the release must be taken to have failed. In a case like this the Article applicable is Article 97 of the Limitation Act, which says, "For money paid upon an existing consideration which afterwards fails", the period of limitation being three years from the date of the failure. That this is the proper Article applicable to cases of this nature is borne out by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Bassu Kuar v. Dhum Singh (1). Applying that Article, the claim of the claimants is within time. The judgment of the learned Judge will be set aside and the matter must be decided upon the merits. Costs will follow the result.

Appeal allowed; Case sent back.

JUDGMENT.

ATKINSON, J.—This action was brought on foot of a note of hand, dated the 27th of June 1911. The principal sum secured by the note of hand was the sum of Rs. 468. The defendant made no payment, either by way of principal or interest, at any time on foot of this note up to the 27th of June 1914. The plaintiff, on the 27th of June 1914, instituted the present suit to recover Rs. 636 by way of principal and interest. The Court-fee payable on the amount claimed would be Rs. 48. As a matter of fact the Court-fee was only paid to the extent of Rs. 10. The matter was immediately detected by the officer of the Court on the same day that the plaint was filed, and the learned Munsif, on the information as to the deficiency of the Court-fee being conveyed to him by the officer of the Court, directed the Pleader who filed the plaint to be informed of the fact. On the 6th of July the Pleader on behalf of the plaintiff lodged the amount of the deficiency,

Rs. 38, whereupon the learned Munsif, being informed of this, directed that the matter should be put up in the presence of the Pleader for the necessary orders; and accordingly on the 18th of July the matter was put up and the Munsif made the following order: "Heard the Pleader for the plaintiff; register the plaint. The legal question of limitation will be gone into at the time of trial." On the same day he made the following order: "Register the plaint and issue summons to the defendant, fixing the 12th of August 1914 for final disposal."

Now, it is contended that the 27th day of June 1914 was the last available day within which the plaintiff could bring this action so as to be entitled to maintain the suit, otherwise it would be barred by limitation of time. It is contended that because the plaint that was filed on the 27th of June was insufficiently stamped with the proper Court fee, that, therefore, the suit cannot be said to have been instituted on the 27th of June, but at some later date, and that thus the plaintiff's cause of action is barred by limitation of time. The learned Munsif, before whom this case came in the first instance, decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiff for the full amount of his claim. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal has reversed the finding of the Munsif, and has held that in point of law the plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation of time, inasmuch as it cannot be considered that the suit was instituted on the 27th of June 1914. The view of the learned Judge is based mainly on the interpretation which he gave to the first order made upon the 13th of July. Prior to 1908 there was a conflict of authority as to what the result was when a plaint was filed and insufficiently stamped, or where a plaint was filed after time allowed. Various Courts took different views, and the intention of the Legislature was, by section 149 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to set at rest the doubts created by the conflicting decisions prevailing in Allahabad and in Calcutta; and as I take it, section 149 was intended to favour the construction put by the Courts in Allahabad upon the interpretation of the old section, which was section 582 of the former Code. Now, section 149 has clearly expressed in terms: "Where the whole or any part of any fee prescribed for any document by the law for the time being in force relating to Court-fees, has not been paid, the Court may, in its discretion, at any stage, allow the person, by whom such fee is payable, to pay the whole or part, as the case may be, of such Court-fee; and upon such payment the document in respect of which such fee is payable, shall have the same force and effect as if such fee had been paid in the first instance." That section gives wide discretionary powers to the Court, and expressly provides that at any stage the Court may allow the whole or part of the fees payable to be paid, and upon payment the document shall have the same force and effect as if the fee had been paid in the first instance. In the case of Hari Ram v. Akbar Hussain (1), at page 760 of the report, I think the learned Mr. Justice Knox enunciated the true principle by which the Courts should be guided. No doubt, the case was a decision before the last Code of Civil Procedure Act, and at page 760 he says:—"When the plaint, whatever its defects, is presented to the proper officer, the suit is then and there instituted, and once it has been instituted within the time prescribed, the suit escapes from the bar of limitation, unless such bar be one in existence prior to institution." This point, though not quite the same, came before the learned Chief Justice of this Court and Mr. Justice Sharfuddin in Appeal No. 2210 of 1914. In that case the learned Munsif allowed ten days to the plaintiff to file the amount of the deficiency of the Court fee. The plaintiff failed to pay the Court-fee within the time allowed, but paid it nearly ten days later. The learned District Judge, on appeal, held that as the payment of the Court-fee was not made within the time allowed by the Munsif, it could not be made after, and that the suit was consequently barred. The learned Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Sharfuddin reversed that decision, and held that once the Court-fee was paid after the time allowed by the order of the Munsif and was accepted, the entire proceeding was in order, and the plaint must be treated as if the full fee had been paid in the first instance; and accordingly they held that no question of limitation arose in the case whatsoever, and the case proceeded.

Now, much argument has been addressed to us as to the terms of the order of the 18th of July. In fact, the learned Vakil for the defendant has based his entire argument in support of the lower Appellate Court's decision on the wording and phraseology of that order. He says that it is but a conditional granting of leave to file the plaint. I think that argument is unsound. The Court of the Munsif had been fully informed between the 27th of June and the 6th of July, when the deficiency was paid, of each step that had been taken, and when the necessity arose of making any compulsory order upon the plaintiff or his Vakil to make good the deficiency of the Court-fee, the learned Munsif became aware and was informed by the officer of the Court that on the 6th of July the money had been paid, and the Munsif directed the matter to be put up for the necessary order, and on the 18th he says in express terms:—"Register the plaint." I dare say some suggestion was made by the learned Vakil for the opposite side that some question of limitation would arise, and the learned Munsif, to safeguard the rights of the defendant, introduced this tag into his order, in case the effect of his decision might be to bar the defendant in pleading limitation of time as a defence to this action. The order to register the plaint was, in my view, a mandatory direction by the Court, and an unequivocal act recognising the validity of the payment, and thereupon the plaint became, under section 149, of full force and effect as from date the 27th of June. I am fortified in that interpretation of the first order of the 18th July by the express phraseology of the second order of the same day "Register the plaint and issue summons to the defendant." This second order has no limitation or reservation, GAYA LOAN OFFICE, LTD., v. AWADH BEHARI LAL.

I think it is clear that the learned Munsif exercised his discretion within the meaning of section 149 and that he exercised his discretion in recognising the validity of the payment that was made. That being so, the plaint in this case must be deemed in point of law to have been filed on the 27th of June 1914 and, therefore, the cause of action was within time.

For these reasons, I am of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in the conclusion at which he arrived in point of law, and accordingly we allow this appeal, and we restore the order of the Munsif, with costs in the lower Appellate Court and costs of this appeal.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—The question as to whether or not this appeal is barred by limitation must, in my opinion, be answered in the negative. The suit was instituted on the 27th of June 1914, within the time prescribed for instituting a suit under the law of limitation. The plaint, however, was insufficiently stamped. Under Order VII, rule 11, of the Code of Civil Procedure, clause (3), the plaint might have been rejected by reason of the failure of the plaintiff to pay the requisite stamp-fee within the time allowed by the Court, if any such time had in fact been fixed. The omission to pay the full Court-fee was detected on the very day that the plaint was filed. The Court did not fix any time within which the deficiency was to be paid. The Court directed information of the deficiency in the stamping of the plaint to be given to the Pleader of the plaintiff, and upon being informed of the deficiency, the learned Vakil for the plaintiff paid the proper and necessary fee on the 6th July 1914. On the 18th of July 1914, the Court ordered the plaint to be registered and summonses to be issued and served upon the defendants. The order made by the Munsif in the case on the 18th July to register the plaint and to issue summonses to the defendants was required by Order V, rule 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure, when the plaintiff had complied with all the necessities of Order IV read with Order VII referable to the institution of suits. By the order of the 18th of July 1914, the Court clearly, in my opinion, had accepted the plaint as being properly stamped and directed the same to be registered. The Court not having fixed any time for the payment of the deficient Court-fee, and not rejecting the plaint on the date when the deficient Court-fee was paid, or subsequently, naturally led the plaintiff and his advisers to believe that the plaint was properly filed and that the suit was properly instituted. There was no laches on the part of the plaintiff. If there was any error, it was an error of the Court in not passing on the first day the necessary order required by Order VII, rule 11. Under these circumstances the plaintiff ought not to suffer. There is no doubt that section 149 of the present Code has settled antecedently conflicting views as to the law on the interpretation of section 582A of the old Code, but now under the existing Code if a deficient Court-fee be paid within the time permitted by the Court, it will have retrospective effect and validate the plaint as from the date when the suit was instituted. It has been held recently by this Court that payment of a deficient Court-fee, even after the time fixed by the Court, has the same effect. Therefore, in the present case if a limit was fixed by the Court for the payment of the deficiency in the Court-fee and the fee was paid within the time allowed, and even beyond the time if the payment was accepted by the Court, the plaintiff's suit would not have been barred. The suit surely cannot be dismissed when there was no time fixed by the Court and the plaintiff paid the deficit Court-fee within a reasonable time after notice of the deficiency and the Court accepted the payment.

I agree with the views expressed by my learned brother, and in the order that the appeal should be decreed, the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge reversed and the order of the Munsif restored with costs in the lower Appellate Court and this Court.

Appeal decreed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1909), s. 10—Stay of suit—Jurisdiction—Principal and agent—Accounts, agent, whether can demand.

One of the essential conditions which have to be fulfilled before an order staying a suit under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code can be passed, is that both the Courts before whom the suits are pending must be of "concurrent jurisdiction", in the sense that the suit to be stayed could be tried in the Court in which the first suit was instituted. [p. 510, col. 2.]

Balkishan v. Kishan Lal, 11 A. 148; A. W. N. (1889) 42; 13 Ind. Jur. 309; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 523, followed.

Civil revision against the order of the District Judge, Nimar, dated the 7th August 1915.

Sir Bipin Krishna Bose and Mr. V. Bose, for the Applicants.

Dr. H. S. Gaur, for the Non-Applicants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code for revision of an order passed by the District Judge, Nimar, staying the trial of a suit under section 10 of the Code. The applicants have brought the suit in Nimar on the allegation that they were commission agents of the non-applicants, that accounts have been settled between the parties, and that the non-applicants acknowledged a debt of Rs. 22,244-9-0. The non-applicants, at whose instance the suit has been stayed, had previously instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif at Amraoti asking for an account against the applicants as their agents and valuing the relief for purposes of jurisdiction and Court-fees at Rs. 130. It is admitted that the parties in both suits are the same and that the matters in issue in the later case are substantially the same as in the suit previously instituted. But the jurisdiction of the Munsif is limited to the trial of a suit or original proceeding of a value not exceeding Rs. 1,000. The non-applicants rely on Oipherts v. Arjundass (1) and argue that the Munsif can, in a suit for accounts, pass a decree for a sum in excess of his pecuniary jurisdiction. But that case does not decide that a Munsif can entertain a suit for account which is valued by the plaintiff at a figure above the limits of his pecuniary jurisdiction. Moreover, the suit filed by the applicants in the Nimar Court is not one for accounts. In fact, if I understand their position correctly, they are the agents, and an agent cannot bring a suit for accounts against his principal but only for the balance due upon an account. The agent alone is liable to render accounts and the principal is not. The present suit is on an acknowledgment of debt coupled with a promise to pay. The Munsif could not entertain this suit nor could a set-off be claimed in his Court for the amount claimed in this suit (vide Order VIII, rule 6). The Munsif, therefore, had no jurisdiction to grant the relief claimed in this suit. One of the essential conditions which have to be fulfilled before an order under section 10 can be passed is, therefore, wanting. The order of the District Judge is passed, therefore, without jurisdiction.

The object of the corresponding section in the Code of 1882 has been discussed in Balkishan v. Kishan Lal (2). At page 155, Mahmood, J., says: "The object of the rule contained in section 12 of the Code is to prevent Courts of concurrent jurisdiction from simultaneously entertaining and adjudicating upon two parallel litigations in respect of the same cause of action, the same subject-matter and the same relief. The policy of the law is to confine the plaintiff to one litigation, thus obviating the possibility of contradictory verdicts by two or more Courts in respect of 'the same relief.'" In the present Code the words "for the same relief" have been omitted and so far the scope of the section is wider than before. But the Courts must be of "concurrent jurisdiction", in the sense that the suit to be stayed could be tried in the Court in which the first suit was instituted.

NAUNIHAL SINGH v. RAM RATAN.

This is clear from the words "having jurisdiction to grant the relief claimed." The rule is, no doubt, based on grounds of convenience, as pointed by Pontifex, J., in Meckjee Khetsee v. Kasowjee Devachund (3). But the section, which leaves no discretion, cannot be invoked on mere grounds of convenience, if the necessary conditions are not fulfilled. I take it that the section contemplates that the findings in the first suit would be binding in the later suit, and that there would be no need for a fresh trial of the issues already determined.

The case of Meckjee Khetsee v. Kasowjee Devachund (3), which is relied on by the lower Court as well as by the non-applicants here, is easily distinguishable. In that case the Calicut Court had jurisdiction to entertain a cross-claim of the value of the relief claimed in the High Court, for the order of Pontifex, J., is passed "without prejudice to the plaintiff's right to file a cross-suit in the Calicut Court."

As the District Judge had no jurisdiction to pass the order complained of, it is hereby set aside. The non-applicants will pay the costs of the applicants in this Court. I fix Rs. 100 as Pleadar's fee.

Order set aside.

RESPONDENT.

Pre-emption—Custom—Co-sharer, refusal of, to purchase, effect of—Waiver.

Where the custom is that a co-sharer wishing to sell his property should first offer it to the other co-sharers, such co-sharer, if he informs the other co-sharers of his intention to sell and they decline to purchase on the ground that they have not the means or any other similar ground the vendor, is at liberty, without violating the custom, to sell to an outsider. If, however, a co-sharer intimates that he is ready to buy the property at a price, in such a case it is the duty of the vendor to mention a price, and not to sell to any one else at a lesser price. [p. 512, col. 2.]

Where a Court of Wards, intending to sell the property of a ward, widely published its intention, and the plaintiff did not come forward to exercise his right of pre-emption till more than a year after the completion of the sale:

Held, that the plaintiff must be taken to have waived his right of pre-emption. [p. 512, col. 2.]

First appeal from a decree of the Third Additional Subordinate Judge, Aligarh.

Messrs. Gokul Prasad and Girdharilal Agarwala, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Gulzari Lal and Lakshmi Narain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. It is desirable to refer shortly to the circumstances, which are somewhat peculiar. The property belonged to a gentleman named Matwatang Dhaoj Prasad Singh. He was possessed of a considerable estate which was heavily indebted, and the estate was taken over by the Court of Wards. The sale was a sale by the Court of Wards. There is abundant evidence to show that for no less than two years prior to the sale, efforts were being made to sell a substantial portion of the estate including the property now in question, in order to liquidate the debts of the ward. There is evidence, which we have no hesitation in believing, that the intention to sell was published in the fullest manner possible. We know ourselves that it is the practice of the Court of Wards to publish the intention of making such sales. It is their duty to do so. Their object is to gain as high a price as they possibly can for the property of the ward. The obvious way of attaining this object is to have as many bidders as possible. Without for the moment referring in detail to the evidence, we have not the least hesitation in holding that all the co-sharers, including the plaintiff in the present suit, knew perfectly well that the property was in the market, and that he knew that all he had to do, if he wanted to purchase the property, was to make an application for that purpose to the Court of Wards. We will now consider for a moment the conduct of the plaintiff after the sale. The sale-deed was executed on the 7th of April 1913. It was registered on the 21st of April of the same year. The present suit was not instituted until the 16th of April 1914, that is to say, more than a year after the sale and almost a year after the registration. In fact if the suit had been five days later

it would have been barred by limitation. One would have expected, if the plaintiff had really wished to purchase this property and had been in a position to do so, he would, immediately after the sale, have complained to the Collector or the manager of the estate that he had a right to purchase the property, and that the sale had been carried out without his knowledge. He did nothing of the kind. A number of witnesses have been produced, who prove that Ram Ratan amongst other persons was asked to purchase this very property and that he declined to do so. The learned Subordinate Judge has not believed these witnesses. We cannot agree with him. These witnesses for the most part were quite disinterested. They did not gain the property or any benefit by the purchaser being allowed to retain his purchase. A witness of the name of Avadh Bihari Lal was produced on behalf of the plaintiff. His evidence is somewhat shifty. He tried in a half-hearted way to state that no instructions were given to a man called Babu Ram Saran, a sarbarahkar of the Court of Wards, to go round the village and enquire for would-be purchasers, but in cross-examination he had to admit that the Court of Wards had intended to sell the property from the year 1910, and that letters were sent to all the Tahsildars to procure purchasers. He also had to admit that the Tahsildars issued notices to all the big zemindars and the notices were on the record of the Court of Wards. He had further to admit that the Tahsildars had reported the names of persons who were ready to purchase some of the property, but that the name of the plaintiff Ram Ratan was not amongst them. He also had to admit that persons made applications direct to the Court of Wards stating their desire to purchase portions of the property, and that no application was received from Ram Ratan. This is the plaintiff's own witness. The witnesses for the defence deposed to the fact of the publication of the intention to sell, and that the intended sale was proclaimed by beat of drum in different villages. Bearing in mind the practice of the Court of Wards and the fact that the defendant's witnesses are, as we have already said, disinterested, we certainly consider that there is no valid reason why their evidence should not be believed both as to the publication of the intention to sell and also as to the fact that Ram Ratan was approached and declined to purchase.

It is argued that even if Ram Ratan knew that the property was for sale and even if he had declined to purchase the property, nevertheless it should have been offered to him as soon as the bargain was concluded with the vendee, and that inasmuch as it is not alleged that this was done, he is still entitled to maintain the present suit. We think that this is a most inequitable and unsound contention. The custom alleged in the present case is that where a co-sharer wished to sell his property he should first offer it to the other co-sharers. In our opinion if a co-sharer, in a village in which such a custom exists, wishes to sell his property and goes to the other co-sharers and informs them of his desire to sell and they decline to purchase on the ground that they have not the means or any other similar ground, the vendor is at liberty, without violating the custom, to sell to an outsider. No doubt the position might be different if, when informed of the intention to sell, the co-sharer intimates that he is ready to buy at a price. In such case it might be the duty of the vendor to mention a price to his co-sharer and not to sell the property to any one else at a lesser price. In the present case we hold that Ram Ratan having declined to purchase the property, the Court of Wards was absolved from any obligation to afterwards offer the property to him and it could be sold without any violation of the custom. We may mention in this connection that the property was practically sold for the price mentioned to Ram Ratan by the sarbarahkar. The price he mentioned was Rs. 6,000; the actual price paid was Rs. 5,980-12-0.

We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs in all Courts, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Appeal allowed.

FIRST PARTY—OPPOSITE PARTY.Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145, proceedings under—Arbitration, reference to—Magistrate, delegation of duties by—Jurisdiction, excess of, effect of.

Section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not give the Magistrate charged with holding the enquiry under that section the right or power to delegate the duties which have been vested in him to any other person. The procedure laid down by the section does not contemplate that the question as to who was in actual possession should be delegated, even by consent of parties, to arbitrators. [p 514, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where there has been excess of jurisdiction, the whole proceeding and the result following from that excess of jurisdiction is a nullity. [p. 515, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Deputy Magistrate, Bhagalpur, dated the 21st November 1916.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Ghose, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Nares Chundra Sinha, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The Deputy Magistrate of Bhagalpur on the 5th September drew up a proceeding under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, between petitioner No. 1. and three other persons named as the second party and several persons who were nominated as the first and opposite party, relative to a dispute concerning 5 cottas of land in the town of Bhagalpur. After the proceeding was drawn up it appeared desirable to add further parties and accordingly a fresh proceeding was drawn up under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure on the 24th of October 1916, with the result that there were 13 persons in all representing the parties of the second part and of whom the petitioners in this matter were five. This fresh proceeding, initiated on the 24th of October 1916, was fixed for hearing on the 13th November 1916. On that date a petition was filed by all parties to the proceeding signed by their Pleaders only requesting that the dispute regarding their claim or right to possession of the land in dispute might be determined by three arbitrators, who were named. That petition, which is dated the 13th of November 1916, was signed by Mr. Chatterjee and Maulvi Wasi Ahmad on behalf of all the parties of the second part. The petitioners now allege that Mr. Chatterjee had no power to sign the petition on their behalf, as he was not their Pleader; and accordingly that they were not, and are not, bound by the reference to arbitration; and that, therefore, the arbitration, so far as they are concerned, is a nullity. The arbitrators sat and on the 19th of November 1916, drew up their award. The three arbitrators were, a retired District Judge, one of the Pleaders for the party of the second part, Maulvi Shahamat Hossain, and another Pleader; and their award provides that the first party was entitled to possession of the disputed land and that his possession was confirmed therein and the second party was prohibited from disturbing that possession until the 1st party was evicted therefrom in due course of law. On the 21st of November, a petition was filed before the Deputy Magistrate requiring him not to receive the award, as the petitioners believed that they were prejudiced by the conduct of one of the arbitrators, and that as they had not given authority to any person to sign the petition for submission of the dispute to arbitration they were not bound by the award. And they called upon the Deputy Magistrate to cancel the award made by the arbitrators and to adjudicate upon the case according to law upon the merits. The learned Deputy Magistrate declined to yield to this petition, and made an order on the 21st of November 1916 accepting the award, and ordered that the first party should remain in possession of the disputed land till evicted therefrom in due course of law.

Two questions are raised before me. One is that the Deputy Magistrate had no jurisdiction whatsoever, even with the consent of the parties, to make over the enquiry under section 145 to any person whatsoever, that the law imposes upon him the duty to make the enquiry contemplated by section 145 and that, consequently, he had no right to delegate that duty to any other person even with the assent of the parties before him. And secondly it is argued that even if there might have been a valid reference to arbitration, yet the petitioners are not bound by the award in this case, inasmuch as they never signed the petition for arbitration, nor authorised any one else to sign it on their behalf. Section 145 is a section designed to safeguard the interests of the public peace in reference to disputes concerning the possession of land, and the right of any person in or to possession of any particular land concerning which there is dispute and in connection with which there is likely to be a breach of the peace. The law casts upon the persons specified in section 145, sub-section 1, the duty of initiating proceedings under that section in the interests of public peace; and of calling upon the persons making rival claims to the property to appear before him and say by what right they claim possession to the property in dispute. And then sub-section 4 of section 145 directs the enquiry which the Magistrate is to make. Certainly when one reads sub-section 4 of section 145, it seems obvious and clear that the section contemplates only an enquiry by the person directed by the Statute to hold it and by that person and by no one else. No authority has been cited to me which seems to be directly in point. Section 145 read as a whole does not give the person charged with holding the enquiry under that section the right or power to delegate the duties which have been vested in him to any other person to hold an enquiry or to ascertain the facts which the law requires the Magistrate to do himself. In the case reported as Banwari Lal Mukerjee v. Hariday Chakravarti (1) and at page 555 of the report the learned Judges there say: "Apart from this, although it may not perhaps be a question of jurisdiction, we think that the Magistrate would have exercised a wiser discretion if, upon the application made by the second party to withdraw from the arbitration, he had cancelled the reference. The procedure laid down by the section apparently does not contemplate that the question as to who was in actual possession should be delegated, even by consent of the parties, to arbitrators." In my opinion it is a question of jurisdiction whether a person has power to delegate his duties or not. If he has no power to delegate the duties which the law charges him with, then, in my opinion, the delegation of those duties is a violation of jurisdiction or an excess of jurisdiction; and by reason of that excess of jurisdiction the duty of this Court is to intervene and see that the proceedings are conducted with propriety and regularity. Therefore, having regard to the view I take on the first argument addressed to me, it becomes unnecessary for me to consider the other question. However, it may be desirable to refer on the first branch of the case to the case reported as Taramoni Chaudhurani v. Gayanendra Mohan Chaudhurani (2), where the learned Judges say that a Magistrate might delegate his duties to arbitrators to ascertain facts to assist him in coming to a conclusion, and that although he may not be bound by the finding of the arbitrators yet that the Magistrate should bear in mind the effect of the arbitrators' award when considering his own conclusions. Personally I cannot follow the logic or reason of that decision. It appears to me to be in direct contravention of section 145, sub-section 4, and I cannot find any warrant or authority for the suggestion that any Magistrate can delegate his duties as a Judge of fact or law to any body to discharge for him. Accordingly, in my opinion there has been an excess of jurisdiction in this case and the Magistrate has acted improperly in referring this matter or proceeding under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure pending before him to arbitration. I mention this because the learned Deputy Magistrate in his judgment states that in law there is nothing for or against a reference of a case under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, to arbitration by consent of parties. In my opinion he is entirely wrong in that view; and I have gone as carefully as I have done into this case so that I may correct the obvious error which the

KRISTO LALL v. CHAIRMAN OF HOOGHLY-CHINSURAH MUNICIPALITY.

Magistrate is labouring under, and I hope that he will exercise a wiser discretion in future.

Mr. Sinha asks me to exercise my discretion and inquire into the merits of this case; because even if there may have been an excess of jurisdiction, he urges I should consider the merits of the case and not allow a mere technicality of this kind to override what really are the true merits of the case. Unfortunately I cannot yield to that argument. In my opinion where there has been an excess of jurisdiction, the whole proceeding and result following from that excess of jurisdiction is a nullity. Accordingly I will set aside the order of the 21st of November of the learned Deputy Magistrate and will remand the case for re-hearing within ten days from the date on which the record reaches the Deputy Magistrate's Court. In the meantime the property will remain attached until the final disposal of this case.

Order set aside; Case remanded.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chitty and

KRISTO LALL MALLIK—ACCUSED—

PETITIONER

versus

CHAIRMAN OF HOOGHLY-CHINSURAH, MUNICIPALITY—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Bengal Municipal Act (III B.C. of 1884), ss. 44, 45, 230, 271, 353—Sanction for prosecution by public authority, whether to be under seal—Report of outdoor inspector recommending prosecution signed by Chairman, whether complaint—Notice against accused by Vice-Chairman, how validated.

In the absence of any legislative enactment a sanction for prosecution by a public authority does not require to be under seal. [p 516, col. 1.]

Where a report of offences under sections 230 and 271 of the Bengal Municipal Act was made by the outdoor inspector of a Municipality in a printed form, the columns of which were duly filled up and in the remarks column occurred the remark, "submitted to the District Magistrate with recommendation to prosecute the party under sections 230, 271 of the Bengal Municipal Act," and it bore a stamp of eight-annas and was signed by the Chairman of the Municipality:

Held, that the document was not a petition of complaint by the Chairman but was an order or consent by the Chairman as representing the Commissioners for or to the prosecution as required under section 353 of the Bengal Municipal Act and was sufficient under the law for the purpose of the prosecution. [p 516, col. 1.]

Held, also, that the notice against the accused issued on the authority of the Vice-Chairman without any delegation of authority by the Chairman by a written order, was not invalid as the consent of the Chairman was subsequently obtained to the act of the Vice-Chairman. [p. 516, col. 1.]

Criminal revision upon a reference by the District Judge, Hooghly.

Babu Atulya Charan Bose, for the Accused.

Babu Manmatha Nath Mukherjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Hooghly in the matter of one Kristo Lall Mallik, who was prosecuted under section 271 of the Bengal Municipal Act for having disobeyed a requisition under section 230 and sentenced to pay a fine. The learned Sessions Judge recommends that the conviction and sentence be set aside on two grounds, which he admits are technical. The first is that the prosecution was undertaken without the consent of the Commissioners. He concedes that, under section 44, the Chairman could give such consent. It appears from Exhibit 3 in the case that the report of this offence was made by the outdoor inspector; that the columns of that form were duly filled up; and that in the remarks column occurred this remark: "submitted to the District Magistrate, Hooghly, with a recommendation to prosecute the party under sections 230, 271 of the Bengal Municipal Act." That is signed by Mohendra Chandra Mitter, Chairman, Hooghly-Chinsurah Municipality. The learned Judge thinks that, because this document bears an 8 anna stamp, it must be regarded as a petition of complaint and that the Chairman of the Municipality was merely in the position of the complainant. We do not so regard it. Section 353 says that no prosecution for an offence under this Act shall be instituted without the order or consent of the Commissioners. This is clearly an order or consent by the Chairman as representing the Commissioners. It does not appear that the Chairman ever went before the District Magistrate; the complainant who appeared before him was the outdoor inspector; and he gave evidence as such complainant, as appears from his deposition. We have been referred on this point to a decision of this Court in Rasul Baksh v. Municipal Board of Chapra (1), in which the Judges are reported to have remarked: "The only evidence of sanction of prosecution by a public authority is a writing under the seal and signature of that authority." We have not been told of any enactment which requires a sanction for prosecution to be under seal. The facts of that case were somewhat different from the facts of the present case; but, so far as the seal was held to be necessary, we are unable to agree with that in the absence of any legislative enactment to that effect. The expression there "sanction of prosecution" is not quite in the wording of section 353, which speaks of the "order or consent." Exhibit 2 amounting to such order or consent in writing by the Chairman is, we think, sufficient.

The second point is that the notice, Exhibit 1, against the accused was issued on the authority of the Vice-Chairman and that there is no evidence that the latter derived authority from the Chairman. The learned Judge has referred to sections 44 and 45; but he has not directly referred to the proviso to section 45. Here it may be assumed that there was no written order delegating to the Vice-Chairman all or any of the duties or powers of a Chairman as defined in the Act, which would cover the particular order made by the Vice Chairman in this case. The proviso, however, to section 45 says: "Provided that nothing done by the Vice-Chairman which might have been done under the authority of a written order from the Chairman, shall be invalid for want of or defect of such written order, if it be done with the express or implied consent of the Chairman previously or subsequently obtained." That the act of the Vice-Chairman was done with the express consent of the Chairman subsequently obtained is clear in this case from the order to which we have referred in Exhibit 3. It is clear that the Chairman must have given consent to the act of the Vice-Chairman; or he could never have written that order which has been designated a sanction to prosecute. On this point we have been referred to the case of Kherola Prosad Paul v. Chairman of the Howrah Municipality (2). But the facts there were very different from the facts in the present case. There was no evidence of any such consent on the part of the Chairman as appears here. All that there was in that case to justify the order was a verbal order given some months before by the Chairman to the Vice-Chairman to institute all prosecutions under section 353.

We think, therefore, on the clear reading of the Act that the two points which the learned Judge has put forward cannot be supported. His recommendation to revise the proceedings is rejected.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 185, 526, 527—Scope of s. 185—Transfer, powers of, of High Court—Conflict of jurisdiction of different High Courts—Transfer from Court subordinate to another High Court—Opinion, expression of, competency of—Practice—Procedure.

Section 185 of the Criminal Procedure Code gives no powers of transfer to the High Court even inferentially. The power to transfer vested in the High Court under the Code is dealt with solely by section 526. [p. 517, cols. 1 & 2; p. 518, col. 2; p. 519, col. 1.]

A High Court has no jurisdiction, under section 185, to transfer a case pending in a Court outside its jurisdiction and subject to the superintendence of a different High Court, though it has the power to prevent a Court subordinate to itself from grasping at jurisdiction or trying a case which had better be tried by another Court, whether subordinate to that High Court or not. The only person who has any jurisdiction to pass orders binding on different High Courts is the Governor-General acting under section 527. [p. 517, col. 2; p. 519, col. 2.]

Section 185 cannot be availed of by any High Court even to express a pious opinion that a case pending outside its jurisdiction should be inquired into and tried by a Court subordinate to it. [p. 518, col. 2.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—Section 185 was intended only to apply to and provide for the following two sets of circumstances: (1) Where two cases 'are pending' in two Courts within the jurisdiction respectively of two separate High Courts, on the same set of facts, the High Court within which the offender is found has the deciding voice 'whether the Court within its own jurisdiction' shall or shall not proceed against the accused. If it decides in the affirmative, the outside Court cannot proceed further, as the High Court has full powers to prevent a person who is within its jurisdiction from being taken out of that jurisdiction till the case in its subordinate Court is concluded; (2) Where only one case has been instituted in a Court subordinate to the High Court in whose jurisdiction the offender is, that High Court can decide whether the case should be enquired into and tried by its own subordinate Court or should be tried in a Court within the jurisdiction of some other High Court. [p. 519, cols. 1 & 2.]

ORDER.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I agree with my learned brother that this petition should be dismissed. I am clear that section 185 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not enable a High Court to make an order transferring a case pending on the file of a Criminal Court, whether within or outside its jurisdiction, to the file of another Criminal Court, whether such other Criminal Court be within its own jurisdiction or without its jurisdiction. Section 185, in my opinion, has absolutely nothing to do with transfer or with a High Court's power of transfer. The power to transfer vested in the High Court, so far as the Criminal Procedure Code is concerned, is dealt with and was intended by the Legislature to be dealt with solely by section 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. That section gives full powers to a High Court to transfer cases pending in a Court "subordinate thereto" to any other "such" Court (that is any other Court "subordinate" to it or even to itself). It seems to me [with the greatest respect to the decisions in Hiran Kumar Chowdhury v. Mangil Sen (1) and Emperor v. Chaichal Singh (2), which I am unable to follow] to be wholly contrary to usually accepted canons of construction to infer from the language of section 185 (which does not use the word "transfer" or any word even remotely suggesting the idea of "transfer") a power in the High Court to transfer cases, especially to transfer a case pending in a Court outside its jurisdiction. As my learned brother points out, what power has a High Court to enforce its order transferring a case instituted and pending outside its jurisdiction? As he has further pointed out, section 527 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure clearly implies that it is only the Governor-General-in-Council that has the power to transfer a case pending in a Court subordinate to one High Court to be tried by a Court subordinate to another High Court. On this short ground, this revision petition should be dismissed.

As, however, it was argued that we are at least entitled to "decide" under section 185 of the Code of Criminal Procedure "by which Court the offence shall be inquired into or tried" and that this provision means that we are entitled to express an opinion (even though it might be a mere pious unenforceable opinion) that the Presidency Magistrate's Court within our jurisdiction should inquire into this case, I shall proceed to express my opinion on the whole scope of that section (185) of the Code of Criminal Procedure).

Reliance was placed on behalf of the petitioner on the cases of Queen Empress v. O'Brien (3) and Babu Lal v. Ghansham Das (4). Those, however, were cases in which the High Court's opinion was expressed against the jurisdiction (and competency to try) of the Court, subordinate to that High Court, which subordinate Court had taken cognizance of a criminal case (and not against the jurisdiction of a Court not subordinate to itself). Of course, every High Court has power to prevent a Court subordinate to itself from grasping at jurisdiction or from trying a case which had better be tried by another Court, whether subordinate to that High Court or not subordinate to it. It has also power to decide, when an accused person is found within its jurisdiction and a criminal case is pending against him in a Court subordinate to its appellate criminal jurisdiction, which of two courses is more advisable, (1) that the offence should be inquired into and tried by that subordinate Court or (2) that the offence should be inquired into and tried by a Court subordinate to another High Court (which subordinate Court is empowered to take cognizance of it under one of the sections 177 to 184). In other words, I am quite clear that section 185 was intended only to apply to and provide for the following two sets of circumstances: (1) Where two cases are pending in two Courts within the jurisdiction respectively of two separate High Courts on the same set of facts, the High Court within which the offender is found has the deciding voice whether the Court within its own jurisdiction shall or shall not proceed against the accused (such decision being intended to be based on grounds of convenience, jurisdiction, fairness to both sides, etc.). If it decides in the affirmative, the outside Court cannot proceed further, as the High Court has full powers to prevent a person who is within its jurisdiction from being taken out of that jurisdiction till the case in its subordinate Court is concluded. (2) Where only one case has been instituted in a Court subordinate to the High Court in whose jurisdiction the offender is, that High Court can decide whether the case should be inquired into and tried by its own subordinate Court or should be tried in a Court within the jurisdiction of some other High Court.

I am consequently of opinion that where a case is pending in a Court subordinate to a particular High Court, section 185 cannot be availed of by that High Court to give a decision that a Court subordinate to it should or should not inquire into or try an offence charged in a case pending in a Court not subordinate to it. I wish to add that as my opinion numbered (1) as above is not consistent with the observations in Rajani Binod Chakravarti v. All India Banking and Insurance Co., Ltd. (5) (which observations are to the effect that grounds of convenience cannot be considered in giving a decision under section 185 and that where there is no real doubt as to jurisdiction, section 185 does not apply), I respectfully dissent from that decision also.

NAPIER, J.—This is an application by a person carrying on business in Madras to transfer to the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Madras, Case No. 571 of 1916 on the file of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Bombay, in which the petitioner is accused of offences under sections 482 and 483 of the Penal Code on the complaint of the counter petitioner, who carries on business in Bombay. The application purports to be made under section 185 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the ground alleged being that the Chief Presidency Magistrate has no jurisdiction to try the case. I express no opinion on the question whether the section applies to cases where there is a doubt as to the existence of jurisdiction in the Court that has taken cognizance, as well as to cases where there is admittedly double jurisdiction under sections 179 and 181, Criminal Procedure Code. Whether this be so or not, I am clearly of opinion that this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the application. In terms, section 185, Criminal Procedure Code, gives no power to transfer at all, but it is argued that the power to transfer must be inferred as being requisite to make the decision operative. This is not so; for dealing with Courts under our own jurisdiction we have specific power under the Code, and we cannot possibly infer a power to deprive Courts not under our superintendence of the jurisdiction. Reliance is placed on a case reported as Hiran Kumar Chowdhury v. Mangal Sen (1), where the High Court of Calcutta made an order transferring a case pending before a Court subordinate to the Chief Court of the Punjab to one of its own Courts. I am unable to follow this precedent. Admittedly, a High Court cannot enforce such an order and we have no doubt that, on the true reading of the section, there is no such power. It was pointed out in the course of argument that the conflict of jurisdiction or double jurisdiction under sections 181 to 184, Criminal Procedure Code, usually arises where offences have been committed in one jurisdiction and consequences follow in another, and not owing to the place where a person charged is. If section 185, Criminal Procedure Code, is to be given the wide meaning sought to be put on it, it would follow that the High Court within whose jurisdiction a person charged is, could make an order where the conflict or doubt as to jurisdiction arose between two local Courts in the jurisdiction of another High Court; that is to say, for instance, the Court of the Resident of Bangalore, in whose jurisdiction a person was living at the time a charge was laid against him in a Madras Court, could decide as to which of two Courts under the jurisdiction of the High Court of Madras a person should be tried on the application of section 181, clauses 2, 3 and 4 or section 182, Criminal Procedure Code. It is hardly necessary to say that this could not have been the intention of the Legislature. In our opinion, the Court has no power to transfer under this section. What it can do is to decide by which Court the offence shall be enquired into or tried, and where a charge has been laid against and the accused person is at the time within its own jurisdiction and a question arises whether it should not more properly be tried in a Court subject to the jurisdiction of another Court, the High Court in whose jurisdiction the person is, can decide that its own Court should not inquire into the matter and stay proceedings. It would be then open to the complainant to lay his charge in the other Court and any objection to the jurisdiction of that Court would be heard by its own High Court. This action has been taken on several occasions. [Vide the cases reported as Emperor v. Chaichal Singh (2) and Babu Lal v. Ghansham Das (4)] It is true that in those cases the Court did make an order that the foreign Court should try the case; but I desire to say that, even if we had jurisdiction in this case on our reading of the section above set out, we should not think it proper to make any such order because we should be unable to enforce it. It is suggested that the Magistrate of a foreign Court might act on the order and take cognizance of a case. Even if he did, it would be open to the accused to apply to the High Court having jurisdiction over that Magistrate, and it cannot be suggested that our order would be in any way binding on that High Court. The only person who has any jurisdiction to pass orders binding on different High Courts is the Governor-General-in-Council under section 527, Criminal Procedure Code, and I am satisfied that the Code did not intend to vest in any High Court, powers which were on the face of them, infructuous or might lead to conflict with another High Court.

The petition is, therefore, dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference by the District Magistrate of Monghyr, in which he recommends that an order of acquittal passed by a Deputy Magistrate at Monghyr should be set aside. The facts are as follows:—

Loka Mahton and Domoo Sahu are rival zemindars in a village and have been on bad terms with each other for some years.

One Paltan Khan, said to have been an influential resident of the village, was appointed gomasta by Domoo Sahu and succeeded in gaining over most of the villagers to the side of his master. Jitan Dusadh, a tenant in the village and gorait of Loka Mahton, was asked by Paltan Khan to give up service under Loka Mahton and go over to the side of Domoo Sahu. Jitan refused and it is said that, in consequence of his refusal, in the middle of the night of January 1914, Paltan Khan and others appeared at his house and carried off a quantity of paddy belonging to him. Jitan complained to the Police and subsequently also to a Magistrate, with the result that Paltan Khan and others were placed on their trial and were convicted under sections 379, 147 and 323 of the Indian Penal Code. As the riot appeared to have been committed in the interest of Domoo Sahu, the employer of Paltan Khan, Jitan Dusadh applied to the District Magistrate to place Domoo Sahu also on his trial for offences under sections 154 and 155 of the Indian Penal Code. The District Magistrate on that application directed the prosecution of several persons who were supposed to have taken part in the riot, and ordered Jitan to file a fresh application against Domoo Sahu. Jitan did so and January 27th 1916 was fixed for the trial. There was an adjournment to February 11th, but on February 4th Jitan died. His son appeared in Court on February 11th and asked to be allowed to go on with the case. But the Deputy Magistrate acquitted the accused under section 247 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is quite clear from the order of acquittal and also from the explanation furnished by the Deputy Magistrate, that he was of opinion that he had no option but to acquit the accused in the circumstances. We have been referred to two cases on the construction of section 247 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, namely, Madho Chowdhury v. Turab Mian (1) and Purna Chandra Moulik v. Dengar Chandra Pal (2). In the former a servant of a zemindar had lodged a complaint of an offence under section 426 of the Indian Penal Code. When the case was called on it was found that the complainant was dead, and the Magistrate acquitted the accused. The High Court said: "When the day came for disposal, the servant of the zemindar, who had made the complaint, was dead, and the Magistrate adopted the rather extraordinary course, although he knew that the servant was dead, of acquitting the accused under section 247 of the Code of Criminal Procedure". The Court seems to have been of opinion that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to pass an order of acquittal in the circumstances. In the second case, a complaint had been made of offences under sections 448, 352 and 323 of the Indian Penal Code, but the Magistrate had summoned the accused to answer a charge under section 352 of the Indian Penal Code only. The original complainant having died, a nephew of the deceased asked the Magistrate to permit him to go on with the case. The Magistrate allowed the petition on the ground, apparently, that the accused had been guilty of contempt of Court. The learned Judges who disposed of this case said: "The case is one under section 352 of the Indian Penal Code which is compoundable, and we see no reason for the substitution of Bisseshur in place of the deceased complainant. An order under section 247 ought to have been passed by the Magistrate on the failure of the complainant to appear at the hearing of the case, and section 247 empowers the Magistrate to acquit the accused person, unless for some reason he thinks proper to adjourn the case to some other day." They then went on to hold that the reason given by the Magistrate for proceeding with the case was not sufficient and they set his order aside. It is open to doubt whether section 247 of the Code was intended to apply to such a case as this. It seems to apply primarily to the case of a complainant who is alive but does not appear, for the closing words of the first paragraph of the section seem to suggest that the case should be adjourned in order to enable the complainant to appear.

If section 247 does not apply at all to a case of this kind, there was nothing to prevent the Magistrate from going on with the proceedings. If it does apply to such a case, then we think that the case before us was eminently one in which the Magistrate should have decided to go on with the proceedings. The District Magistrate points out in his reference that the offence complained of is an offence against the public tranquillity, and he says that if he had contemplated the possibility of the case being dismissed on account of the absence of the complainant, he would himself have taken action. It is urged before us that we ought not to interfere with an order of acquittal except on appeal by the Local Government. There is no doubt that the practice of the High Courts has always been to refuse to interfere in revision with acquittals except for special reasons. In the present case if the Magistrate had exercised his discretion and had given reasons for refusing to go on with the case, we might have been disinclined to interfere, but he seems to have thought that he had no option but to acquit the accused. It is a mere accident that the present case was instituted on the complaint of Jitan. It is a case of considerable importance involving the peace of the district, and under the circumstances we think that we ought to set aside the order of acquittal. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate's order is accordingly set aside and he is directed to proceed with the trial of the case.

Order set aside.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 292—Obscene publication—Obscenity, tests for determining—Intention, whether material.

Where matter contained in a book is obscene, it is no justification of an offence under section 292 of the Indian Penal Code that the matter published was written by an eminent writer. [p. 522, col. 1.]

The term 'obscene' is not defined in the Indian Penal Code, but the test of obscenity is whether the matter charged as being obscene is likely to deprave and corrupt the minds of those who are open to such immoral influences and into whose hands the publication of the sort may fall. [p. 522, col. 2; p. 523, col. 1.]

Reg. v. Hicklin, (1868) 3 Q. B. Cas. 360; 37 L. J. M. C. 84; 18 L. T. 395; 16 W. R. 801; 11 Cox. C. C. 19; Queen-Empress v. Parashram Feshwant, 20 B. 193; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 637; Sirat Chandra Ghose v. King-Emperor, 32 C. 247; 2 Cr. L. J. 201, followed.

The question of intention of the writer is not germane to the consideration of an offence under section 292 of the Indian Penal Code, which can only be gathered from the character of the matter contained in the book, the publisher of which must be deemed to have intended the natural consequences of his act. JUDGMENT.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The accused in this case has been charged with the offence of having printed and published for sale a Telugu booklet named 'Vidi Natakam'. The author is said to be Srinadha who lived in the middle of the 15th century, and who has written some classical books in the Telugu language. Certain stanzas in this book have been selected by the prosecution as having a tendency to deprave and to corrupt the morals of the readers. The defence was that the author was a writer of repute, that the diction in which the stanzas are written is not easily understandable by the ordinary reader, that they are of artistic and literary merit, and that there is nothing in the verses selected which could be taken exception to. It was also stated that the book has gone through a number of editions and that the republication was not an offence. The Magistrate agreeing with the defence set up acquitted the accused. The Government have appealed.

I am of opinion that the acquittal is wrong. I cannot help saying that the Magistrate, who apparently has taken great pains and has written a very elaborate judgment, has misdirected himself. I agree with the Magistrate—in fact the learned Public Prosecutor did not challenge in this Court the correctness of that conclusion—that the work in question was written by Srinadha. But it is no justification under section 292 of the Indian Penal Code that the matter published was written by an eminent writer. In the 15th century when the book was written, the art of publication, as we understand it now, was not known. It may have been permissible among great men in those days to indulge in compositions of doubtful morality. But when a publication of that kind is reprinted and sold broadcast at the rate of one anna per copy so that it may be available to the man in the street, the question whether by this conduct the accused has not committed an offence against public morality and decency, assumes a different aspect. Further the Magistrate throughout the whole of his judgment seems to regard the opinion of learned men and pandits as conclusive upon a question of this kind. The opinion of men of the world and of persons who belong to the classes into whose hands this publication is likely to find its way is more entitled to weight than the judgment of scholars and of men of undisputed moral character. Looking at the question from this standpoint, there can be no doubt that the evidence given by the prosecution witnesses is more entitled to weight than the opinion of the defence witnesses. I agree with the Magistrate that these latter witnesses are all men of high character and of social standing. I say nothing about their competency to pronounce an opinion upon the literary and artistic merits of a work of this kind. But I am not prepared to accept their conclusions as correctly representing the effect which a publication of this kind is likely to have on the popular mind. Among the witnesses for the defence, defence witness No. 5 may be selected as being entitled to speak with some authority upon the probable impression which some of the stanzas in question may have upon the public. He is a first class Deputy Collector and Magistrate and has had large experience of the world. I shall, therefore, in considering the character of the stanzas take into account his views upon them. There is no definition of the term 'obscene' in the Indian Penal Code. But there can be no doubt that the test of obscenity is what has been laid down by Cockburn, C. J., in the well known case of Reg. v. Hicklin (1). The learned Chief

(1) (1868) 3 Q. B. Cas. 367; 37 L. J. M. C. 89; 18 L. T. 395; 16 W. R. 801; 11 Cox. C. C. 19.

PUBLIC PROSECUTOR v. MANTRIPRAGADA MARKONDEYULU.

Justice says that the test is whether the tendency of the matter charged as obscenity is to deprave and corrupt the minds of those who are open to such immoral influences, and into whose hands the publication of the sort may fall. This definition of obscenity was accepted by Jardine and Ranade, J.J., in Queen-Empress v. Parashram Yeshwant (2) and by Ameer Ali and Pratt, J.J., in Sarat Chandra Ghose v. King-Emperor (3). Following these decisions, I shall consider whether the stanzas, charged as being obscene, are of a character calculated to produce a pernicious effect on the minds of the persons into whose hands they might fall. It was strenuously pressed upon us by Mr. Narayanamurthi, who appeared for the accused, that the intention of the accused was not to encourage immoral tendencies, but to publish a classical work of a standard author in the true interests of Telugu literature. In the first place the question of intention is not germane to the consideration of an offence under section 292 of the Indian Penal Code. What the Courts have to find out is not the intention of the publisher, but the effect the publication is likely to have upon the public mind. If intention is any test, as was pointed out in Empress of India v. Indarman (4), it can only be gathered from the character of the matter contained in the book, and the publisher of such a work must be deemed to have intended the natural consequences of his act. Further, it can hardly be disputed that the avowed object of Vidi Natakam is to convey immoral ideas. Defence witness No. 1 says at page 48 that Vidi Natakam must have for its hero a Dheerodhathudu. It must indicate the love passion. An honourable wife should not figure as the heroine. The heroine should be a samanya, that is a stranger's wife who is not a professional prostitute, that is a stranger's wife who loves a person other than her husband. The witnesses both for the prosecution and the defence agree in substance with this description of Vidi Natakam. It is clear from this evidence that an honourable love is not what is intended to be depicted in these verses, and that the illicit passion of a libertine towards a married wife of another is the theme of these stanzas. Consequently there can be no manner of doubt that primarily the verses are calculated to engender lust and impure ideas in the minds of an ordinary reader, and when it is seen that the price is fixed so low as at one anna per copy so that it may reach the hands of as many as are capable of purchasing it there is no room for any speculation as to the object or intention of the publication.

Now we shall consider some of the verses which have been objected to and see how far the test of Cockburn, C. J., applies to them. Before passing, I cannot help remarking that the translation furnished to the Court has not been accurate. Mr. Osborne has placed in our hands a translation of the objected verses which we consider to be more in accordance with the spirit of the original composition than what the Court translator has given us. The first verse objected to is the 27th. The prosecution charges that the Telugu expression "Manmadhuni Gopyamu Gahamu" is objectionable. The literal translation of the expression is "Cupid's secret home". The defence theory is that the expression refers to the face of the damsel and not to any other part of her body. Looking at the context, I feel no hesitation in holding that the expression does not refer to the face of the girl but to a very objectionable part of her body. There are expressions in the stanza which are calculated to excite a libidinous desire in the reader. I may point out that Mr. Jayanti Ramayya, the 5th witness for the defence, concedes that the expression refers not to the face but to the private part of a female. The next verse which I shall consider is verse 37. A great deal of learned argument was addressed to us by Mr. Narayanamurthi on the meaning of the expression "Dheerga Danda". The Magistrate has considered the etymological meaning of the expression. Mr. Jayanti Ramayya says that he is unable to make out the true meaning of the author. I feel no doubt that the whole stanza is calculated to excite lust and to instil improper ideas into the minds of the reader.

The general trend of the stanza is this: The breasts of a woman unable to bear the beatings of the male have fallen down and have reached up to the navel. Thereupon further progress has been abandoned, according to the prosecution, because of the fear of punishment by a stick, 'according to the defence) by reason of the proximity to a well. The defence contended that "Dheerga Danda" is a misprint for "Dheerghi Danda" (a deep well) and that what is indicated by the expression is the navel itself. In our opinion, that is not the correct meaning to be attached to the expression. It is not necessary to pursue the subject further, as we are of opinion that even apart from this reference to the punishment by a stick the earlier portion of the stanza is bad enough and is calculated to excite lust and evil passions. Stanza 43 is another of the objectionable ones, and we are satisfied that the reference in the stanza is to the private part of a woman. We are willing to give the benefit of the doubt to the accused so far as stanza 47 is concerned. It may be that an author of renown like Srinadha would not have that Lord Shiva should be addressed in the way suggested by the prosecution. It is not unlikely that the reference in that stanza is to what poets refer to as "Adhara Amirtham". Similarly we are willing to concede that in stanza 30, the reference may be to the Uriya women, some of whom are in the habit of wearing a veil, and that the removal of the sari is from the face and not from any other part of the body. Even leaving aside these two stanzas, there can be no question that the general tenor of the verses objected to by the prosecution is to create an unholy desire and to engender illicit sexual passion in the minds of the reader; and having regard to the avowed object of the writing and to the fact that it has been placed within the reach of the poorest among the people, we are constrained to hold that the effect of the publication is to corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influences.

The fact that some of the verses are written in a style which is not easily understood is no justification at all. It is true that the style is somewhat difficult, but there can be no difficulty in a person who is acquainted with ordinary Telugu from grasping the general effect of the stanzas.

For these reasons, I would set aside the order of acquittal of the accused and convict him of an offence under section 292 of the Indian Penal Code. Having regard to the fact that the accused has only republished what has already gone through a number of editions, and to the fact that the book is by a renowned author, we do not think it necessary that a very severe punishment should be inflicted upon the accused. We must sentence him to pay a fine of Rs. 100 and in default to undergo simple imprisonment for six weeks. The copies of the books in his hands must be confiscated under section 521 of the Criminal Procedure Code and he should hand them over to the Crown.

AYLING, J.—I concur.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 561 OF 1916.

RESPONDENT No. 1.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145—Rent of land, dispute as to—Dispute, whether should be between rival claimants—Jurisdiction.

A dispute as to the right to collect rent is a right concerning "tangible immovable property or land" within the meaning of section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. [p. 525, col. 1.]

Abhayessari Debi v. Shilhessari Debi, 16 C. 513; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 339, Sarbananda Basu Mozundar v. Pran Sankar Roy Choudhuri, 15 C. 527; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 435, followed.

To take action under the section it is not necessary that the apprehended breach of the peace should be between the rival claimants. [p. 525, col. 1.]

The grounds of a Magistrate's belief need not be set out seriatim in the notice issued to parties under the section. It is enough if the Magistrate states in his order that he believes the statement of the petitioner which contains such grounds. [p. 525, col. 1.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Joint Magistrate, Tinnevely, in Miscellaneous Case No. 15 of 1916.

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

Mr. P. N. Marthandam Pillai, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—This is an order under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which is sought to be revised. It is admitted that a revision does not lie except on the ground of jurisdiction, but it is argued that as the petitioner in the lower Court was not in actual possession this section does not apply.

It is, however, clear that a dispute as to the right to collect rents is a dispute concerning tangible immoveable property or land. See Abhayessari Debi v. Shidhessari Debi (1) and also Sarbananda Basu Mozumdar v. Pran Sankar Roy Chowdhuri (2).

It is next urged that the breach of the peace apprehended was one between the petitioner's tenants and the counter-petitioners and not between the latter and the petitioner. To take action under section 145 it is sufficient if the Magistrate is satisfied that there is a dispute concerning land which is likely to lead to a breach of the peace. The apprehended breach need not be actually between the rival claimants but only on account of the dispute.

It is lastly urged that on the authority of the case of Posuka Kulla v. Tandalagara Okikka Hina (3), this application should be allowed. But I find in this case the Magistrate did set out the grounds of his belief of the likelihood of the breach of the peace, as he believed the statement to that effect made by the petitioner.

He has also found in his present order that such likelihood did exist.

I, therefore, dismiss the petition.

Petition dismissed.

THE GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS—

RESPONDENT.

Press Act—(I of 1910), ss. 3, 4, 17, 19, 20, 22—Deposit of security, order for—Order dispensing with security, cancellation of—High Court, interference by, under Press Act—Jurisdiction—Forfeiture of security—Interference by High Court, grounds for—Scope of ss. 3 and 4—Applicability to old Presses—Government of India Act, 1915, (5 & 6 Geo. 5, Ch. 61), s. 65—Press Act legislation, whether ultra vires in whole or part—Special Bench, jurisdiction of, to pronounce on legality of the Act—Procedure under the Act—Burden of proof—Intention of writer, when essential—'Government established by law', meaning of—'Exciting hatred and contempt', meaning of—Alien character of Government, criticism of, when privileged—Evidence—Articles, not the subject of proceedings, admissibility of, to prove general tone and policy of newspaper—Evidence—Home Rule or Self-Government for India on Colonial lines, agitation for, whether lawful—Methods of advocacy—Legitimate discussion and propaganda, principles governing—Interpretation of Statute—Proviso.

Per Curiam.—The High Court has no jurisdiction sitting as a Special Tribunal under the Press Act, to consider any other matter, save whether certain words contained in a newspaper and specified in the order of forfeiture by Government under section 4 are or are not of the nature described in clause (1) of the section. Proceedings under section 3, i. e., the imposition of security or the cancellation of an order dispensing with security are not subject to the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court under sections 17 and 22 of the Act. [p. 579, col. 1; p. 589, col. 2; p. 598, col. 2; p. 599, col. 1.]

The provisions of the Press Act are applicable to all Printing Presses, even those which were in existence before the passing of the Act and for which fresh declaration is necessary under the Act under certain conditions. [p. 578, col. 1.]

The words 'Government established by law in British India' are not restricted to the supremacy of the King and the British connection, but include the composite body of persons that constitute the Government in India. [p. 583, col. 2; p. 584, col. 1; p. 590, col. 2; p. 603, col. 2.]

The language of section 4 (1) of the Press Act is very wide, wider than the corresponding provisions in sections 124A and 153, Indian Penal Code. [p. 579, col. 2; p. 590, col. 1; p. 600, col. 2.]

Articles which are not the subject of the proceedings before the Court are admissible to show the general policy of the paper. [p. 592, col. 2; p. 603, col. 2.]

Per Abdur Rahim, Offg. C. J., and Ayling, J.—The language of the sub-clauses to section 4 of the Press Act is not so wide as to embrace within its scope writings that may even command approval, or writing attacking a degraded section of the public which lives on the misery and shame of others or unduly praising a class. [p. 583, col. 1; p. 589, col. 2; p. 500, col. 1.]

Per Abdur Rahim, Offg. C. J., and Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—The question whether the Press Act or any portion of it is ultra vires of the powers of the Indian Legislature, as contravening the spirit of section 65 (2) of the Government of India Act, is not a matter which can be considered by the High Court sitting as a Special Tribunal under sections 18 and 19 of the Press Act. [p. 580, col. 1.]

Obiter.—A Magistrate has no jurisdiction under section 3 to impose security on a Printing Press after having previously dispensed with it under the proviso to the section, but the High Court has no jurisdiction under section 17 of the Press Act to determine the validity or otherwise of the proceedings of the Magistrate under section 3. [p. 578, col. 2; 579, col. 1.]

The onus is upon the person whose security has been forfeited to prove that the publications selected by the Government at their own discretion may not have the tendency described in the various sub-clauses to section 4 of the Press Act. [p. 583, col. 1.]

The advocacy of Home Rule for India or Self-Government on Colonial lines and suggestions for the carrying on of a propaganda to achieve the same are not per se obnoxious to the provisions of section 4 of the Press Act, but it is not permissible for a publicist discussing the Government's actions and failures to impute base and dishonourable motives to it. [p. 585, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Abdur Rahim, Offg. C. J.—A proviso to a section is something subordinate to the main clause and the general rule is that what is contained in the proviso is not to be imported by implication into the clause. [p. 578, col. 2.]

West Derby Union v. Metropolitan Life Assurance Society, (1897), A. C. 647 at p. 652; 66 L. J. Ch. 726; 77 L. T. 284; 61 J. P. 820, referred to.

The words 'any order' in the proviso to section 3 (1) cannot include the order dispensing with security. [p. 578, col. 2.]

The Press Act imposes no duty upon the Government to issue any warning or to ask for any explanation before taking action under section 4 and the absence of warning cannot be relied on to influence the decision of the High Court on the nature of the alleged offending articles. [p. 579, col. 2.]

Section 4 of the Act is so wide in its scope that even a loyal newspaper whose general policy is above all reproach can be brought within it, if any letters or writings are let in through carelessness which offend any of the sub-clauses of the section. The vesting of such unlimited powers in the Government is a serious encroachment on the freedom which the Press in India enjoyed before the passing of the Act. [p. 580, col. 1.]

Mahomed Ali v. Emperor, 20 Ind. Cas. 977; 41 C. 466; 14 Cr. L. J. 497; 18 O. W. N. 1, referred to.

Obiter.—There is a fundamental difference between the Legislative powers of the Imperial Parliament which, according to the theory of the English constitution, can enact any laws it chooses and the authority of the Indian Legislature which is purely derivative and subordinate. Any enactment of the latter in excess of its delegated powers or in violation of the limitations imposed by the Imperial Parliament is null and void. The 'unwritten laws' referred to in section 65 (2) of the Government of India Act, 1915, which, under the section cannot be violated by any enactment of the Governor-General in Legislative Council, are, generally speaking, the laws recognising the fundamental right of the subject to enjoyment of personal freedom and property of which he could not be deprived by a Court of Law. [p. 580, col. 2; p. 581, cols. 1 & 2.]

Norman, J.'s view in In the matter of Ameer Khan, 6 B. L. R. 392, approved.

Secretary of State v. J. Momen, 18 Ind. Cas. 22; 13 M. L. T. 53; 17 C. W. N. 169; (1913) M. W. N. 45; 15 Bom. L. R. 27; 11 A. L. J. 49; 17 C. L. J. 191; 6 Bur. L. T. 1; 24 M. L. J. 49; 40 C. 391; 7 L. B. R. 10; 40 I. A. 48 (P. C.), referred to.

The words 'whether by inference, suggestion, etc.' in section 4 are used merely by way of explanation and do not in any way enlarge the meaning of the words 'which are likely or may have a tendency directly or indirectly.' By 'tendency' is meant the natural effect of the words used on the readers of the newspaper in question, and not the effect which they may produce on the minds of abnormally constituted persons, or persons whose acquaintance with the language is inadequate or those who might content themselves with reading certain passages or expressions apart from the context. All that has to be taken into account is the effect which the words are, by their nature, likely to produce on a normal average reader understanding them in their plain, natural meaning. [p. 583, col. 1.]

In applying section 4 (1), apart from explanation 2, the intention of the Editor or writer need not be considered, if it is not shown that the words, in their plain, ordinary meaning, may not tend to produce the objectionable effects mentioned in clauses (a) to (f). [p. 583, cols. 1 & 2.]

The intention becomes relevant only under explanation 2. It means that comments on the measures and actions of the Government are exempted from the operation of section 4, provided the person making the comments does not excite or attempt to excite thereby hatred or contempt against the Government. But the protection afforded by this explanation is extended only to comments on Government's measures and actions and not to attacks on the Government itself, which have to be judged by light of section 4 without reference to the explanation. [p. 584, col. 2.]

The words 'hatred and contempt' in section 4 mean something more than mere disapproval or dislike. [p. 583, col. 2.]

The words 'Government established by law in British India' in section 4 denote an established authority entitled and able to administer the public affairs of the country. It is not identical with any particular individuals who may be administering the Government. The law does not prohibit criticisms of the Government as constituted in a par-

tical form, provided such criticisms do not bring it into hatred or contempt or excite disaffection against it. [p. 583, col. 2; p. 584, col. 1]

Emperor v. Bhaskar Balwant Bhopatkar, 8 Bom. L. R. 421 at p. 43; 4 Cr. L. J. 1; 30 B. 421, referred to.

The advocacy of any Home Rule propaganda for India cannot be regarded as illegal per se. It lies entirely with the Sovereign, that is, the King in Parliament, to establish any Government he chooses for India or any other part of the British Empire. There can be nothing wrong, therefore, in a subject of the Crown urging the desirability of a change in the machinery of the Government in India. In certain stages of society, reforms in the constitution of the Government are a biological and political necessity. To say that such questions are not open to public discussion, supposing that the law is not violated by the manner and the methods adopted in such discussion, would be opposed to all sound maxims of constitutional law. [p. 585, col. 1.]

Per Ayling, J. There is nothing in the Press Act which throws the onus on the applicant of proving that the words which are made the ground of forfeiture, do not fall within the scope of section 4. Whether the words are likely or may have a tendency to produce certain results must be determined primarily by inference from their own nature. The words, themselves, form the main evidence in the case. [p. 589, col. 2.]

The language of section 4 leaves the question of the intention of the writer quite immaterial. The Court has to confine its attention to the natural effect of the words without reference to what the writer meant or wished to be understood. To this, there is an important exception in explanation II of the section. Here the element of intention is present. The words 'attempt to incite' presuppose a sentient being and one animated by a particular intention. Therefore, in the case of comments on the measures of Government, an intention to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection is necessary to bring them within the scope of clause (c) of section 4 (1). The intention is, of course, deducible from the words of the articles themselves. [p. 590, cols. 1 & 2.]

The words 'Government established by law in British India' should be interpreted in the light of section 3 of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897), which governs the Press Act as regards definition of terms. So interpreted, it includes the Government of India and all local Governments. The addition of the words 'established by law in British India' seems to be intended to emphasize the fact that it is the Government existing at the time that is sought to be protected from attacks. [p. 590, col. 2; p. 591, col. 1.]

The word 'disaffection' in section 4 means, in addition to hatred and contempt, enmity, dislike, hostility and every form of ill-will towards the Government. It should not be restricted to courses of action that lead to rebellion or forcible resistance. [p. 591, cols. 1 & 2.]

Queen-Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 22 B. 112 at p. 125; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 656, approved.

It is open to any one to draw attention to the non-Indian elements in the Government of India, and to argue that these impair the efficiency of that Government, and that it would be to the public advantage, if they were replaced by Indian elements. That is legitimate criticism. But it is not legitimate to go further and to use the existence of the non-Indian elements of Government as a means of exciting hatred, contempt and disaffection against Government—as Sirachey, J., puts it, to hold up the Government to hatred and contempt by dwelling adversely on its foreign character and origin. It all depends on the manner in which and the object with which the circumstance is used in argument. [p. 592, cols. 1 & 2.]

It is not irrelevant to adduce in evidence articles in a newspaper which are not the subject of forfeiture in aid of the proof of the nature or tendency of the alleged offending articles, but it is most unsafe to judge of the intention of the writer in publishing the latter by reference to other articles previously published at long intervals of time, and mostly in other connections. [p. 592, col. 2.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J. A declaration under section 22 of the Press Act is notice to all persons that the Government have declared the forfeiture, but not that the forfeiture has been legally made. [p. 598, col. 2.]

Obiter.—Section 4 of the Press Act is not ultra vires of the powers of the Imperial Legislature, as the subject is not deprived of the right of showing that the forfeiture has not been incurred. Instead of taking the decision of the Court first and then declaring the forfeiture, the process has been reversed: such a procedure cannot be said to affect the allegiance of the subject. [p. 600, cols. 1 & 2.]

It cannot be said that the intention of the writer is of no consequence in applying the provisions of the Press Act. While the operative portion deals purely with the language employed, divorced from considerations of motive or intention, explanation II furnishes a ground of exemption, if it can be shown that there was no intention to excite or to attempt to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection. It is true that in the vast majority of cases the intention must be gathered from the language employed, but it is possible to show that what prima facie appears objectionable should not be given the meaning attributable to the words employed. [p. 601, col. 1.]

As the angle of vision has changed since previous pronouncements on the sections 124A and 153, Indian Penal Code, and political autonomy under certain conditions is declared legitimate, suggestions to the effect that an indigenous agency would be more suitable in certain departments of the administration and should be more largely employed, should not be regarded as exciting hatred or disaffection. Criticism attributing indifference to the welfare of the people would not always amount to sedition. If the criticism is couched in language which imports corrupt or malicious motives, the writer cannot escape. But if it aims to draw attention to a weak point in the administration in the hope that the criticism may lead to the redress of grievances or the removal of a disability, the writing cannot be condemned. [p. 601, col. 2; p. 602, cols. 1 & 2.]

Any discussion about 'Home Rule' for India is not per se objectionable. Two essentials should be kept in mind in asking for changes in the machinery of Government. The allegiance to the throne and person of the Sovereign should be held as inviolate, and there should be no suggestion that the connection which makes India an integral part of the British Empire should be severed. Within these limits, it is permissible to ask that the details of the administrative machinery should be readjusted to meet the exigencies of the times. [p. 602, col. 2.]

Emperor v. Baskar Balvant Bhopatkar, 4 Cr. L. J. 1; 30 B. 421; 5 Bom. L. R. 421 at p. 438, referred to.

The expression 'Government established by law in British India' means British rule and its representatives as such, the existing political system as distinguished from any particular set of administrators. [p. 603, col. 2.]

Clause (e) of section 4 is aimed at language which would render friendly co-operation between the different races living in India impossible. The language must be such as to lead to the breaking of the peace. [p. 603, col. 2.]

Articles evidencing the general policy of a Paper can be received in evidence and the right of adducing such evidence can be exercised by the Crown and the applicant, but there must be some connection between the subject-matter of the articles tendered and of the articles which are objected to. [p. 603, col. 2.]

[The Judges delivered varying opinions as to the nature of the various articles and how far they offended against section 4 of the Press Act.]

In the matter of the Indian Press Act, I of 1910, and in the matter of the Printing Press known as the "New India Printing Works" and in the matter of section 4 (1) of the said Act.

FACTS are clear from the petition of the applicant and the judgment.

The petition under section 17 of the Press Act of 1910 ran as follows:—

1. Mrs. Annie Besant, the petitioner above named, is the keeper and printer of the "New India Printing Works" and the Editor of the newspaper "New India" carrying on business at Nos. 13 and 14, Moore Street, George Town, Madras.

2. The petitioner is the absolute owner of the printing press known as the "New India Printing Works" and is the Editor of the newspaper known as "New India" which is being printed at the said press.

3. The said press and the paper called "The Madras Standard" and its good-will were purchased by the petitioner on the 13th July 1914, and the said newspaper was continued to be published by the petitioner from the date of purchase. The petitioner registered herself as Proprietor at the Egmore Police Court on the 14th July 1914. The name of the "Madras Standard" was changed to the name of "New India" on the 1st August 1914, and under that name the petitioner has been continuing to publish the said newspaper since that date.

4. The sale-deed obtained in her favour from the proprietor of the "Madras Standard" and the notice of forfeiture under section 4 (1) of the Act are herewith annexed and marked as Exhibits A and B1 and B2 series to this petition.

5. On the 28th May 1916, the Chief Presidency Magistrate of the City of Madras served on the petitioner an order, dated 22nd May 1916, requiring her to deposit a security of Rs. 2,000, acting under section 3 (1) of the said Act I of 1910.

6. In pursuance of the said order and under protest the petitioner deposited the said sum and continued the publication of the said newspaper known as "New India".

7. Thereupon, again on the 28th of August 1916, the Governor-in-Council, acting under section 4 (1) of the said Act, I of 1910, served on the petitioner an order, dated 25th August 1916, declaring the security so deposited as aforesaid in respect of the "New India Printing Works" and all copies of "New India", wherever found, to be forfeited to His Majesty the King-Emperor.

8. The petitioner charges that under section 3 (1) of the said Act I of 1910, the Magistrate, having dispensed with the deposit of any security when the declaration was made in the first instance, had exhausted his powers under section 3 (1), that the proviso to section 3 can only apply to orders passed under the 1st paragraph, that he cannot cancel or vary the order, and that the said order, dated 22nd May 1916, was illegal and unauthorised, as the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to impose the said security on the press wherein the paper was being printed, the same being an old press which had been in existence as such prior to 1910 and as no notice was served on the petitioner to show cause why a security should not be demanded nor has the Magistrate brought his judicial mind to bear on the questions involved in this matter.

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

9. The petitioner states that no issue of the newspaper known as "New India" contains any words, signs or visible representations of the nature described in section 4 (1) or section 3 (2) of the Indian Press Act and submits that the order of the Governor-in-Council passed on the 25th August 1916 is illegal inasmuch as the said order purports to forfeit not only a particular article or articles complained of but also all issues of "New India", past and future, and inasmuch as no notice was served on the petitioner prior to the said order calling upon her to show cause why the security should not be forfeited. The petitioner prays that the extracts filed herewith and marked as Exhibits B1 and B2 series may be read as part and parcel of this petition.

10. The petitioner further submits that no grounds exist either for the imposing of the security by the Chief Presidency Magistrate of the City of Madras or for the forfeiture thereof by the Governor-in-Council.

11. The petitioner prays that under the circumstances and for the reasons stated above and for the reasons stated in the affidavit filed herewith, (a) the orders of the Chief Presidency Magistrate and the Governor-in-Council, dated 22nd May 1916, and 25th August 1916, may be revised;

(b) that the said orders may be set aside;

(c) and that such further or other relief as to this Honourable Court may seem meet may be granted to the petitioner.

The notice to Mrs. Annie Besant, Keeper of the "New India Printing Works," Nos. 13 and 14, Second Line Beach, Madras, by the Chief Presidency Magistrate was in the following terms:—

"Take notice that under section 3 (1) of Act I of 1910, I hereby cancel my order, dated 2nd December 1914, dispensing with security in respect of the "New India Printing Works," at Nos. 13 and 14, Second Line Beach, Madras, and require you under section 3 (1) of Act I of 1910 to deposit security for Rs. 2,000 before me within 14 days from the date of this notice.

Dated this 22nd day of May 1916".

The notice served on 28th August 1916 under section 4 (1) of the Indian Press Act, I of 1910, was as follows:

"Whereas on the 5th June 1916 in compliance with an order made by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Madras, under the proviso to section 3 (1) of the Indian Press Act, 1910, security to the amount of two thousand rupees was deposited by Mrs. Annie Besant in respect of the Press known as "The New India Printing Works, Madras";

Whereas it appears to the Governor-in-Council that the said Press is used for the purpose of printing a newspaper entitled "New India"; and

Whereas the Governor-in-Council is of opinion that the passages published in the said newspaper and reproduced below are of the nature described in section 4 (1) of the Indian Press Act, 1910.

Now, therefore, in the exercise of the powers conferred by section 4 (1) of the Indian Press Act, 1910, the Governor-in-Council declares the security deposited in respect of "The New India Printing Works, Madras"; and all copies of "New India" wherever found to be forfeited to His Majesty.

(BY ORDER OF THE GOVERNOR-IN-COUNCIL)

(Sd.) LIONEL DAVIDSON,

Ag. Chief Secretary."

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

EXTRACTS

No. 1: BUREAUCRACY IN EXCELSIS

PROTEST FROM PRESS AND PUBLIC.

Anglo-India v. "New India."

Mr. M. Krishnamacharya, B. A., L. T., of Ottapalam, writes:

Out of evil cometh good. Out of the absolutism of Stuart monarchs constitutional Government was won for England. Out of the persecutions of Anraungzebe, Maharatta power attained its ascendancy. Out of the high-handed tyranny and overbearing imperialism of Lord Curzon sprang the National movement which is destined to play an irresistible part in Indian politics. And now, out of the blind hostility evinced by the Madras Government against "New India," our ultramoderate begging politicians are bound to learn the unwisdom of relying too much upon the sympathy of the Bureaucracy towards any of our truly higher aspirations.

For in the eyes of our high-minded rulers, especially with their new changed "angle of vision" what are the sins of which "New India" is guilty? None, specifically; its Editor could not be brought by the most wary and zealous scrutiny of Government under any of the sections of the ordinary Criminal Law. But we can well guess how the Journal has offended the Bureaucracy. The "Madras Mail" and others of its ilk, the professional calumniators of the most legitimate Indian aspirations and as such the real promulgators of sedition and unrest in India, against whom, however, there is no law in the statute-book—the "Madras Mail," among other bureaucratic barometers, has been of late giving unerring indications of how the strong plain-speaking of "New India" has grown intolerable for the over-delicate, self-adorant, flattery-loving ears of Anglo-India.

The real issue may indeed be expressed in one small phrase: Anglo-India versus "New India". The talk of Home Rule the un-English "Englishman" can manage to sneer at; but when "New India" mercilessly exposes any and every vagary of the "Englishman" in this land that it can come across, the Anglo-Indian blood boils with all the uncontrollable rage of the most selfish vested interest. Thus, by speaking out the plain truth that a Bureaucracy, however benevolent, that an alien Government, however theoretically well intentioned, can never in practice, so long as its officers are human beings, see eye to eye with the natives of the land; by exposing mercilessly, from day to day, the high-handedness of the Executive, by pointing out to the people of India that the only true remedy for all these manifold ills consists in claiming boldly, and in qualifying for, Home Rule by appealing to the sense of justice and love of liberty deep-rooted in the heart of the British people at home and calling upon them to undo the wrongs done by their countrymen in India;—thus, and in a hundred like ways, "New India," though only an infant of two years' old, has made itself the inveterate enemy of gigantic Anglo-India. The first stage of despising, or affecting to despise, the infant's strength is gone. The contest has begun in grim earnest for the ten-thousandth time of "Hirnya" against "Prahlada." Now, once more, for the ten-thousandth time in the history of the world's evolution, the attempt, bound to be futile, is made by Might to overawe and put down Right.

The question is not whether Mrs. Besant, for any fault shown, should not be bound to give a few hundreds of rupees as security; but whether the ideals for which "New India" stands, and the methods which it adopts to popularise those ideals, though perfectly lawful and constitutional, are to be altered at the bidding of the Bureaucracy. The point at stake is this: though the utmost licence is enjoyed by the Anglo-Indian Press all over the country, is all "liberty" to be denied to the Indian Press and is it to be restrained in its endeavours to bring about, by ways and means unforbidden by the ordinary law, the political regeneration of this ancient Land, so that it may become a true source of strength to the British Empire?

As yet we see only the faint beginnings of a mighty struggle between two opposite sets of forces. The struggle has commenced by Anglo-India putting forth its menacing arm. It can end only in one way, in the complete triumph of "New India". Mrs. Besant is prepared to face the thunderbolts with calm trust in the justice of the cause. What shall we do? Quarrel over asking for four-fifths or a whole of an Elected Legislature? Talk, wrangle, divide ourselves over petty planks? May the Gods forbid. Our duty is plain, it behoves us one and all to secure for our children's children the full rights of glorious British citizenship, to band ourselves into one indivisible array against all who dare deny such full rights. For God, Crown and Country—that is the battle cry of "New India", who will not respond?—"New India", 7-6-1916.

No. 2: BUREAUCRACY IN EXCELSIS.

PROTESTS FROM PRESS AND PUBLIC.

INJUSTICE DONE TO MRS. BESANT.

The unexpected and inexplicable imposition of a maximum security on the "New India" Printing Works has provoked universal indignation and protest. "New India" has been condemning anarchism. See for example what you said in Palghat. Are we to understand that the Government desire the existence of anarchism in India?

"New India" has been emphasising the importance of the connection of India with England. Does the imposition of security mean that the bureaucracy is opposed to this? Again the popular daily has been enthusiastically struggling for Home Rule. Lord Hardinge has told us that it is a legitimate aspiration. The Congress says it is its goal. Is the benign Government against this optimistic and legitimate struggle?

"They think rightly that Home Rule means the passing away of bureaucracy as bureaucracy. It does not mean that we want to drive the English out of India. It is the method we object to, not the person." This speaks of what metal the lady is made of.

In this special connection the drastic legislation was very drastically applied; the maximum security was demanded. No warning or sign of warning was given before this time; the amount is to be paid within a fortnight; to aggravate all this, no specific reason is assigned for such an unprecedented and inhuman action. Is the Government irrational? No. It is obstinate. Perhaps both.

What private cause has made the Government stoop to such a barbarous atrocity we know not. But this we know full well: the much-bated and ever-mischievous bureaucracy discountenances outspoken criticisms and no good Government should be afraid of criticism. We also know that the Government have a spite against the editor of "New India", for she is the head of an institution which works against the missionaries and the missionaries are the parasites of the Government. To say the exact truth, the security is demanded not from the "New India" Printing Works but from Mrs. Besant. Paradoxical as it may seem, this involves the whole matter. She supports everything Indian, says that Home Rule is her last job and means to carry it through, and musters all the leaders and wins their approbation; her Press pours out daily innumerable articles and pamphlets that fashion India to a new healthy national regeneration; she says: "I have not the fortune of being an Indian" and writes the true history of India. All this the Government do not like. Such a serpent should be crushed in the shell; such a plant should be nipped in the bud.

The Press Act is alike an insult to India and a disgrace to England. It is inconsistent with Nature and reason. To say it in A. B. Mazumdar's words, it has transformed the editor to "a humble suppliant before the District Officer". It should be expunged from the Statute Book. It is not a law but an oppression.

News of Prussian aggression and German atrocity are communicated to India to bewilder the Indian imagination. They are committed under pressure, during the War, under passion. They are common. But what does this mean? This perpetration of atrocity in civic life, in peaceful times, in a peaceful Province? This thunder during this sunny day sets the world a-wondering.

Let the bureaucracy do whatever it can and whatever it pleases. Home Rule propaganda is begun, and there is no going back in political evolution. It will be carried through. The Government may kill "New India" but cannot kill the New India. The Government may even kill Mrs. Besant, but cannot kill Besantism in Indian politics.

As Mr. Balasubramanya Aiyar suggested, let a fund called "New India Defence Fund" be started and many purses are ready to shower money for Mrs. Annie Besant and "New India": E. R. Soobramoney Aiyar, Secretary, Y. M. H. A., Nagercoil.—"New India", 8-6-1916.

No. 3: (ON THE LINE) LATEST SIN OF ARMS ACT.

A dacoity of a very serious nature was committed on the night of the 9th instant, in the house of a rich merchant of Viddigudam, in Bhadrachalam Taluq. In all, besides havoc of an unknown nature, some 2,562 sovereigns, property valued at Rs. 12,000 and Rs. 2,000 in cash were stolen. The victim bitterly complains of the helplessness of the villagers to offer any resistance, "as they, one and all, in the village are unprovided with arms". Evidently the villagers were in a mood to resist, but were helpless, while enemies of Society felt so safe that they could enter a town "swinging swords and playing kolattam". Cannot he, too, who hoards up thousands of sovereigns—to offer them, alas, as Nazaras to dacoits—be credited with implicit loyalty and be exempted from the Arms Act? Are not his vested interests enough guarantee for his good behaviour? Or are his wealth and influence objects of distrust?—"New India", 14-6-1916.

No. 4 (a): "RESERVED FOR EUROPEANS."

Mr. V. G. Javadekar, Pleader, Dhulia, writes to the Kesari giving information of a very interesting case, Mathradas Ramchand v. Secretary of State (1). Mathradas was sitting in a compartment reserved for Europeans, when he was threatened by railway servants and obliged to go and sit in another compartment. This action of the Railway servants was held by the Court in this case to be illegal, as it cannot be done under any provisions of the Railways Act; besides it was observed that it is beyond the jurisdiction of a Railway servant to forcibly draw out passengers from the carriages. The Court said that the complainant may, if he so desires, file a separate complaint against the Railway servant who pulled him out. This will be news indeed for many of our readers. At times when there is a great rush, people may take advantage of this information.—"New India", 22-6-1916.

No. 4 (b): "RESERVED FOR EUROPEANS."

We again invite the prominent attention of our readers to the following statement which appears in the Bombay Chronicle:

At page 140, Vol. V of the Sindh Law Report, a case of Mathuradas Ramchandra v. Secretary of State for India (1) has been reported wherein it has been held that a board, specifying "Reserved for Europeans and Eurasians," put upon a third-class compartment of a Railway carriage is illegal, as there is no provision in law made for such undue preference; and the learned Judge further held that an action would lie against the person who had dragged the Indian gentleman out of the said reserved compartment and not against the Railway Company. Many Indian gentlemen are until now under the impression that such a reservation is justified under existing laws, but after all it has been found to be nothing short of a myth, and any one can take advantage of the Court's decision and put it in practice whenever there is occasion of inconvenience or discomfort in travelling.

Such an illegal notice is attached to several trains connected with Madras, and we trust its illegality will be remembered by the Indian passengers.—"New India", 5-7-1916.

No. 4 (c): (ON THE LINE) "RESERVED FOR EUROPEANS."

There has been much jubilation over the judgment in a case brought against the Secretary of State for India, in which it was laid down that a Railway Company had no right to allocate separate accommodation in railway trains to Europeans and Eurasians. We remarked on it, and drew attention to the fact that such notices were attached to carriages on some railways in this Presidency, and that Indian passengers should remember that they were illegal. The extract from the Bombay Chronicle report and our comment were gleefully reprinted and circulated by thousands by some energetic youths!—"New India", 8-7-1916.

No. 4 (d): "RESERVED FOR EUROPEANS."

The following facts are of interest to the readers of your valuable journal, in connection with the recent judgment on the reserving of Railway carriages for Europeans, found in Mathuradas Ramchandra v. Secretary of State for India (1).

(1) 13 Ind. Cas. 257; 5 S. L. R. 140.

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

Knowing that such reserving was illegal, I got, yesterday evening, in the 5.15 P. M. train or the 'first Local', as it is otherwise called, into a compartment with a printed notice, 'Reserved for Europeans and Eurasians,' on it. Some Indian gentlemen were already in it keenly discussing the legality of such a notice with an Anglo-Indian who disputed their right to enter the compartment. Soon after the Chief Station Master of the Madras Central Station appeared and asked us to get out of that compartment. We refused and showed him a leaflet containing an extract of the judgment of the Sindh Law Court. But this was beyond everything that august personage could bear. He got wild, exclaimed that the leaflet had nothing to do with him, and threatened us with prosecution, because he said we got into that compartment wilfully when there were other compartments vacant, and thus disturbed the peace of the public. We then thought it prudent to get down, as it was past time for the departure of the train; and got down under protest.

True, there were other compartments vacant; but the question is, is the company justified in reserving compartments exclusively for one class of people? It is not uncommon to find in the M. & S. M. R. trains, local trains to Arkonam not excepted, carriages with printed "Reserved" notices running empty throughout, while the compartments near by are packed full. If the Railway Company is not responsible for it, as the Sindh Law Court finds, how does the name of the company find a place in the "Reserved" notices and why should the Company's servants take such an active part in reserving compartments for Europeans? Evidently the Railway Companies have taken advantage of the people's ignorance of the details of the Railway Regulations Act—which, as the Sindh judgment points out, does not provide for such reservation—and have allowed this unlawful custom to pass unnoticed. It is time for the Indian public to wake up and enter an emphatic protest against the illegal practice, now that its illegality is exposed. I appeal specially to the travelling public to take immediate and united action and see that such a notice is not put on the carriages at all.—Srinivasan, Madras.

[But why did you get out? It is this submission to illegality that causes half the troubles from which Indians suffer.—Ed.]—"New India", 20-7-1916.

No. 4 (c): COMPARTMENTS "RESERVED."

This morning "Officers' train" was fully packed to the roof. Therefore we, about 14, got into a compartment in the last carriage at Chetput. There was no board on that compartment to say that it was reserved for Europeans and Anglo-Indians. We, therefore, got into that compartment. At Egmore the Assistant Station Master came, and asked us to vacate the compartment, saying that it was reserved. As there was no board to that effect and as there was no room elsewhere, we remained there and did not get out. After a few minutes he brought in a Sergeant, and the names of some of those who were in that compartment were taken down. The Station Master then came to the spot, and his presence too was of no avail. It is not known how long this will continue and how long this racial difference will exist. The train was unnecessarily delayed for about 10 minutes.—A Sufferer.

Certain non-Anglo-Indian passengers who were occupying a compartment in the last carriage of the 2nd Officers' train that arrived at the Egmore Railway Station at 9.30 A. M. were asked by the A. S. M. to get down to give room for the Anglo-Indian passengers for whom, he said, it was reserved. The passengers did not comply with his request. The A. S. M. returned and then came with the S. M. and a Railway Sergeant who took down the names and addresses of the non-Anglo-Indian passengers. The S. M. said the compartments were reserved for the Anglo-Indians, while the passengers said they got into a compartment where there was room available for them to get in. (Please note that 4 compartments are said to be reserved for about 10 or 15 passengers.) By this there was a delay of 15 minutes.—C. Narasimhachari, Season Ticket Holder, Pallavaram,—"New India", 24-7-1916.

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

No. 4(f): "RESERVED FOR EUROPEANS."
A SCENE NEAR POONA.

In Tuesday's Dyan Prakasha Mr. M. G. Kottibhaskar gives a very interesting account of a fresh act of unlawful repression by the railway petty officials. At Hadapsar he got into the train as usual. But this time, instead of taking his seat in the 2nd class by which he usually travelled, he went in the "European third" with three of his friends. The guard on duty wanted him to get out of it with his "native" friends as, he said, that compartment was not meant for them. Mr. Kottibhaskar at first courteously told him that they would all get down, if he could make room for them in any other compartment. But the guard instead of responding to this, his courteous request, with great obstinacy ordered him to clear out of the compartment. This Mr. Kottibhaskar flatly refused to do, saying he might lodge a complaint against him if he liked. The guard then tried with the aid of the Indian Station Master to persuade the gentleman to vacate the said compartment, but finding that it was hopeless, he took down the address of Mr. Kottibhaskar and went away.

Upon this, Mr. Kottibhaskar decided to take his seat in that compartment for the next three or four days. The succeeding guard, too, played the same game as his predecessor, and, finding Mr. Kottibhaskar was too much for him, sent for the Assistant Station Master, who in his official capacity arrogantly commanded him to get down; on his refusal for the second time, he asked the Railway Fouzdar to force him out of the compartment. The Fouzdar, after asking Mr. Kottibhaskar, a few questions, told the Station Master that the step he proposed was illegal and consequently could not be taken.

On this, the Station Master tried to threaten even the Fouzdar (Sub-Inspector of Police) with the detention of the train. The Fouzdar simply replied that he could not help it, but said that the proper way would be to complain. The frowning railway official took the address of Mr. Kottibhaskar, which he once more submitted with pleasure: and the official departed with all his staff of ticket collectors. In spite of his threats, the train started and vanished out of the Station. - "New India," 28-7-16.

No. 4 (g): THE WAY WITH THE APOLOGISTS.

The comments of the Anglo-Indian journals on the incident that took place at the Fort Station of the S. I. R. on Thursday are specially noteworthy. They are anxious to apportion the blame to all agencies except the real offender, and in their opinion, the guilty people are not those who committed and persist in committing an illegal action, but those who pointed out the illegality, or who are not willing to tolerate the illegality, when circumstance forces that course of action upon them. The sermon is ridiculous, if the motive in preaching it were not reprehensible and dangerous. There is certainly nothing strange in these journals advocating an unjust cause, or abusing those who stand for justice, and we are willing to admit that in the present instance the incentive for that policy is far greater than usual. The patronage afforded to Anglo-India by the Railway Companies is so great that we rarely find any criticism of the latter in their journals, and to make matters worse for the cause of justice, it is Indians that in the present instance are anxious to fight against the illegal action.

Still one does not find words strong enough to characterise the action of these journals that abuse the Indians, young or old, that seek to put down the illegal policy of the Railways. The notice "Reserved for Europeans and Eurasians" is not only illegal and insulting, but is even more intolerable. When the trains are crowded to the utmost, and even the second-class compartments are full to the brim, the Indian passengers find one or two carriages more or less empty, and they are told that they should remain so empty for the benefit—prospective or otherwise—of a chance batch of favoured passengers. And to add to the humiliation such reservation is known now to be illegal. And yet those apologists come forward to abuse the Indian passengers for trying to enter these compartments. Can a more demented critical faculty be thought of? It should also be remembered that the Indians did not enter these carriages until the law proclaimed that their exclusion was illegal. Indians are always wrong whether they disregard the law, or enforce it.

We are not concerned here with the question as to who were the main perpetrators in the Thursday's affray. The matter will go up to Courts of law and we feel sure the real culprits will be brought to book. What we are now concerned with is the misrepresentations of these apologists of the Railway Companies. These critics have not a word to say on their illegal action—a deed the culpability of which is increased by the knowledge that its continuance has been creating a hitch between the two races. Instead of advising the Railway Company to remove the illegal source of evil, these apologists cry themselves hoarse over the actions of those who either point out the illegality of the mischievous policy, or who, in one constitutional way or other, try to end it. Has it become so heinous, in the opinion of these wise critics, that people should occasionally range themselves on the side of law and justice? Or do they foam with fury because the demand for justice concerns the Railway Company which they are anxious to shield?—"New India," 29-7-16.

No. 5: HOME RULE SECTION:

THE PRICE OF LIBERTY.

(From the Herald, London)

The price of liberty is death. If liberty is to survive at all it means that its lovers must be prepared to give their bodies to the common hangman if the occasion arise. Authority dislikes liberty since it challenges the very fundamentals upon which authority bases its claim to govern. The moment they are called into question they are found to be fictitious. Authority never appeals to humanity for a justification. It appeals to something artificial—a God which it creates for its own purpose, a Church or a Creed, a State all of which are simply phantoms raised up to scare poor human beings. Liberty, on the contrary, bases its claim upon humanity, and can, therefore, laugh at the shams of authority. But authority has the power, and the price individuals have to pay for maintaining liberty is death.

Yet liberty never dies, its torch is borne on through the centuries by willing hands, and it is authority which has to give way. I have on my bookshelves two bulky volumes by Mr. J. M. Robertson, M. P., called a Short History of Free Thought. Now, of course, many of the statements of Mr. Robertson are ex parte, but the volumes are valuable in so far as they are a record of the struggle made by men and women during the centuries for liberty to think as they thought fit about such problems as God, the Soul, and the Universe. Stupid people in the name of authority tried to prevent them, with the result that freedom of thought grew and grew until the speculations of men went far beyond the small point which first aroused the ire of authority. For men and women were found who were willing to pay the price—death. It must not be forgotten that these people did not think the same things. Catholics, Protestants, Agnostics, and Atheists all paid the same penalty. They were martyrs to liberty. To-day it is grudgingly admitted that on questions of what is called religion we have liberty of thought and expression. Authority now and again makes an attempt at repression, but it stays its hand when it finds that liberty of thought has many defenders. Freedom has triumphed in this field, and men may think as they please about God and the Universe.

We are at a stage in the history of the world when again we shall be faced with the proposition that the price of liberty is death. Authority, having found that to base its claims upon an alleged divine sanction no longer finds acceptance, has put on a new dress. It does not appeal to God, it appeals to the State. Every one is called upon to give allegiance to this mysterious thing and to subordinate all to its demands. There are, however, some people who are prepared to be as heretical towards the claims of the State as others were toward the claims of Churches. Authority plays its old game and endeavours to stop expression. Hence Defence of the Realm Acts. From the point of view of authority this suppression of thought is a good thing, otherwise it will find that the foundation on which it rests will be undermined.

Now, what is the State? On what basis does it rest? It does not claim divine sanction, since no one would admit the claim. It does not rest on the will of the people, since in order to obtain obedience to its desires it has to coerce. No coercion is necessary when a group is also a unity. It acts by reason of the will of its members. The claim of the State, therefore, rests in force. But this presupposes at least two things—the thing that forces and the thing forced. Therefore the State represents the thing that forces, i. e., a group of persons who are able to coerce the rest. Now if a group uses force it follows that it uses force for its own advantage. There would be no need of force if the thing wished for was for the advantage of all. From this then, as the State represents but a group it has no claim but that which it obtains by coercion of the allegiance of the people. But the price of liberty is death.

The State—i. e., the group controlling it, have decreed that all men shall serve in the army. No real or valid reason has been advanced for this decree. It is a mere exercise of authority designed to destroy liberty. Therefore the lovers of liberty have to come forward in defence, for they recognise that the first principle of liberty is freedom of conscience. For if the individual man has nothing to which he can appeal as against authority then he is a slave. He ceases to be a reasoning being, and becomes but one of a herd. A man may voluntarily, by exercising his reason, submit himself to an authority whose claim he considers to be well-founded. But if he does so he is acting according to his conscience. If, however, his conscience will not permit him to accept the dictates of authority, he is entitled to refuse to obey. Therefore the conscientious objector is acting according to reason.

This point would be very much clearer to the average man if there was not so much confusion between the State and the Nation. The two things are not synonymous or interchangeable. They often are antagonistic. A person may be most anxious to preserve and to help the Nation to which he belongs, whilst at the same time be equally desirous of overthrowing the State. A Republican, for example, living under Monarchical rule, or a Socialist in a Capitalist State. From which it follows that a Pacifist, who considers that War is a Nation-destroying and not a Nation-preserving and Nation-building action, is, whilst in every essence patriotic, justified in refusing to assist in helping the War party. He considers that the Nation is in danger by reason of War, and because the War is, or is not, carried on with vigour. But the State rides roughshod over the Nation, and the group which controls the State has decreed War as essential to the State. Therefore the conscientious objector is anathema. He is a heretic, a perverter of men's minds, a coward, a shirker, and so on through a whole gamut of epithets, polite and otherwise. In reality he is a fighter for liberty, a martyr of sociology, even as the heroes of Mr. J. M. Robertson's book were of theology.

To maintain the sacred fire of liberty he must be prepared to face every contumely, even death itself. Sir Thomas More was a Catholic, Bishop Latimer was a Protestant. Both were executed, because both conscientiously objected to certain religious beliefs. They gave their lives for freedom of conscience. We know to-day, judging events in the light of historical experience, that they were executed because the State of the time, as represented by Henry VIII and Mary, knew that its whole foundation was destroyed if it allowed the liberty these men claimed. Yet in their death they triumphed. They destroyed the claim of the State to decree the religion of men.

It is a great privilege to be living at a time when you can be called upon to testify to your faith. It does not come to every generation. It has come to this generation of young men. Francis Meynell, speaking the other evening at the Herald Reunion, mentioned the French poet of some five centuries ago, who considered that it was a perfect miracle that he should be living at the same time as the woman he loved. We, who are living to-day between the ages of 18 and 41, should also regard it as a perfect miracle that we have been adjudged worthy to make this stand for freedom of conscience and liberty. What matters it that the powers that be bully, chain, and imprison the body, what matters it that seventeen young men stand on the brink of the grave across the English

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

Channel? Those who are in authority cannot destroy the soul.

For what is death, after all? It is a mere falling to sleep, a passing over, a dissolution of the soul from this physical body, leaving it free to continue onward in its path of development towards the divine. And if in dying one leaves behind the thought of liberty, of freedom of conscience, to germinate in the minds of men, one knows that like the grain of mustard seed, it will bring forth a noble and glorious tree; it is a miracle that we are privileged to testify to to-day.

We have not sought the battle, but the issue is joined. Let us enter the fight with no hatred in our hearts. Those who oppose us are acting through blindness. They walk in the darkness. Ours is the high mission, of which, let us hope, we may prove worthy, of showing them the way to the light. Let us each be animated, let us pray that we may be animated, with the spirit of Francis Sheehy Skeffington, who met death with a smile on his lips, and whose last words were: "They will find that my death was a mistake."

To few of us will be given the privilege given to Sheehy Skeffington of approaching so near to the Master-Christ. "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." But we have the privilege to stand for our faith. Let us not falter, let not bodily pain, social ostracism, loss of worldly goods stand in our way. Let us go on to the end: John Scurr—"New India", 23-6-1916.

No. 6:—PRUSSIANISM IN INDIA.

It is a well-known fact that in India we live hemmed in on all sides by repressive measures. The Press Act, the Seditious Meetings Act, the Official Secrets Act, the Defence of India Act, not to mention several despotic measures of early days—potential of mischief and capable of retarding democratic progress—are all there in the hands of a powerful Bureaucracy to be used as it thinks fit. That time and again they have been made use of we are all aware; we also know how they tend to terrify people; and make them behave as if their very souls were not their own. These iniquitous measures in the hands of people with vested interests of their own, naturally assume a shape and a form all too ghastly for the children of the soil, and day and night exert a baneful influence over them, engendering at once fear and hatred. It was Sir Pherozeshah Mehta, who, in his own charming manner, described this well armed Anglo-Indian Bureaucrat, so far back as 1893, in these terms:

"Among the many delightful and inimitable delineations of typical character immortalised by Dickens, many of you, perhaps, remember the faithful portraiture of Sir Joseph Bowley, the Poor Man's Friend and Father. You remember, gentlemen, how Sir Joseph discoursed on their respective duties: 'Your only business, my good fellow, is with me. You need not trouble yourself to think about anything. I will think for you; I know what is good for you; I am your Perpetual Parent. Such is the dispensation of an all-wise Providence. . . . What man can do, I do. I do my duty as a Poor Man's Friend and Father; and I endeavour to educate his mind, by inculcating on all occasions the one great lesson which that class requires. That is, entire dependence on myself. They have no business whatever with themselves.' Now, gentlemen, can there be an apter description of the Anglo-Indian bureaucrat after his own heart than as the exact counterpart of Sir Joseph Bowley in relation to the poor Indian—the poor Indian's friend and father?"

Armed with all the repressive measures this omnipresent prop of all Indians, of masses as well as the educated classes, is finding his philanthropic job rather tough. He is beginning to find that his weapons are of an antique nature suitable for a museum of curios, but impractical and inefficient for the fight of the day. And yet, the conservatism and muddling through quality of John Bull perpetuates the same mistake over and over again. As if the Prussianism already woven in the fabric of the Indian administration is not enough, Englishmen belonging to the Anglo-Indian caste rigidly go after more repressive Acts. The War has brought the Defence Act into being, and all know to what use it is being put. Censorship was introduced, and who is not aware by now of the prerogatives it has bestowed on the Indian public! But the Madras organ of Prussianism is not satisfied with all these. It wants something more; it wants the Government to "compile a list of neutral papers admissible into India and prohibit all others". The Indian public is served with censored and belated news telegraphically, and now it is desired that post news should be cooked for us. Just like Sir Joseph Bowley! One has to ask where is the trust which the changed angle of vision is said to have brought into being? In these times of War, when Great Britain is fighting its battle of life, and when its very position in the European world is threatened, in this vast land there is peace and quiet; there has not been a single riot or disturbance; save for the few cases of anarchy, the country is going on with her business as usual; 300,000 of her sons are fighting the Empire's battle and yet the Anglo-Indians want repressive measures? When the mother country is waging War against Prussianism, are her sons in this land to fall a prey to it? We hope the insidious suggestion will be left unnoticed.—"New India," 29-6-16.

NO. 7: THE LATEST POLITICAL CRIME IN CALCUTTA AND ITS MORAL.

BY BIPIN CHANDRA PAL.

The latest political outrage in Calcutta has called forth the usual protests from the Indian, and the familiar threats of greater and wider repression from the Anglo-Indian Press. But neither will help the situation. There is, really, a growing feeling, specially in official and Anglo-Indian circles, that whatever may be done, these outrages cannot be stopped. The experience of the last eight years seems, indeed, to justify this despair. Repression has been tried, and though the cry in the Anglo-Indian Press is for greater repression, even the Anglo-Indian publicist seems clearly to have lost faith in his own panacea. Commenting upon the assassination of Superintendent Basanta Kumar Chatterji, the Statesman says: "The anarchist is the master of the situation, for he can murder when he pleases"; and even this Zubardust and heroic Anglo-Indian organ does not hesitate to say that "it is a great deal safer to be an anarchist than to be a Policeman". The Englishman also strikes the same note of helplessness. It wants, of course, more repression, but at the same time it is forced to confess that, all previous measures notwithstanding, "a very disquieting feature of the situation is that this gang is receiving new recruits every year and for all that is known to the contrary, spreading its influence wider and wider afield." And the writer finally consoles himself with the idea that the difficulty of controlling the young men who furnish fresh recruits to the revolutionary propaganda "must be somehow got over". The somehow shews more faith than knowledge. And if it does not mean utter despair, we do not understand what it means at all.

Despair a Hopeful Sign.

This despair-might, in itself, be a hopeful sign if there was behind it any desire to go beyond the familiar bureaucratic diagnosis and treatment of these revolutionary crimes. The bureaucracy admittedly do not know how effectually to check this evil. The Anglo-Indian publicist knows no more nor better than his official friend and patron. Yet neither will confess defeat, and frankly take counsel with the leaders of the people, who, though not in any way identified or associated with this revolutionary propaganda, have yet an inside view of its psychology and environments more than is possible for either the Anglo-Indian official or the Anglo-Indian publicist.

What does it signify?

A very marked change has come over the whole community. This so-called anarchist propaganda is only a small and insignificant manifestation of this change. The bureaucracy sees the sign. The Anglo-Indian editor or leader writer recognises the outer result. But neither care to search for the thing which these signify. And so long as they have not been able to do this, so long the situation will be bound to remain what it is, and even grow from bad to worse day by day.

No Sympathy.

We do not sympathise with these murderous outbursts. We have protested against them all these years. No reasonable Indian politician or publicist, to whatever school he may belong, has ever either publicly encouraged these crimes. In fact, the Indian politician occupies a very queer, and possibly an unenviable position in this matter. He is trusted neither by the Government nor by the revolutionaries. The Government do not take counsel with him with full frankness and in perfect confidence.

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

The revolutionaries never come near him, except perhaps as in absolute incognito, and in connection with some open and public business. But yet he knows, not the men, but the situation in the country which is really responsible for the birth and growth of this revolutionary movement. And knowing this situation, he knows its remedy also better than anybody else.

Change in the People.

In the first place, a very serious change has come over the character and temper of the people. Even the Englishman has noted it. The case of the late Superintendent Basanta Kumar Chatterji proves it. Two previous attempts had been made upon his life, once at Dacca, and the next time at Calcutta, when a bomb was thrown into his house last year. On both these occasions he had a very narrow escape. His family, naturally, did not like that he should risk his life any more by continuing in the public service. But as the Englishman says, "although he himself knew well that he carried his life in his hands, that assassins lurked in corners waiting their opportunity, he pursued his task with that quiet, unflinching heroism which is the characteristic of the best Bengali Policeman". The italics are mine; and they bear no small testimony to the birth of a new spirit in Bengal. The old estimates of Bengali, and for the matter of that, of Indian, character—drawn from or inspired by writers like Macaulay—must be re-cast and re-considered in the light of these new revelations. Whoever had heard before of "the quiet, unflinching heroism" of the Bengali gentleman class! In courage, pluck, devotion to duty, the Bengali police-official no longer suffers in comparison with his European superior or colleague. In fact, but for the consciousness that the honour of their race and the reputation of their people for courage, pluck and devotion to public duty were in their keeping, many of these Police Officers would have resigned their service and gone to private life. It would be doing a serious injustice to these brave officers if we thought that it was only their pay and prospects that tempt them to stick to their guns under these perilous conditions.

Consider, again, the conduct of the assassins themselves. There was a quiet and even courageous determination in the way they went about their criminal business. Evidence of eye witnesses shows that there was not the least trace of nervousness about them. Having killed their victim they quietly walked away, in almost broad daylight, crossed a big thoroughfare without breaking their line, only once or twice firing blank volleys to scare away any one who might try to catch them. Heroism may, according to some people, be too noble a word to apply to men guilty of such ignoble assassinations, but that there was a kind of courage, in any case, an utter disregard of personal consequences even in these criminals, cannot be denied. This recognition does not condone their crime: this courage in no way takes away from the suicidal folly and cruel inhumanity of their acts. But it is essential to recognise it for a right understanding of the present situation.

Whence comes this determination?

And to the statesmen called upon to solve this problem of political criminalism in this country, the most important question is whence do these youthful revolutionaries derive all this dare-devil determination of theirs? What is the origin of this new courage in them? They are not ordinary criminals. They are not hardened criminals. They have had no training in crime such as creates the hardened murderer or assassin. Not one of the young men who have been responsible for these political murders has so far been detected, since the first attempt upon Mr. Kingsford's life at Muzaffarpore which miscarried and killed two English ladies. So we have had no opportunity of getting any insight into the personal temper and character of these people. But the boy, who killed the Kennedy ladies, was, on the testimony of all those who knew him, anything but a hardened criminal. Those who have followed him since in this criminal propaganda, also do not seem to be ruffians in the common acceptance of the term. Whatever else they may or may not be, it is impossible and it would serve really no purpose—to deny that they are idealists of a type. Their idealism does not condone their criminality but rather, perhaps, adds to it but the idealism must be noted and recognised in the consideration of any effective measures for checking their criminal activities.

Misguided Idealism.

When any one is driven to commit any crime under the inspiration of some sort of idealism, however misguided it may be, people generally pity them, but are not moved by any spirit of revenge or even retributive justice towards them. People do not approve of the crime of the man who avenges his honour by killing a faithless wife or a treacherous friend, yet all the same, they pity the criminal. The same feeling possesses the populace when they stand face to face with political crimes committed by youthful and misguided idealist. They know that these young men come fully prepared for sacrificing their own lives in the discharge of the work entrusted to them. The gallows have absolutely no terrors for them. To send them to the gallows would not hinder but, on the contrary, very materially help their criminal propaganda. This has been the universal experience of history in these matters. Those who are already in sympathy with this criminal propaganda will not be cowed down by their chastisement; but will rather look upon their punishment as martyrdom and draw fresh inspiration from it for carrying on their work; everybody except the official machinist and the purblind publicist understands all this. Everybody knows and feels that repression and punishment are not the right remedy for this evil. And this makes the work of suppressing this criminal propaganda by relentlessly punishing the revolutionaries so difficult and well-nigh impossible for the Government.

Other Weapons Necessary.

This revolutionary movement must be fought by other weapons. However misguided these young men may be, and however we may condemn their criminal activities, we must, if we are to cure the evil for which they are responsible, first of all recognise them as political offenders, moved by the desire to see their people occupying their legitimate place in modern history and politics. The Government and the general public should acknowledge that the ideal they hold has in itself nothing wrong or criminal. And if this is done, half the battle will be won. It will give a common basis of mutual understanding between the party of constitutional progress, which has after so many years been openly recognised by the Government, and that of revolution. We shall then be able to convince these young men of the folly and futility of their ways. And if the Government will publicly accept Swaraj, or Home Rule, as the ideal objective of our immediate historic evolution, and will not interfere with our legitimate and constitutional Home Rule propaganda among the rising generations of the country on the one hand, and on the other start those reforms that will give a practical assurance of our future National Autonomy inside the coming Federation of the whole British Empire, this problem, with many others, may find an easy solution. There is no other way.—“New India,” 8-7-16.

No. 8: AVE CÆSAR.

The following order was served on me to-day.

ORDER.—Whereas in the opinion of the Governor-in-Council there are reasonable grounds for believing that Mrs. Annie Besant has acted and is about to act in a manner prejudicial to the public safety.

Now, therefore, the Governor-in-Council in exercise of the powers conferred by rule 3 of the Defence of India (Consolidation) Rules, 1915, published in the Notification of the Government of India in the Legislative Department, No. 86, dated the 9th December 1915, is pleased to direct that the said Mrs. Besant shall not enter and shall not reside or remain in the Province of Bombay, pending the further orders of Government.

And the said Mrs. Besant is hereby informed that if she knowingly disobeys this order, she will be liable to imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years and will also be liable to fine.

Dated this 29th day of June 1915.

By order of His Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor of Bombay in

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

Council. L. Robertson, Secretary to Government.

This is the explanation of Mr. J. D. Jenkins' belated letter in the Times of India. Some justification was wanted for this Order of Exclusion, so he suddenly attacked a book sold in Bombay since December last. "The said Mrs. Besant" will not "knowingly disobey this order," because to do so would be the act of a maniac; on the contrary, she respectfully sympathises with the fear of the Governor-in-Council that she may prejudice public safety for it must be in very unstable equilibrium if it can be so easily disturbed.

I wonder it does not strike our rulers that they cannot stop the desire for Home Rule by showing how objectionable is Other Rule. The more they try to strike me, the more resolved does India become to win freedom from such tyranny. Lord Willingdon has been very slow; I was in the Bombay Presidency at Christmas, and was there for a couple of days in May. And this is July 10th! What a pity I did not go to the Press Meeting to say "Good-bye" to my Bombay friends. I would have gone, had I known this was coming!

I am sorry to see on the Order the Royal Arms: "Dieu et mon droit," "God and my Right"; that is more suitable on my lips than on those of the Bombay Governor-in-Council. There should be a new escutcheon, justice gagged, sable and gules and the legend: "My strong arm and your Wrong."—Annie Besant:—"New India," 10-7-16.

No. 9: BY WHAT IT FEEDS ON.

The injury done to a man's character by arbitrary and irresponsible power is the chief cause of the difference between the English and the Anglo-Indian. Both are of the same splendid stock, both come from a race that has lived and died, fought and suffered for Freedom. The Englishman comes here with all his brave and free instincts growing within him. He is given irresponsible power over other men, he is courted, treated with subservience by his elders and superiors because of that power, and he gradually deteriorates, and becomes the haughty, tyrannical Anglo-Indian. What Englishman could seek to check a constitutional propaganda, to punish outspoken criticism? But an Anglo-Indian, not content with the exercise of the Press Act against Mrs. Annie Besant, and the threat of throwing her into gaol and fining her if she dares to step into Bombay Presidency, asks that her "publications" may not be allowed to use the mails! He wishes to revive the days in which his forefathers suffered for freedom of tongue and pen, when their ears were cropped off and they were pilloried for opposing unjust laws and royal tyranny. Such is the "sympathy," which answers our noble King-Emperor's pleading to Anglo-India. And these people are called "loyal"!—"New India," 15-7-16.

No. 10: INTERNMENT.

What does internment mean, this power which is in the hands of Governors-in-Council, and is strengthened by the Offence Act? It means that by a mere arbitrary exercise of power, any man or woman may be arrested and imprisoned within an area laid down in the lettre de cachet. No trial can be claimed: no evidence is published: no reason is given. The property of the victim is seized—a punishment reserved by the ordinary law for the highest crimes—he is rendered penniless, no communication may he hold with any friend that does not pass under the eye of an enemy. He is subjected to the grossest personal indignity, and has no redress. And all this degradation is inflicted on him at the arbitrary order of a small group of four men, who may be his personal enemies, who are his enemies in thought and belief. And we run the risk of this treatment if we dare to advocate reforms in the Government of India, which would give to Indians the justice and the liberty which the meanest subject of the Crown enjoys in Great Britain.—"New India," 19-8-16.

No. 11: AN OUTRAGE IN CALCUTTA.

No, good reader; not an assassination; not a dacoity, motor or other; not a bomb. But the arrest of a respectable gentleman, Babu Shyam Sundar Chakravarti, Assistant Editor of the Bengalee, without reason given, without notification of his offence, without chance of clearing himself; the

ANNIE BESANT V. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

Editor, Babu Surendranath Banerji's safe was also searched by the Police. The Bengalee bears witness to the blameless life of the burgled man; for four years, save for one day's illness, he has been in its office from 10-30 A. M. to 6 P. M. He was known to condemn unlawful movements, and none has a harsh word to say about him. The arrest is legal, doubtless, but it is truly unlawful, the breaking of the sacred Law of Justice which holds society together. When injustice is perpetrated, when crimes are committed legally, when innocence is no protection, and harmless men are treated as criminals, then we live in a condition of anarchy, no matter what legal sanction may cover the wrong-doer. "Civilisation" does not protect us; we should be better off in a state of savagery, for then we should be on our guard, we should carry arms, and protect ourselves. We are helpless, we pay taxes to be wronged.—"New India", 20-7-16.

NO. 12. THREE WAYS TO HOME RULE.

"Forward" writes in the Commonweal:

The conviction is growing that the Indian public have been deceived by the talk of the new angle of vision. A feeling is slowly coming over us Indians that our loyalty, so much praised by statesmen of the type of Lord Hardinge, is looked upon by the Bureaucracy in this country as mainly due to our impotency and our servile position, and not as rooted in a genuine devotion to the British Raj. Much talk of what is going to happen to India after the War is on the lips of our administrators, and their actions in the present lend a colour to what awaits us. The unfair and unequal treatment meted out to us in all matters, important or otherwise, leaves no doubt in the minds of the educated classes of India. That our loyalty is misunderstood, that our capacity is undervalued, that we are given everywhere the position of a dependent and an inferior, that we are not trusted, is evident to all. The enthusiasm and willingness to co-operate and help the Government in fighting the enemy that existed at the beginning of the War, has almost vanished. The avoiding of discussion on controversial topics is no more possible, the Government themselves having broken the arrangement. Repression has taken the place of clemency since the departure of Lord Hardinge, and observing and intuitive people feel the troublesome nature of the era that has dawned. People are reminded of Lord Curzon's days and already comparisons are being made. The unfair position assigned to India has roused our people to work for and claim Home Rule.

Difficult Times.

That we are living in strange and difficult times is patent. As Paine said of the Americans in the most crucial period of their history, we are living in "times that try men's souls." This is an age for heroes who dare to enter the arena of righteous warfare loved by the true Kshatriya of old, to whom according to the Gita, "nothing is more welcome." A calm reflection on a thorough observation of the events of the day convinces us that in these hours our history is being made, and will form one of the most glorious chapters in the already big volume. With a little effort our mind's eye can see the vision of the gods, who try men's souls as well as national destinies, presenting a glorious opportunity to this ancient land and its peoples. We can see how through suffering and endurance India is being prepared to take her legitimate place among the great countries of modern culture, not only for her own good, but to the benefit of European civilisation. Nobody believes now, as was the custom some 40 years ago, that India has nothing to give and everything to gain by coming into contact with western culture. Many things have made it clear, and the War has conclusively proven, that Europe, with all its boast of material prosperity, is devoid of that higher outlook on life, that spiritual point of view, which is essentially eastern. The War and the ways of warfare have shown that the cruelty of the Indian religion, who, as reported by the Padre and the missionary, sacrificed not animals but babies in his temples—a lie and a libel to be treated with contempt—is nothing, even if it were as true as it is false, compared to the cruelty which the Christian Nations of the West have displayed; the exaggerated and mainly untrue reports of gross immorality of the Oriental are surpassed in every way by the Occidental as proved by the cold statements of facts arrayed in the Report of the Royal Commission on Venereal Diseases; our submerged sixth do not live in the slum depravity of the submerged tenth of Great Britain; the much criticised low status of our women does not compare at all unfavourably with the status of English women according to English Law, nor our missionary-portrayed cruelty to our fair sex with the imprisonment and forcible feeding of their English sisters; while even the exaggerated picture of our polygamous habits is certainly superior to that presented by London and Berlin, Paris and Vienna, who allow their men each to have one wife and many mistresses. No sane man refuses to acknowledge that the West has something good and useful to give to us, but he sees clearly too that the East also has its own message to give to the younger West. It is clear to the thoughtful of both hemispheres that an inter-relation, an inter-dependence, between the various branches of our great Aryan race would result in peace and progress for the world.

VALUE OF INDIA.

India, if she would be allowed to live normally and naturally her life, enabling her to fulfil her own Dharma, would gladly help in the building up of the Aryan Empire. Without India the Aryan Empire is not possible. Very few of Great Britain's children see this because of their inherent nature, conservative and conceited; vested interests of her sons in this land drive out of them their love of liberty, and push them on to mean and undesirable ways of action; the dangerous results thereof are not allowed to be revealed to the great Democracy ruled by the Mother of Parliaments; those very traits of habit and thought going under the name of Prussianism, which the Mother-country is fighting against, are displayed with self-satisfaction and pride by her sons in India. Naturally, therefore, all efforts that Indians make to assert their own rights, to gain Liberty for the Motherland, to win Home Rule for themselves, are resented, and our opponents have recourse to repression and Prussianism. Without arms, without the vote, we find ourselves worse than useless. We pay, and if we resent, we will be forced to pay, taxes, and we have no representation; if we claim it we must ask for it as a boon, a favour, and not claim it as a right. This humiliating position is being resented, and rightly so, by thousands of Indians to-day. A new spirit is abroad and we do not say with our fathers that we are helpless. We are beginning to realise that we are being treated unjustly and that there are remedies which can be utilised by us.

A Just and Righteous Demand.

The first thing essential for us to realise is that our demand of Self-Government within the Empire is a just and righteous demand. Therefore all sorrow and suffering that come in our lives because we are engaged in the work of demanding Home Rule must be bravely and cheerfully endured. Not only that, but as Freedom is not easily gained for the mere asking, as opponents have to be encountered and overcome, it is but reasonable that we should expect everything from simple browbeating to ghastly repression. We must keep clear the conviction that ours is a holy cause and that, therefore, victory is assured, triumph is certain. It is only a question of time.

Unity is Strength.

Secondly, we must realise that unity is strength. Our opponents know this and, therefore, have followed in the past, as they are doing now, the principle of "Divide and Rule." Against the attack we must hold the shield of "United we stand," and not forget that "divided we fall." Much nonsense is talked about Brahmana oligarchies and Muslim autocracies. I am a non-Brahmana and I would say: "Better a Brahmana Bureaucracy than an Anglo-Indian Bureaucracy." I am not a Muslim but I have no hesitation in affirming: "Better a Muslim Oligarchy than an Anglo-Indian Bureaucracy." If we are to be tyrannised and lorded over, better that Indians do it—be they Brahmanas or Muslims—than that foreigners do it. But all that talk is over-exaggerated, and interested parties and their organs only utilise it in their own interests. If the Anglo-Indian Press attack Brahmanas as against non-Brahmanas and allow some of the latter class to rail against the former, it is done not at all in the interests of non-Brahmanas, but for the sake of Anglo-Indian self-preservation and self-aggrandisement. Indians, remember it: it pays the bureaucrat and the Anglo-Indian, whatever his sub-caste, trader, missionary, or administrator, to throw the apple of discord into the midst of a friendly gathering of Hindus and Muslims, Brahmanas and non-Brahmanas, Hindus and Indian Christians, Eurasians and Indian Christians, etc. "Divide and Rule" has been well observed by the ruling hierarchy in this hapless land, as Captain Gorvais Lyons pointed out (Afghanistan, published by Messrs. Higginbotham, Madras, "with the official sanction of the Army Council"), and we are traitors to our Mother and her peace and prosperity, if we allow these aliens' pranks to mar the harmony of our corporate life and labour.

Leave off Cringing.

Thirdly, have courage and leave off all cringing. Even our polite ways and manners are misunderstood. Even our happy disposition of not speaking unpleasantly has earned for us the title of "liars". Political petitioning and praying should be abandoned. Let us realise that it benefits Great Britain to have India, as much as it benefits India to have the British connection. The British Empire without India would be a farce; with Indian resources fully developed the Empire would be safe from all peril from without, as it would not be otherwise. The great minds of the Empire are seeing that even now. They recognise that if the advice of our National Congress had been followed, there would not have been this awful War, for Germany would not have dared to hurl itself against the ready millions of this land. Therefore, as Indians, let us recognise our own value and importance. This engenders self-confidence and that we require to a great extent. We are citizens of no mean country; our past history and achievements are no less glorious than those of other people; our present is not one of which we need to be ashamed; we are not perfect, but then neither is England nor France nor Germany nor America; if we have done what we have done under the existing state of things, just consider what we might not have attained to if, like Japan, we had been free for only 50 years. Therefore let us have self-confidence and stand on our own feet and courageously demand our due and work hard to get it—and success is ours.

We want an ideal for our daily work; no better one exists than that which is presented in the Bhagavad-Gita. For constitutional fight, along safe lines, by law-abiding methods, there is no teaching so valuable and inspiring as that which the Gita yields. Do not look upon it as a Hindu scripture, but accept it as the National Song of India. I am not a Hindu but I have found in it inspiration to love and labour for the Motherland, and in this age of ours the common national cry should be—do not, once again, look upon it as Bengali or Hindu, but as Indian—Vande Mataram,—Worship the Mother.—"New India", 24.7.16.

No. 13: BAL GANGADHAR TILAK.

A wave of anger will pass over India when the people hear that this great martyr of the Motherland is again in the toils of his enemies. His going abroad to carry on his suit against Sir Valentine Chirol had been announced. Maharashtra was celebrating his birthday, and had given him a birthday present of a lakh of rupees. Lord Willingdon sends him a birthday gift of a demand for security bonds of Rs. 40,000 against sedition. What chivalry and good taste are shown in thus breaking into the birthday festivities.

What is the object? To save Sir Valentine Chirol from being brought to account? Else, if the Bombay Government think him a preacher of sedition, why not rejoice to get rid of him out of the country? He could not preach sedition to India from England.

Mr. Tilak is to show cause why he should not be bound over to be of good behaviour for a year in a sum of Rs. 40,000. On the merits of the case our mouths are closed until after the hearing on Friday, but as "orally disseminating sedition" is the charge, and the Magistrate is asked to bind over Mr. Tilak to be of "good behaviour," we may quote the sections of the Penal Code and of the Code of Criminal Procedure which define sedition and the procedure adopted, so that the public may follow the case intelligently. Section 124A of the Indian Penal Code runs:

Whoever, by words, either spoken or written, or by signs, or by visible representations, or otherwise brings or attempts to bring into hatred or contempt, or excites or attempts to excite disaffection towards His Majesty or the Government established by law in British India shall be punished with transportation for life, or any shorter term to which fine may be added, or with imprisonment which may extend to three years to which fine may be added, or with fine.

Explanation 1.—The expression “disaffection” includes disloyalty and all feelings of enmity.

Explanation 2.—Comments expressing disapprobation of the measures of the Government with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means without exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection, do not constitute an offence under this section.

Explanation 3.—Comments expressing disapprobation of the administrative or other action of the Government without exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection, do not constitute an offence under this section.

(This is apparently introduced in order to define “sedition,” as there is no question of any prosecution.)

Section 108 of the Criminal Procedure Code enables a Magistrate of a certain rank to require such person to execute a “bond for good behaviour” for not more than one year, with or without sureties. Section 112 only directs the form of the order. All India will watch the events of Friday with the deepest interest.

What will be the next action of Government? One action which shocks the people comes after another. First it is the New India security; then the order of exclusion against Mrs. Annie Besant; then the arrest of Mr. Shyam Sundar Chakravarti; then this attack on Mr. Tilak; and to-day some arrests of wealthy Marwari gentlemen. And all the time in Bengal, internments of smaller folk go on, every one of which means keen suffering inflicted on some helpless family. And all for what? Because the Government cannot govern well enough to make the people contented, but wants to prevent a whole Nation from discussing its own affairs. Where is all this to end?—“New India”, 25-7-16.

No. 14: EDUCATION AND NEWSPAPERS

We have been reading a report in the South Indian Mail of a speech by the Hon. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri, in which he strongly objects to the intervention of newspapers in educational disputes. He said broadly that “any newspaper agitation was wrong, if it was against the examiners, professors, teachers, or against the University.”

That is a most extraordinary position to take up. Any abuse is to be allowed to continue, rather than that a newspaper should draw attention to it! A newspaper is expected to publish a report of a Senate meeting, but must not comment on that which it reports. Even if the education of Indian boys were in Indian hands, Mr. Sastriar’s position would be impossible; but when we remember that they are in the grip of foreigners, who impose upon them a crushing curriculum in a strange language, who force them to specialise at an age when their natural bent is not discernible, who have no regard to their miserable poverty, nor try to improve their indecent and insanitary surroundings, and who, when professors or teachers, often treat them with the greatest rudeness and address them in the most insulting terms—when this is the present condition of affairs, it is only the feeling that some sympathy is to be found in the press that saves the students from despair.—New India, 17-8-16.

LIONEL DAVIDSON,

Ag. Chief Secretary.

25-8-16.

Mrs. Annie Besant (with Mr. Ramaswami Aiyar).—The order of His Excellency the Governor-in-Council is that all issues of “New India” wherever found are to be forfeited to His Majesty. That meant all issues of “New India”, past and future.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Does it say ‘all issues of “New India”, past and future?’]

Mrs. Besant.—The words are ‘all copies of such newspaper wherever found,’ but not a single copy has since been seized.

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

No article contains words, signs or visible representations of the nature described and the order is illegal, because it purports to forfeit not only a particular article or articles which the Press Act allows, but also all issues of "New India" wherever found, and there are no grounds for doing any of these things. There are six reported cases in all since the Press Act was passed in 1910, and only five of these are really of any use at all. About 220 newspapers have been forfeited under the Act. The first case is Mahomed Ali v. Emperor (2). It is important inasmuch as in that case Government exercised all its powers and it was held that, although an illegality had been committed, there was no power to remedy the illegality. The next case is Abul Kalam Azad, In re (3). There was no argument at all in that case. The gentleman concerned lived at Delhi, and the case has been struck out. We then come to 22 Indian Cases.* It is the case of a Magistrate's order and the Court had granted a Rule to show cause why the Magistrate's order should not be set aside. The order was by the Chief Presidency Magistrate to give security for certain publications. The gentleman concerned was the registered proprietor of the Press and he said that he was not liable, being registered keeper of the Press, to give additional security for publications which he had made under section 8, proviso 1. The Magistrate did not name any section of the Act under which he acted. The Court said that the Magistrate must have acted under section 8 because there was no other section under which he could act. It assumed that he had so acted. Their Lordships held, supporting the case of Mahomed Ali v. Emperor (2), that the order was not revisable by the High Court in spite of the proviso under section 8. The Court appeared to be, as was the Calcutta Court, paralysed by section 22. They held that the Executive had absolute power even outside the Act. That is a case which is really against me. The Punjab Chief Court case [Ghulam Qadir Khan v. Emperor (4)] is the forfeiture of the Zemindar Press. There was forfeiture of the first security, and then the second security, Rs. 10,000, was put in, and the second security and the Press were all forfeited together.

In my case several articles have been charged. In the Punjab case there were only four articles published in July and August 1913. The trial was in July 1914. The articles were very violent in language, written when the public was very much excited with reference to the Cawnpore mosque. I find that the special words charged were "The Lieutenant Governor was a mosque-breaking Lieutenant Governor." He was also called the President of the Inquisition and it was said that he was fit to be the despotic ruler of the Tartar capital. Then the August articles were written while fighting was going on in the Balkans and the case against Muhammad Ali was sub-judice. It attributed disgraceful motives to Government and great exception was taken to the article while the case was pending in Court. The Court refused to cancel the forfeiture. The Court held it had power, but that the forfeiture was justified. In Ghulam Qadir Khan v. Emperor (4) the petition was against forfeiture of Rs. 10,000 and the Press, and in that case there were very strong comments on the indignity shown by Government to 70 millions of Muhammadans by its refusal to receive a deputation. It was held to come within the Act but that the Court had power to set aside orders under section 6 as a whole, though it could not vary it. Amar Singh v. Emperor (5) related to the forfeiture of the Loyal Press, Lahore. Only one article was charged. The argument is not given and the report gives only the judgment. From the judgment it seems that the Judges asked the Government Advocate to specify the passages complained of. It was admitted that he was not obliged to do it, but the Judges said that the applicant would suffer an unfair disadvantage, not knowing what he had to answer. It was said that the articles were misleading and unfair and that they gave an inaccurate account of the Komagatu Maru riot. Other articles of the paper were admitted under section 20 to show the tendency of the article charged, but it was said that they did not bear on it or on the incriminating portions. There was no parallel between that case and the curious trivial set of extracts which are given in this case. Mine is the first case in which there is a trivial collection of odds and ends swept up together to justify forfeiture, that forfeiture leading to a heavier security and complete forfeiture of the Press through the Press Act.

[The Chief Justice asked the Advocate-General, if he could, to facilitate arguments, specify the clauses of the section under which the various extracts came.]

[The Advocate-General said that Extract No. 1 came under section 4 (1); Extract No. 2, under clauses (a) and (e); Extract No. 3, under clauses (c) and (e); Extract No. 4, under clauses (c), 2nd part of (a) and (e); No. 5, clauses (a), (c) and (e); No. 6, clause (c); No. 7, clauses (a), (c) and (e); No. 8, clause (c); No. 9, clause (c); No. 10, clause (c); No. 11, clauses (c) and (e); No. 12, clauses (c), (a) and (e); No. 13, clause (c); and No. 14, clause (c).]

Mrs. Besant.—In Mahomed Ali v. Emperor (2) Jenkins, C. J., held that section 22 bars all jurisdiction except the jurisdiction of the High Court. He points out that the onus of proof is on the Counsel for the applicant, not on the Government, to prove innocence. The Counsel retorts that while that is so, he is embarrassed. The onus is really on the Judges to decide.

A notification is essential to the action; without the notification, the action should not have been taken.

I have classified the articles which come under one or more of the different heads. No words are given in my case "of the nature described" as laid down in the Press Act. It cannot be pretended that all the words are "of the nature described."

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Will it not be unfair to give only words that are violent and leave out the others?]

Mrs. Besant.—In order that the applicant might suffer no unfair disadvantage the words "of the nature described" should have been given. I shall argue that those words did not contain words of the nature described.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—It might be easy for the other side to point out what words are objectionable, but there may be other words which modify the meaning of those words and in that case it would be hardly fair to omit to mention them. In that case, you are in a better position.]

Mrs. Besant.—I am quite content but the difficulty is that I do not know exactly what I have to meet. It is exceedingly vague at present. To multiply a series of pick-pocketing is to prove burglary, and to pile up a number of misdemeanors is to prove felony. That seems to be the attempt of the Advocate-General.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The action is yours.]

Mrs. Besant.—By the words of section 17 I am entitled to raise any question of jurisdiction or validity of the order which leads up to the forfeiture. Jenkins, C. J., held that a notification was essential for the action and he decided finally that the notification was illegal. A simple re-statement of the words of the section cannot furnish anything in the shape of grounds. Again the direction under the section is mandatory. The imperative requirement that the Local Government should state the grounds of its opinion is intended to be a check on the powers of forfeiture vested in the Local Government. Sir Herbert Risley laid stress on this safeguard of appeal to the High Court. The statement of grounds might for another reason be an essential part of the Legislative scheme. It might help the Court to perform its duties under section 17. The notification, therefore, in my case appears to be defective in a material particular. Hence there has been no legal forfeiture. Section 22 of the Act, however, provides that the declaration purporting to be made under the Act is conclusive evidence that the forfeiture therein referred to has taken place. The question of the legality of the forfeiture can still be taken by the Court.

ANNIE BESANT V. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

[SESHAGIRI Aiyar, J.—The Chief Justice distinctly said that the whole notification may be illegal but the Court had no power. Section 17 is the only ground on which an application may be made.]

Dealing with the question of jurisdiction, he says "the notification is not according to law. Looking at the section as a whole the grounds of the opinion are mandatory and not directory." In that case they claimed that they had power to revise a Government order to a certain extent, "I cannot hold the notification void in such a way as to deprive us of jurisdiction. If our jurisdiction under section 17 is taken away there is no other remedy open to the person whose property is confiscated. We are depriving him of the only remedy that the law provides." I venture to submit that is a very strong argument. If an Executive Government which confiscates property can, by its own doing, leave out the grounds, and the Court can do nothing, there is no need for the paraphernalia of a Special Bench.

The judgment of the Calcutta High Court comes to this: you cannot challenge the forfeiture; that is protected by section 22. Any words may be brought within the purview of the Act. The words of the Act are so wide that it can be stretched to any point. Judge Stephen said that we must not even bring into hatred or contempt people who embarrass Government by murder or robbery. It makes the whole position fairly impossible for any newspaper to be published. Some other explanation must be found for the Press Act which would not render the whole legislation absurd and against all common sense. The statement that the Chief Justice makes is: "He could not interfere with the decision of the Executive. The Government may be in possession of information which may be impossible for them to declare." That view of discretion is not one that can be brought forward in dealing with the Government. The discretionary powers should not be interfered with in the absence of bad faith but the Executive must not be permitted to act capriciously. He says that he has not the ability to question the wisdom of the Executive.

Mr. Hardly Norton began by quoting Sir Herbert Risley as throwing light on what was meant by hatred and contempt in the Act and, therefore, he was allowed reference to the Gazette of India which contained speeches, and he pointed out that they showed the atmosphere in which the Act was passed which may throw light on the kind of class-hatred contemplated and they all referred to it. The Advocate-General referred to the preamble of the Act. They are referred to in course of the argument. That point is important as regards history. The enactment was passed in an atmosphere of assassination.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The Calcutta Court does not say that the speeches can be taken into account in construing the Act.]

Mrs. Besant.—All the safeguards promised have been swept away and the Government promised to use the safeguards. Under these conditions the Act was passed. As matters stand there are no limits of law within which newspapers can be conducted. It is difficult to carry on the daily work and to understand the limits within which to keep. That which is safe in Bombay entails forfeiture here. It depends on what Government you are under. This is very embarrassing to the newspaper Editor. There is also the difficulty as regards the class of paper in the same Presidency. This is the second objection. An Anglo-Indian paper, as it is generally called, can publish a matter which a pro-Indian paper is not allowed to answer.

If the Government cannot give us the safeguards they are illusory. There is also a judgment of the Punjab Court on the question of jurisdiction. The Calcutta judgment is not binding on Madras.

Coming to the question of construction the Court must construe an act rationally and in consonance with other statutes and also with natural justice. A penal statute, which this is practically, must be construed in the way most favourable to the accused. In a law where penal consequences come in, any act which would render the whole subsequent proceedings illegal would make it null and void. A doubt arises in my mind as to whether the action here is civil or criminal. Going against the Magistrate's order must be in the nature of a petition for revision. I have both the Public Prosecutor and the Advocate-General against me. The Press Act is one of those statutes which bring about penal consequences. Seizure of property is one of the highest punishments. The strict construction of a statute requires that the language should be so construed that any case should fall within the reasonable meaning of its terms and the spirit and scope of the enactment. Where an enactment entails penal consequences, no violence must be done to the language so as to bring people under it.

This action is a link in the chain and does not stand alone. It leads distinctly up to a further forfeiture of actual money, a loss of over 2½ lakhs of rupees. Where such heavy consequences are involved, a very great strictness of construction should be used in the preliminary step. Where by an Executive order a huge forfeiture is brought about, and when it is realised that the power of revision is lodged in the High Court in order to prevent injustice being done by an Executive action, the public ought to have the assurance that it is the law that decides, that it is not a case of passion acting, but a decision of the Judges of the High Court. The powers of the High Court are very seriously involved in the action that it takes in this case. We have got the Government of India Act which practically includes the Charter Act. Section 39 says that, as regards power of appeal, there is a right of appeal to the Privy Council. This, as a matter of fact, involves that possibility, and is only a link which leads to a most crushing forfeiture which can only be inflicted by a Court of Justice. If Madras confirms Calcutta in holding it has no power, that the Court can declare the action illegal, but that it is powerless to interfere, the whole traditions of the British Courts, which used to stand between an injured subject and the Executive, will be lost to us. It is sometimes said in defence of this action that it avoids difficulties in the way of long drawn-out trials so that seditious words may not have publicity given to them. But it is impossible to think the intention was not only to get rid of long drawn out trials, but to get rid of all powers which could stand between the person attacked and the Executive and deprive the aggrieved of any remedy so as to enable the Executive practically to seize all property at its will and pleasure without any reference to a Court of Law.

I now come to the ground of vagueness. There are 20 extracts under five heads. This multiplicity of articles contravenes the principle laid down by the Privy Council in Sabrahmaniam Ayyar v. King-Emperor (6).

[SESHAGIRI AYYAR, J.—That is on the special section of the Criminal Procedure Code.]

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—That was an irregularity, but there is no question of any irregularity before us.]

Mrs. Besant.—There are words in that judgment which indicate that a multiplicity of charges is embarrassing. The Lord Chancellor points out that the accused was charged with no less than 41 acts, and he says that the reason for limiting the number of charges, as in an English Court, is in order, obviously, that the Jury may not be prejudiced by the multiplicity of charges, and that it causes embarrassment both to the Judge and the accused, and would interfere with definite proof of distinct offences. The policy of such a provision is manifest. The necessity of a system of defining a criminal offence is, therefore, evident. No such accurate definition has been given of my offences. A hasty putting on of parts of section 4 (1) under the various clauses (a) to (e) does not give me the protection that I ought to have had.

The beginning of these proceedings, namely, the order of May 22nd by the Chief Presidency Magistrate to deposit security before him is illegal. There I have to meet section 22.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Does a difficulty lie there?]

Mrs. Besant.—That protects an Executive order, but it cannot oust the jurisdiction of the High Court for all criminal proceedings.

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—There you are mistaken. Whatever power we have under this Act must be found within the four corners of the Act.]

Mrs. Besant.—It is possible that an act of the Legislature may have power to bar a suit against an Executive officer for a wrongful act, but it has no power to bar action which is intended to set aside a judicial action.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Do you mean that we are not barred under the Charter Act?]

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—We have to read sections 17 and 22 together.]

Mrs. Besant.—Supposing that the Magistrate imposes the security on me by a mistake and that is forfeited by the Local Government, am I barred from going behind the forfeiture to the illegal imposition of the security by the Magistrate? I submit that that cannot be the meaning of section 22.

[AYLING, J.—The question is whether you can go to that point in a petition which is under section 17.]

Mrs. Besant.—It has reference to sections 4 and 3 which will make us see that it does come. Suppose it is held that section 22 bars me, I say that the section itself is ultra vires. There is no power in the Legislature to make it. It ousts the jurisdiction of the High Court.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Do you mean that the Governor-General had no power to pass this section?]

Mrs. Besant.—Yes, if it is intended to prevent such interference.

[AYLING, J.—Section 22 may be ultra vires, but not section 17.]

Mrs. Besant.—The whole of the Act.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Do you apply under section 15 of the Charter Act? If you put in your petition under the Charter Act in view of our powers under that Act there may be some meaning. If the petition is under section 17 of the Press Act—]

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—You are petitioning under section 17 of the Press Act and if you want us to exercise powers under the Charter Act, you have to put in a proper application.]

Mrs. Besant.—I have a petition which will be pleaded by my Vakil as a criminal revision petition in the ordinary jurisdiction of the Court. On some technical grounds it was returned to me and it is still pending.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—This Court is constituted specially under the Press Act and we cannot hear that petition.]

Mrs. Besant.—I presume that it is within Your Lordships' power to hear that petition. The points are the same.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—This Bench cannot hear it. We have to constitute another Bench for hearing a petition under the Charter Act.]

Mrs. Besant.—Even that will hardly deprive the High Court of its inherent powers of putting an end to forfeitures.

[AYLING, J.—We are dealing with a petition under the Press Act. In these proceedings we cannot go to the question whether the section with which we are dealing is legal or illegal. That ought to be done independently.]

Mrs. Besant.—I shall be obliged to raise it presumably in the other.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—This is a specially constituted Bench but you can raise it and this Bench may be re-constituted as an ordinary Bench and then you can argue that matter.]

Mrs. Besant.—The Press Act as a whole?

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—You had better now restrict yourself to section 22. Is it an old Press?]

Mrs. Besant.—Yes, I say it in my affidavit.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—You say that when you purchased the Madras Standard and gave a declaration, you ought to have been asked to deposit security.]

Mrs. Besant.—Yes.

The Advocate-General.—There is a proviso.

Mrs. Besant.—I am going to argue that it is an old press.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—You say that the Magistrate having held that the security was not necessary, he had not power to vary it afterwards?]

Mrs. Besant.—Yes.

The Advocate-General.—That objection is not competent.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—She contends that we can interfere.]

Mrs. Besant.—In the recent Patna case it was an old Press started before the passing of the Press Act, 1910. For some reasons not intelligible it was carried on from 1909 to 1914 without a declaration. Anyhow on 24th June 1914 the keeper of the Press filed the necessary declaration. It was not held that that took away the protection which was given to an old Press.

The judgment says: "The matter is very much one of form. We have not before us the previous proceedings under section 3 and it would undoubtedly be even better if the learned Magistrate had framed a notice."

I go to the question whether there is jurisdiction or not. I urge that this arises under section 17 which thereupon becomes the basis of my arguments. This is clearly within the competence of the Special Bench. The Act says in section 22, that everything is shut out except "the High Court on such application as aforesaid." That application aforesaid is under section 17. Section 17 does not apply unless an order of forfeiture has been made under section 4.

[SESHAGIRI Aiyar, J.—Under section 17 the forfeiture has been made. The contention is that the Magistrate having acted under section 3 proviso, you come under section 17. Where a security has been demanded by the Magistrate under these powers within section 3 (1) proviso, can you ask us under section 17 to revise that order?]

Mrs. Besant.—The proviso cannot be read into section 3. The order of forfeiture has been made under section 4. It says that if 'any security as required under section 3, etc.' If a deposit has not been made under section 3 the matter does not come under section 4. Section 3 runs as follows: [Here reads the section.] The Magistrate has no power to demand security after he has once exempted.

Section 3 must come into consideration because section 4 orders that it shall be demanded as required by section 3 (1). Hence there is no such legal order as is contemplated by section 17.

Going to section 4 (1), the nature described therein must be certain definite elements. In order to bring any article under that section the article must have been printed in a printing Press by which security has been deposited under section 3. Secondly, the Press must be used for the purpose described. I shall ask Your Lordships to consider whether a Press is used for the purpose of certain things or they are merely isolated passages contrary to the policy of the paper as a whole. It must be shown that the Press is of the type described in section 4 (1). Thirdly, if the security under section 3 has not been deposited or is deposited independent of section 3 then section 4 has no application.

[SESHAGIRI Aiyar, J.—There must be a legal liability to deposit security.]

Mrs. Besant.—It must be legal and it practically means that the order of forfeiture under section 17 must be a real order.

I now come to section 3 on which so much turns. The Act under which we all have to make a declaration is the Act of the Press and Registration of Books and Newspapers. In that the Magistrate has no discretion of any kind. There is no security under that Act. Whenever the owner is changed or the Press is changed, a fresh declaration is necessary. When we come to the Press Act of 1910, then the giving of security is normal. It is not in the sense of any penalty at all. I shall read the proviso to that section. The Magistrate has discretion as to the amount of security. There is a proviso to section 8 of the Act also. The second proviso is identical with that in section 3. Clearly the second proviso cannot apply to the first proviso and it is of the nature of an exception to the original sub-section 8. A proviso of a sub-section cannot be taken as identical with, and cannot be read into the sub-section. Nor can it be read for the purpose of construing the sub-section unless the sub-section itself is doubtful. If the sub-section taken independently has two possible meanings, then it has been held to be legitimate to use the proviso in order to find out which of these irreconcilable or doubtful meanings is the proper one. Otherwise it must be taken as an independent thing bringing in a separate rule altogether. An exception to a particular set of circumstances obviously cannot be identical with the set of things to which it is an exception. I submit that an order under the proviso is not an order under the sub-section. See Craies Statute Law, 4th edition, page 198. The effect of accepting provisos is to accept the preceding enactment which but for the proviso would be within it. I should be within this sub-section 3 if it were not for the proviso.

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—You argue that ‘any order under sub-section’ does not include the proviso. You further argue that the deposit of any security cannot apply to an order dispensing with security?]

Mrs. Besant.—That is exactly my submission. See also Cyclopædia of Law and Procedure. (Volume 32). “It is something engrafted upon the preceding enactments and is legitimately used for the purpose of taking special cases within general enactments and providing specially for them.” The Magistrate exempts them from that sub-section and puts them on to a separate class. After he has done that, he cannot either cancel or vary, or, as he has done, cancel and vary the order, and, therefore, I submit that his order imposing security is bad. He had no jurisdiction to make it, and he has utterly disregarded the Act under which he claims authority.

The dispensing with security is not an order but an exception to the order. Then it is impossible to cancel and vary an exception. The proviso gives the Magistrate no authority to do both. Supposing a Press became rebellious afterwards, there is section 12 applicable to it. By section 12 authority is given to cancel any issue of a newspaper which the Local Government thinks contains all those words, signs, and the rest of them. Then section 17 would at once come in after section 12; so that Government is not helpless.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The Government can deal only with the publications, and not with the Press?]

Mrs. Besant.—A newspaper, book or such document, and the offending one can be seized at once. It may be said that it is troublesome. But, on the other hand, if a Press was so exceptionally good, there is an exceptional mode of dealing with it.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Sub-section 2 to section 3 gives more power to the Local Government.]

Mrs. Besant.—Yes, there has been no break or stoppage in the conduct of my paper.

The Advocate General.—A new declaration has been made superseding the previous one by a different person.

Mrs. Besant.—That does not change the Press. The Press is the same. The necessity, of course, was that the Local Government must give grounds for the action taken and from that necessity the Magistrate cannot escape. The fact that there was a new declaration by myself does not destroy its character as an old Press. The moment that an Act gives powers to a Local Government to give grounds for the purpose of action, it imposes on that Government a judicial character. For Executive acts, it does not give reasons. The Press Act indicates three bodies: the Magistrate, the Local Government and the High Court. I submit that all these under the Press Act are judicial bodies and they must give reasons for their decisions.

[AYLING, J.—You must take ‘signs, words or visible representations, etc.,’ under section 4, is it not a reason?]

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Section 12 stands on a different footing, which says that you must give reasons.]

Mrs. Besant.—If they were judicial bodies they have a duty of hearing both sides.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—How can you say that Government is a judicial body? You do not find those words ‘stating grounds’ in section 4. I do not know why they have made a distinction. They have made a clear distinction between section 4 and section 12.]

Mrs. Besant.—The Act was so hurriedly passed. In any case, even if your Lordships do not think that the Local Government has a quasi-judicial duty, the Magistrate has and the High Court has. Hence the Magistrate ought to have called upon me to show cause or ought to have heard what I had to say. I paid the money under protest. I paid the security really in order to find out what wrong I had done. The Magistrate entirely evaded doing his act in a judicial capacity but acted as a purely executive authority. Being not an executive but a judicial officer, he comes under the law laid down so very strongly in Scott v. Scott (7). Lord Shaw pointed out the difficulties arising in law, that there was a danger of remitting constitutional rights to the region of judicial discretion and that it shifted the foundations of freedom from rock to sand. He argued the whole question of judicial power to keep his proceedings away from the public and he held that there was no such power.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—That has nothing to do with this case.]

Mrs. Besant.—The Magistrate refused to give me particulars.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—What particulars had he to give?]

Mrs. Besant.—He had instructions of the Government Solicitor on the other side and a large number of papers which he refused to show me.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—That cannot help us in this petition under section 17.]

Mrs. Besant.—I say he was not acting in a judicial manner.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—You have to point out that it is a matter of being ultra vires. As to whether it is an irregularity or not, you cannot go into it now.]

Mrs. Besant.—Section 22 of the Act is ultra vires, even if the whole Act is not.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—It is open to you to argue that section 22 is ultra vires.]

Mrs. Besant.—It is ultra vires because it restricts the High Court's jurisdiction. The High Court has powers which cannot be interfered with by any Statute. section 4 taken by itself is distinctly ultra vires.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—You can argue that, but I do not know how you can make it out.]

Mrs. Besant.—As a British citizen I come under certain laws from which I cannot be dissociated. In fact they always clothe me as being born in the United Kingdom. I am not going to press that point but I put it as an extra reason. I lay special stress on forfeiture under section 4.

I am not concerned with the various clauses. The point is that the forfeiture which it gives is not forfeiture in law.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The Governor-General may pass any Act?]

Mrs. Besant.—Not any Act which is against a certain thing. The Government of India Consolidating Act, section 65, says that the Governor-General has no power to make certain laws affecting certain things, unless expressly authorised by the Parliament of England and he has no power to make a law affecting the powers of Parliament, etc. The general principle will be that no Statute of a local Legislature can contravene a Statute passed by Parliament, nor can it make a law which affects the unwritten law or constitution. I do not propose to detain your Lordships with a long argument as to the many Charters and Regulations passed from time to time. All that is necessary for my argument is just to allude to what may be called the Standing Charters which deal with this special point. The first was of Queen Elizabeth which dealt with British subjects who came to reside in India. Then we dismiss all others until we come to Charles II's. I then go to the Regulating Act which gives power to make rules not repugnant to the Laws of the Realm. In every one of these, the powers of the Governor-General in Legislative Council were limited by the fact that they must not be contrary to the laws of the King of England whereof India was a dependency. This is repeated again in 3 and 4 William IV and in the Act of 1858 when the Crown took over the sovereignty of India, held in trust prior to that by the East India Company. And then came in the Indian Councils Act of 1861 in which these particular words were reproduced and in the Government of India Act of 1915 they are found in the exact form. That was one of the Acts which might not in any way be contravened by any law which might be passed in India.

The question must at once arise what is "Unwritten Law," which is rather a vague phrase. It is admitted that the unwritten Laws of England are recited in the Magna Charta which at that time were regarded as forming the laws and constitution of England. No. 39 of that runs:—"No free man shall be arrested, or imprisoned or diseised of free hold, of liberties or of customs, (customs being a technical word implying exactions by the Crown of money), nor in any way injured, except by the legal judgment of the Peers or by the law of the land." The words

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

I lay stress on are "he shall not take property except by the law of the land." ["Stubbs's Select Charters", page 293.] In the 12th clause of the Petition of Rights given in Appendix 508 all the words which bear specially on this section 4 occur. "Several amounts were made of fines and forfeitures before any conviction or judgment against a person." I submit that forfeitures are not laws of the land, but as such are against the Bill of Rights, which is over every subject of the Crown, whether British born or Indian born.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Under section. 65, all subjects of His Majesty and servants of the Crown in other parts of India are referred to. It is a Parliament Act. Does it not include all British subjects also?]

Mrs. Besant.—As a British subject I cannot be separated from the Magna Charta and the Bill of Rights.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The Governor-General in Council has got power to legislate for every one in British India.]

Mrs. Besant.—Not against the authority of Parliament.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Is there any limitation there?]

Mrs. Besant.—Section 65 (2) has made a special exception as to what the Governor-General must not do.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—It does not purport to pass a law against the unwritten law of Great Britain and Ireland.]

Mrs. Besant.—Yes. I took the sentence from the Bill of Rights. I quote from Stubbs's "Fines and Forfeitures," page 508.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Sir George Barnes considers how far the Petition of Rights affects persons outside the United Kingdom.]

Mrs. Besant.—A British subject wherever he goes can claim those rights.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Whatever law exists, England is governed only by that law and is not governed by any law in British India.]

Mrs. Besant.—It would mean that he carries with him certain fundamental rights such as liberty of person and right of property; unless deprived of them by ordinary Courts.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Everybody has that right.]

Mrs. Besant.—Without a sentence of a Court of Law, a person could not be deprived of property.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—For depriving a subject of his property, there are various laws. Take the Income-Tax Act for instance. There are other Acts also which forfeit property, such as the Revenue Recovery Act.]

Mrs. Besant.—The right of taxation is a right which is specially reserved to the Government.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The Governor-General-in-Council also has power to make laws for recovery of property.]

Mrs. Besant.—That does not show that an action of the Executive is, therefore, justifiable.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—It cannot be the meaning of the words unwritten law.]

Mrs. Besant.—I contend that the duty of a subject is to obey the laws. Those are relative and the King has the duty of giving protection to life, property and liberty except when a Court of Justice has pronounced that they are forfeited. I object to the arbitrary action of the Executive which before trial forfeits. Money is levied and then I am asked to go to Court. Practically my argument under this head may be divided into three parts. The first would touch section 22, secondly, that the law of the land as administered by the King's Courts of Justice could not take away or infringe the powers of the High Court by any law which is passed by the Governor-General-in-Council and which removes the power from the Judiciary and vests the same in the Executive. The jurisdiction of the High Court is ousted and in that way the protection of the subject, however legitimate the exaction by the Executive, is infringed by its action. The third point is that the Laws of England demand that the guilt of the accused should be proved before he is punished.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—There is no question of guilt at all.]

Mrs. Besant.—I have a penalty of forfeiture against me before any wrong is proved,

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—You are not found guilty of any crime.]

Mrs. Besant.—Forfeiture of property is punishment. It is a penal proceeding. The Bill of Rights gave a declaration that it should never again be done.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—There is no sentence or order against you personally. There is no such sentence provided for in the Act. The Act does not deal with any crime committed by any person. It deals with certain documents which contain certain words and prohibits the publication of those documents.]

Mrs. Besant.—I am charged with incitement to murder, etc.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Your petition does not go to the root objection, but to the way in which the power is exercised by the Government. You are asked to come here to show that the forfeiture should not have been incurred.]

Mrs. Besant.—When a man is accused of doing a wrong thing he is punished first.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Can you say that the Government are wrong in having driven you to the Court after forfeiture? Can you say that the Government have no power to act in that way?]

Mrs. Besant.—My contention is that the Governor-in-Council has no power to inflict forfeiture before proving the wrong, because such a procedure throws the onus of proof on the accused person. It ought to be the duty of my opponents to show that I have done a wrong.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—It is with regard to the mode of legislation and not the power of legislation.]

Mrs. Besant.—It is a point which I press, particularly because it has been the point on which the Bill of Rights was based. Had the King a right to take money, fines and forfeitures without anything behind him of legal decision? It has been decided that no such right exists. I claim that the people are under the protection of that right which exists in England. The third point is that the Laws of England provide for forfeiture after a sentence. What the Press Act says is: "We have taken from you your money. If you like you can go to the High Court, and under impossible conditions, you can try to get it back." It is that which is a distinct breach of the law. It is one of those Acts which has penal consequences and forfeiture of property is one of the highest penalties known to English Law. The Press Act permits this forfeiture by a notice in writing and not by a sentence after trial.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Could a British subject be interned under the Defence of India Act?]

Mrs. Besant.—There you have a measure of urgency.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—It is an Act of the Governor-General.]

Mrs. Besant.—Yes, just as England is now under Martial Law.

[AYLING, J.—England under Martial Law?]

Mrs. Besant.—Under the Defence of the Realm Act.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Ordinary Courts are not suspended. Special Tribunals are appointed no doubt, but that does not make it Martial Law. If the Defence of India Act is within the competence of the Legislature, I do not see why the Press Act should not be. The Defence of India Act affects persons, while the Press Act affects property.]

Mrs. Besant.—The Defence of India Act is only current during the War and six months afterwards, with the special object of defending the Realm from riots, etc., and it certainly has been always held where a country was imperilled special Acts of emergency were permitted, and, if the Press Act were an Act of emergency, I doubt whether I would put forward this argument. It is a statute of a permanent character.

In the Ameer Khan case the point of allegiance arose. Instead of a sentence of forfeiture we have an order giving the Local Government's opinion. Government has not even stated any reasons and the result is that it may forfeit illegally as much as it pleases and nobody can help the unfortunate victim. We have, therefore, the difficulty that no one under this has any cause to defend himself. The Government says: "Go and get the money back by going to the High Court," It makes the Court helpless and it is the reverse of all rightful Governments under the Crown of England. I rely on the statement of Mr. Justice Norman who puts it very much better than I can [In the matter of Amcer Khan (8)]. It would be a startling thing that rights of so sacred a character could be taken away by an Act of the subordinate Legislature. It is to those fundamental laws that I refer.

According to the Bill of Rights and Magna Charta the right stands on the same level. In the Bengal case the Judge regarded it as an emergency legislation and the power was given to the Governor-General to pass emergency legislation when the state of the country required it.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—There is a special power given to the Governor-General-in-Council to pass emergency laws.]

Mrs. Besant.—If the condition of the country requires it.

The Advocate-General.—The Governor-General's Executive Council can pass an Ordinance which can last for six months. The power of the Governor-in-Council is the same. The Defence of India Act is not an Ordinance but a legislative enactment.

Mrs. Besant.—I am contending that we are not dealing with an emergency Act but an Act on the permanent Statute Book. I would very briefly draw your Lordships' attention to the legislation on the Press. The present Press Act is entirely different from every other Press Act except the Vernacular Press Act which gave exceptional powers to the Executive and was abolished. In 1867 we have the first of this series of laws.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Why are you going to the past history of the Press Act?]

Mrs. Besant.—To show to your Lordships that there is no other Press Act except the Vernacular Press Act and the present legislative enactment, which allow any forfeiture or any penalty to be inflicted except by a Magistrate after hearing the person affected.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—That may be so. The Press Act does go very far. There is no doubt about it.]

(8) 6 B. L. R. 392.

Mrs. Besant.—With regard to the Vernacular Press Act it is against the whole tendency of the English Legislation under which the Crown assumed the sovereignty of India.

I now turn to the incriminating passages. The crimes against which this Act was specially directed are recited in section 4. In a paper where there are a large number of very weighty and argumentative articles dealing with fundamental questions of public importance, all that the Government could find in order to bring me under the security section of the Press Act are these trivial extracts. I ask your Lordships now to turn to the passages and see whether they in any way approach the object for which the Press Act was enacted.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—What you have to satisfy is that what is written here does not come within the scope of the words, signs or visible representations, etc.]

Mrs. Besant.—The word "otherwise" includes everything and anybody can be caught technically within it. I am going to ask your Lordships to construe the words hatred and contempt not as any passing feeling of anger nor a passing feeling of annoyance against an act of Government but as meaning such hatred and contempt as would lead to the crimes which are here laid down.

[AYLING, J.—Crimes referred to in clause (a) ?]

Mrs. Besant.—In all the other clauses also. Offences which will lead to murder, to explode under the Explosive Substances Act and to draw officers from their allegiance.

We come to the answers to the attacks of the Anglo-Indian journals. That I shall deal with later in detail. But I say that they are justifiable answers unless the Court holds the Anglo-Indian papers may attack and that Indian or pro-Indian papers may not reply.

So far as Home Rule is concerned, it is enough to point out that in Beni Bhushan Roy v. Emperor (9) it was laid down that advocacy of Home Rule, Swaraj or Self-Government is legitimate. It cannot be that on that point it is attacked. The attempt is to build up the Empire and to urge law-abiding methods and absence of cringing, and we are told it comes under clause (a) which includes bomb throwing. That is not my view. There is nothing more in these extracts except what I have there touched on. I ask your Lordships to say whether in the whole of these extracts there is incitement to murder, to outrages, to intimidation, violence, treason or bomb throwing. Those are the crimes against which the Act is levelled.

(9) 34 C. 991; 6 C. L. J. 699; 11 C. W. N. 1050; 6 Cr. L. J. 257.

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

These are the worst passages or rather the best passages for the purpose of the Press Act that the Advocate-General and the Public Prosecutor have been able to find in my paper and that is a great testimony to the value of my paper. I think in this Act hatred or contempt towards the Government established by law in British India is not hatred towards individuals. On that I shall have a careful argument to put forward.

It means the system of Government, the Crown and Government in the sense in which it would be used in England. Government would have to be read in the light of that meaning. There is no reference to unconstitutional methods, provided that nothing is done to derogate the authority of the Crown and break the connection between Great Britain and India but only to change the powers of certain classes of people and make them constitutional instead of arbitrary.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—To advocate change in the form of Government does not come under the clause (c).]

Mrs. Besant.—If it were a proposal to wage war against the King it would be. If it is a change of functions and powers in Executive Council or of the civil servants generally, or what we call the bureaucracy, all these things might be legitimately urged. I shelter myself, therefore, under the exception mentioned in the Penal Code.

[SESHAGIRI Aiyar, J.—That India should be split up into various Provinces and governed like Indian States.]

Mrs. Besant.—Yes, my Lord.

The Advocate-General.—It is quite possible to advocate Home Rule in a way and by means calculated to excite disaffection, hatred and contempt. It is those things against which action is intended. I am instructed to say that any advocacy of Home Rule does not come within the scope of the Press Act.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—You may then leave it out.]

Mrs. Besant.—That narrows the field. Disaffection includes disloyalty and feelings of enmity. I have always been most intensely loyal. Feelings of enmity do not exist. Explanation 2 is still more useful to me. That is an attempt to obtain alteration in the methods of Government by lawful means. That exactly covers everything that I have done through the whole of my agitation. I express disapproval of the measures with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means and reiterate it over and over again.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Section 20 relates to evidence, in aid of the proof.]

The Advocate-General.—It is for me to give evidence in aid of the proof.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Suppose the nature of the articles is perfectly innocent.]

[AYLING, J.—Do you mean that the prosecution can put in other articles than this?]

The Advocate-General.—Yes.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Do you mean articles of an incriminating nature or of the nature and tendency which are alleged? You are reading words which are not there.]

The Advocate-General.—Evidence in proof of the nature charged.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—It is open to Mrs. Besant to put in other articles. Do you argue that she cannot do so?]

The Advocate-General.—I will indicate to your Lordships what I mean. With respect to these particular articles which are included in the order of forfeiture, if there is anything that has a bearing that may go. But protestations of loyalty and various other things, the general policy of the paper in other matters, will not throw any light upon words which are included in this order of forfeiture and which are charged as coming under the Press Act. That is the nett result of the rulings.

[AYLING, J.—Suppose Mrs. Besant puts in an article to show that the tendency of an article charged is not what you say it is. Is it relevant or not? If you put in an article to show that the tendency of a charged article is bad, surely we must allow her to put in an article to show that it is not.]

The Advocate-General.—What has been decided is that the other articles relied upon must relate to the exact matter and throw light on it. If a certain intention is entertained by the Editor, or a proprietor of a newspaper upon other occasions upon other subjects or general professions of loyalty to the Crown, they are irrelevant for the purpose of qualifying the nature of the words which are attacked as coming under section 4.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Do you mean to say that any articles which show the policy of the paper cannot be put in?]

The Advocate-General.—The question is, what is the effect of the words which are implied in a particular article.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—When you are charging certain articles as inciting to murder, creating disaffection or class hatred, surely all articles to show that the policy of the paper is not that, would be relevant.]

The Advocate-General.—They would be irrelevant. With regard to the nature of the articles which would be relevant under section 20, the words used there are "in evidence" not of the nature or tendency of the articles but the effect they produce on the minds of the reader. I submit the decisions are clear.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—There is nothing with regard to the intention or motive. The question is only with regard to the effect.]

The Advocate-General.—What is the effect of the articles on the readers? They are the real persons to judge. There are a number of decisions of the Punjab Chief Court which say that mere general protestations of loyalty are not enough.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Have you any decisions of the High Courts?]

The Advocate-General.—No, only of the Punjab Chief Court.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Is the Punjab Chief Court equivalent to the High Court?]

The Advocate-General.—Yes. It is the High Court within the meaning of the Criminal Procedure Code. Of course, it is not a Chartered High Court; anyhow it is a tribunal constituted under this Act. It is a High Court for purposes of this Act.

[SESHAGIRI Aiyar, J.—The articles must throw light on the nature and tendency of the writer.]

Mrs. Besant.—The section has two explanations. The first is disaffection which includes disloyalty and all feeling of enmity. The second relates to expressing disapproval of the measures of Government, etc., with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means or of the administration or action of the Government or of the administration of justice in British India without exciting or attempting to excite hatred or contempt. This does not come within the scope of clause (c). For the moment leaving explanation I and taking explanation II relating to expressions of disapproval of measures to obtain change by lawful means, that is an exception in the form of explanation. Now, the allowance deals with measures of Government without causing disaffection as regards Government and so on. The explanation really covers hatred and contempt of a class as well as of Government or of measures of Government.

The Advocate-General.—It is specific.

Mrs. Besant.—It is in the same sub-clause; so that it might be taken to apply to the less as it is stated to apply to the larger.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—If the comments are to affect a particular class, that argument is right. If the comment expressing disapproval of Government affects a particular class or a section of His Majesty's subjects, then explanation II would apply.]

Mrs. Besant.—Chief Justice Jenkins says any attack upon a religious class does not come within this clause. I desire to narrow down his reasoning of the clause in which he stated, and Justice Stephen agreed, that even speaking against a class committing robbery would come within the clause. I am trying to narrow down the clause for purposes of this case.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The comment must be expressive of disapproval of the measures of Government. Is it necessary to argue that point, namely, that any of the articles was directed against Government?

Mrs. Besant.—Sometimes criticisms on measures of Government are made. I traverse the whole contention that there is anything in the paper to excite hatred and contempt of Government. On this point of hatred and contempt to which I desire to draw your Lordships' attention, I shall refer to Queen-Empress v. Kahanji (10). It is a case heard by Jardine and Ranade, JJ. There it is a case of a dangerous riot. At such a time a poem was published which was held to increase the excitement. Mr. Justice Jardine goes to say: "Many sermons especially in factious times raised ill-feelings in the minds of the opposite party. Yet, it is not generally a reason for interference with the liberty of speech or the liberty of the Press. Such interference with legal rights would only cause oppression." Mr. Justice Ranade puts the matter more strongly.

This case has a bearing on the construction of the words 'Hatred' and 'Contempt'.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—It does not define the words 'Hatred' or 'Contempt'.]

Mrs. Besant.—It shows the fact that even if it had been held to make the man angry, the anger is the fault of the man who felt angry and not that of the writer. The words of the Press Act are taken from the Penal Code, section 124A. It has three explanations. Disaffection includes disloyalty. Comments expressing disapprobation of the measures of Government with a view to obtain alteration by lawful means do not constitute an offence under this section.

Explanation 3 says comments without expressing hatred or contempt do not constitute an offence under this section.

I then turn to section 153A. The explanation says that it does not amount to an offence if comments are made without malicious intent. To bring the charge home to an accused under this section, the Court must be satisfied that the accused had a conscious intention of promoting, causing or exciting enmity and hatred between the various classes of His Majesty's subjects, i. e., Europeans and Indians. There must be a deliberate attempt to incite one class against another. By my paper, on the contrary every opportunity is taken to bring the various classes together, and, if there be any reference to any special treatment, it must be taken to be an attempt to bring the various classes together and to remove any unnecessary difference in treatment. The explanation requires dishonesty and malicious intention. I shall draw your Lordships' attention to section 4 (a). The words 'Government established by law' only apply to certain cases. There is a distinction to be made between what I may call the substance of the Government and the accidents that surround that Government. The Government means the continuance of that of which the substance is the supremacy of the Crown and secondly India is part of the Empire, so that anything, which tended to argue that India should go outside the Empire, should leave the Empire or break the British connection, would be an attempt to injure the Government as established by law in the full sense of the term; but the form of Government, I submit, does not come under that heading.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—That was admitted by the Advocate-General. You say it is possible to advocate Home Rule without severing the British connection and the means suggested are not such as would bring you within the meaning of the section; that is admitted.]

Mrs. Besant.—Then I need not argue about the autocracy or bureaucracy, etc. But whatever the form of the Government may be, any attempt to excite feelings will be unlawful; any appeal to force is unlawful. That I am admitting to the fullest extent. Therefore, if any articles are put in as tending towards the direction of inciting to violence, my object will be to show that there is nothing of that character either in the paper as a whole or in the parts used by the Advocate-General.

'Government' does not mean the person or persons in authority for the time being but the existing political system. One particular set of persons may be open to objection and to attack them or excite hatred against them is not necessarily exciting hatred against Government, because they are only individuals and are not representatives of that abstract Government. See Emperor v. Bhaskar Balvant Bhopatkar (11).

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Is that Justice Strachey's dictum.]

Mrs. Besant.—Justice Batty's. At page 441* Mr. Justice Batty says that changes in policy and measures are liable to criticism and to criticise and urge objections to them is the special right of a free press in a free country. The British nation boasted, that it has a press; but the freedom of that press is confined to the expression of opinions so long as they do not reduce that to the injury of others including the State. It is only on that condition that it is possible to have a free press. See also Apurba Krishna Bose v. Emperor (12) and Joy Chandra Sarkar v. Emperor (13).

Now with regard to the "New India" which is now being attacked, it was specially established for certain definite reasons which are laid down as its policy.

One policy of the paper is to work for the obliteration of racial distinctions and to consolidate the various classes, which is essential to real progress.

It is one of the points against me that I incited one class against another.

Several articles are said to come under clause (c) of section 4, i.e., in bringing into hatred or contempt His Majesty or the Government established by law in British India, etc. There are other quotations. I am most loyal and devoted to the King-Emperor and I always advocated the maintenance of British connection. On the extracts collected by the learned Advocate-General, if the paper is destroyed which is teaching these doctrines in India, the Press Act is being used against its rightful purpose.

The next point is that I advocated violence. Several articles were brought under clause (a). These articles by themselves are sufficient to show that I was the enemy of anarchy. Advocacy of good feeling and deprecation of all differences between races and communities are the characteristics of the paper.

The Advocate-General, for the Crown.—The question is a simple one, though the petitioner has dealt with it with great skill. All those other questions which Mrs. Besant has dealt with have no bearing on the question. What is the right which Mrs. Besant has to come to your Lordships? The only application provided for by the Act is that which is contained in section 17. The application is limited to the ground mentioned in that section. It leaves to the Government the question of taking the initiative.

It does not enlarge the scope and authority of the High Court to go into other matters. Under section 22, every declaration of forfeiture purporting to be made—not made—will be conclusive evidence that forfeiture has taken place.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The factum, that there has been forfeiture, you cannot question.]

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—That is notice to the public that there has been forfeiture and it means that the public should not traffic in the paper. But there is nothing to show whether the forfeiture is legal or illegal.]

The Advocate-General.—Sections 17, 19 and 22 show that the external and conditions of forfeiture cannot be gone into. The validity or legality can be questioned on one ground only. If a forfeiture is made, the question is whether it was rightly made or wrongly made. The question is whether Government exercised the power rightly or wrongly, not whether the matters which enabled Government to take that step were there or not.

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—I do not think it is meant to apply to the High Court. The first portion of section 22 of the Act provides what happens if a paper is forfeited. The Police can seize a paper.]

The Advocate-General.—It is not limited to any particular purpose. The decision come to by the Calcutta High Court in Mahomed Ali v. Emperor (2) is right on the first part of the question. The decision is that the first part of the section bars interference by the High Court on the question of legality. Can any evidence be let in to show that a declaration has been wrongly made? Mrs. Besant says that there was no forfeiture under the Act.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—If there was no forfeiture, there would be no case before us.]

The Advocate-General.—The forfeiture has to be set aside on the ground that the words do not come within the section.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Forfeiture has in fact taken place, whether valid or not. There is no evidence of validity.]

The Advocate-General.—When there is a declaration of forfeiture, the order or notice containing it is not intended to be proof that Government forfeited under first part of section 22.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—There need not be actual seizure.]

The Advocate-General.—It is a simple declaration that a certain property is liable to be seized. Forfeiture itself determines the license which is given to the Press. The Press Act determines that license and it forfeits the deposit and forfeits the paper, but as a matter of fact that is really within section 4.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—If the first portion of section 22 meant that forfeiture is legal and that a declaration was made, what is our position? Is it to set aside a valid act?]

The Advocate-General.—The Court does not go into the question whether Government conformed to the requirements of the Act for the purpose of making a declaration of forfeiture, but so long as there is a declaration, it takes that declaration and the Act gives the Court power to go into the question of declaration on one ground. It is the power of declaration that gives right to the applicant to come to this Court.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The fact of forfeiture gives her right.]

The Advocate-General.—The power that is given to the High Court cannot be higher than the right given to the applicant under section 17.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—If you say that "all persons" include the High Court, the wording would be different.]

The Advocate-General.—The wording of the section makes it clear that it is not affirmative power given to the High Court.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Forfeiture under this section cannot be called in question except by the High Court?]

The Advocate-General.—Yes.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—How can a valid forfeiture be called into question?]

The Advocate-General.—The question is whether Government rightly decided that a particular article could be forfeited, being obnoxious to section 4 of the Act. The question whether a security was validly demanded by a Magistrate or whether a declaration was properly made—all those are not questions with which the High Court has anything to do.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Not upon external questions but upon the fact of forfeiture.]

The Advocate-General.—Section 22 recognises it and repeats it. If Mrs. Besant's contention were right, it would really mean that there was no forfeiture. Your Lordships will have then no power. The security does not purport to be under this Act, the forfeiture does not purport to be under this Act and consequently there can be no application before this Court. In order to give relief to the applicant, it is necessary to assume that all the steps have been rightly taken and the only thing for the High Court is to decide as to the correctness of the opinion of the Government that words are of the nature discussed in section 4.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Suppose there is an extreme case where a Government servant by some mistake put down the word Press Act. There would be no remedy. How do you get out of it?]

The Advocate-General.—It is not a declaration which purports to be done under this Act.

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—In that case you must put a narrower meaning to the word “purporting.”]

The Advocate-General.—What I submit is that “purporting” means in excess of the strict letter. It would include action beyond the strict letter of statutory authorities. In the case that your Lordships put there is no question of the Press Act.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Even then he would be deprived of his remedy. I do not think a Court can interfere in such a case but Government may interfere.]

The Advocate-General.—I cannot add very much to the exhaustive discussion contained in Mahomed Ali v. Emperor (2). The judgment consists of two parts of what may be called the policy of such an Act and naturally the learned Judges made observations in answer to arguments. The legal portion which is the second part of the judgment stands entirely apart and it is a weighty pronouncement.

There is a difference between section 4 and section 12. Section 12 applies to any newspaper wherever printed, in England or America etc. Jurisdiction is very closely confined by the terms of section 19 with which sections 17 and 22 must be read. To that extent it is a satisfactory state of affairs.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—It may be satisfactory if the Calcutta interpretation is correct. If that interpretation is not correct, where is the satisfaction? Then you speak of the Courts as powerless and helpless. If you are going to contend that section 4 is so widely worded that Courts are helpless; I do not know where there is satisfaction to anybody.]

The Advocate-General.—I have nothing to do with the policy of the Act.

Section 22 gives the only right to an applicant to have an opportunity of having the case decided on merits, whatever those merits are. The first part of section 3 refers to declarations of presses after the Press Act came into force. Old Press means the Press of which a declaration has already been made. [Reads sub-s. 3]. Where a proviso is regarded as an exception, it would affect my point.

Though clauses (1), (2) and (3) of section 3 are put separately, each clause is really a sub-section. The words ‘under this section’ in the end of the proviso refer to the whole clause (1). A proviso should be read as part of the sub-section. To take an illustration. Suppose the initial order demands a security of Rs. 500, and the Magistrate afterwards increases it to Rs. 1,500 or Rs. 2,000 or again reduces it to Rs. 500 in virtue of the power to cancel or vary ‘from time to time,’ the varying order is necessarily an order made under the proviso, which he is at liberty to cancel or vary.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Can you cancel or vary an order made under the first part of the proviso.]

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The object of the proviso is to dispense with security or vary or cancel an order made by the Magistrate.]

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—When the security is increased or reduced, you say it is varied. Is it not simply carrying out the sub-section itself?]

The Advocate-General.—I do not think it is. When a declaration is made and the Magistrate demands security of, say, Rs. 500, the first portion of that sub-section is exhausted. Then comes the proviso. Under the proviso, the Magistrate has the power to raise the security at his discretion. Suppose he raises it to Rs. 1,000 and subsequently, under the terms of the same proviso which empowers him to vary the order from time to time as occasion arises, he reduces the amount again, in this last order passed under the proviso or the first part of the section?

If I am right in my contention that the proviso is a part of this sub-section and it is shown conclusively by the fact that an order can be cancelled or varied ‘from time to time,’ it follows that an order dispensing with the deposit of security is an order under the sub-section. The term ‘from time to time’ is defined in the General Clauses Act.

The Advocate-General.—The proviso contains two powers, a power to vary or cancel an order made under the first paragraph and also a power to vary or cancel an order made under the sub-section. The term “from time to time” is defined in the General Clauses Act. The argument was that it could be used only once. My submission is that you can make "from time to time." It follows that an order dispensing with the deposit of security is an order within the sub-section.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The use of the word "or" makes some distinction.]

The Advocate-General.—At the time when a person makes a declaration the Magistrate if he thinks fit may dispense with security. Then it is an order which is made under the proviso or under the first portion of the section. When that is done then clearly he can cancel or vary any order under this sub-section. This power is a power which the Magistrate must have as occasion and necessity may arise from time to time. It is inconsistent with the words "any order" which will include any order requiring security or dispensing with security.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The Local Government is also given similar powers.]

The Advocate-General.—In the case of those who had existing rights under the prior law and invested money in the case, purchase of machinery and starting of a particular newspaper more protection is given than it is necessary in the case of persons who declare with eyes wide open after the passing of the Act.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—What is the greater protection given to an old press? So far as I can see, there is none.]

The Advocate-General.—Greater control is obtained in respect of presses for which declaration is made after the Press Act than before the Press Act. See Jalaluddin v. Emperor (14).

Mrs. Besant's next point was that the Magistrate did not exercise his judicial mind in calling upon her to furnish security. She did deposit security in pursuance of the order made by the Magistrate.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—We do not want to hear you on that point.]

The Advocate-General.—Her other point was that the whole Act was ultra vires. She said that section 4 was ultra vires. As regards that my submission is that this is itself an application under the Press Act. If section 17 depends for its application upon section 4 and if section 4 is ultra vires, then section 17 falls to the ground.

(14) 22 Ind. Cas. 721; 17 C. W. N. 1245; 15 Cr. L. J. 145.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—She also contends that section 22 is ultra vires.]

The Advocate-General.—Any enactment which is merely consequential upon the other must drop if the primary thing falls to the ground. Further there is no substance in the contention. The Moment case (Secretary of State v. Moment) (15) has nothing to do with this, because this power which is taken is a new power altogether. It is not a power which the East India Company had. It is not a question of right of suit.

The other point taken was that the enactment contravened the unwritten laws of the realm. In Amir Khan's case (6 Bengal Law Reports), which related to a deportation regulation it was decided that that legislation of the Governor-General in Council was not obnoxious to the powers vested in it by Parliament. It cannot be said that every Act which is against the common law of England at any time was law derogatory from the allegiance of the subject to the Crown depends. If that be the case, all Acts of Parliament would never have been made and it cannot be said that the Indian Legislature has less power.

It only means that these Legislatures should not take upon themselves to say that they need not give allegiance to the Crown, but allegiance only to themselves. If it has any meaning at all that is the only reasonable meaning. The only case is that of the Wahabi case. It was finally decided that such a legislation even regarding the liberty of a subject was perfectly valid. It cannot be said that allegiance of a subject to the Crown depends upon there being no laws which trench upon the privileges of subjects. That may be a valued constitution, but it is not every legislation of that kind which is obnoxious to the Government of India Act, and that is certainly not the basis of the Moment case (15). I submit that the basis of the argument regarding the Magna Charta and the Bill of Rights has nothing to do with the declaration under section 4, which requires to be set aside by a petition of appeal presented to this Court. If the declaration is a nullity there is no necessity to ask to set it aside. If section 4 which is the keystone of the whole Act goes, the Act goes. The petition under section 17 assumes that there has been a forfeiture under section 4 and there is really no substance in the contention.

The only other point is that the Government of India Act says that the Legislature has full power with respect to all persons and things. A printing press is a thing and prima facie there is absolute power in respect of it. You must show that an Act of the Imperial Parliament is infringed by this. It has not been pointed out that any Act of Parliament is infringed by this Act. The only way attempted was by showing that it withdraws the privileges of the subjects. Therefore, under the Government of India Act, it cannot be contended that this legislation of the Press Act is ultra vires. No doubt it deprives a person of the right of property in money or a press or a newspaper. But any one of these things cannot be said to be the possession of property. The possession of a printing press or forfeiture of security are things which ordinarily happen every day. Forfeiture may be imposed by statute but that cannot be said to infringe the allegiance of a subject to the Crown.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Her position is this; that it can be done by a sentence of an ordinary Court of Justice and not otherwise.]

The Advocate-General.—My submission is that the whole act of forfeiture apparently rests on the footing of the Act of 1867 as well as Act I of 1910. It is clear that printing presses are licensed. It is the determination of the license. I am not entering into the policy but I submit that but for the license there is no right to keep a press; it is not to be assumed as an inalienable right of a subject.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—It is more than a license. It means the forfeiting of the press.]

The Advocate-General.—Even in England a press will be kept only under a license. The conditions which are now imposed are far more serious. The Legislature took away property under the Estates Land Act from zamindars who happened to be possessed of kudivaram rights. The Limitation Act does it after 12 years. And there are so many Acts with similar provisions.

Another point which Mrs. Besant urged was that there must be a notice and that no notice was ever given. This itself is called a notice of forfeiture. The section does not require it. It has been so held in Karam Chand v. Emperor (16). Mrs. Besant next said that all issues of "New India", past and future, were forfeited. The language of the order merely follows the language of the section.

The Advocate-General.—Section 4 (1) does not say "all such copies" but only all copies of such newspaper. A newspaper is not a particular issue but the whole.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—From beginning to end? Look at section 20. Do you mean all the issues?]

The Advocate-General.—Yes, all copies.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—You do not mean that all the copies can be given in evidence. A newspaper means a copy of any issue or particular number.]

The Advocate-General.—Newspaper means the whole, the copy means an issue. What is forfeited is "newspaper," that is, "all such copies." It means all copies of "New India." I only state that it was within the language.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—It does not mean future copies?]

The Advocate-General.—No. A newspaper is apparently treated as an entire book.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—It means all copies of the paper up to the date of forfeiture?]

The Advocate-General.—Yes. It merely follows the language of section 4. What the meaning of the section is will be the meaning of the order of forfeiture too. The other point made was that this was an old press. I venture to draw a distinction between sub-section 1 and sub-section 2 of section 3. In this case, Mrs. Besant says, that she made a declaration. Section 5 (2) says that as often as a printing press changes hands, a fresh declaration shall be made. She was required to make a declaration by law in 1914 and she made a declaration, and the declaration of her predecessor could not continue in her favour.

ANNIE RESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS

The next question is with regard to the nature of the articles, whether they come within section 4. Your Lordships will find that this section has been the subject of construction. The judgment of the Calcutta High Court is a weighty and elaborate pronouncement on this question. There can be no doubt that the language employed is of the widest character and goes far beyond the criminal law. The whole attempt on the part of Mrs. Resant was to show that section 4 must be limited to offences of inciting to murder, etc., and that it must be read in the light of sections 124A and 153A of the Penal Code and must be read as supplementary to or auxiliary of the two sections. But nothing is made an offence here. There is no question of any person being charged with any offence or there being any prosecution. What is done is it is stated that a printing press should not be used for certain purposes in the opinion of the Government. The policy underlying the Act is that the Government is responsible for maintenance of peace and order in the Province. It can decide for itself as to whether a particular matter which is being published would be inconsistent with the maintenance of that law and order. Of course, it has got sources of information which are inaccessible to the public. Looking merely to the language of the section, the question is whether the words are not wide enough to hit the present case. The words are "whenever it appears to the Local Government that a newspaper is used for purposes which are likely or may have a tendency, directly or indirectly," etc.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—What do you say is the difference between "may have a tendency" and "has a tendency"?)

The Advocate-General.—It is only the possibility that is required. That is why Chief Justice Sir Lawrence Jenkins said to the Counsel for the petitioner: "What you have to prove is a most hopeless task."

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—What is the meaning of "may have a tendency"?)

The Advocate-General.—That it is possible in any way to have a tendency.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Goes beyond 'likely'?)

The Advocate-General.—Much beyond 'likely'. 'Or likely' has reference to probability, while

"May have a tendency" refers to the inherent quality independent of a particular case. If it is possible to have that effect, it is sufficient. If it appears to the Special Bench that the words, 'signs, etc.,' were not of the nature described in section 4, the Court is relieved from the task of saying whether particular words are likely or may have a tendency. The Court is only bound to enquire whether the words are likely or may have a tendency.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The power of the Government is wider than that of the Court?]

The Advocate-General.—Your Lordships can say in a particular case that it is not likely. It is the mere possibility that is contemplated.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—It must be according to the circumstances of the case read in the light of the context.]

The Advocate-General.—The question is not how a particular thing is written, the question is not how a person who sits calmly and reads an article with all the limitations and recollection of all that has been previously written understands it and the question is not what effect it has upon the mind of such a man so far as this Act is concerned. The question is how any reader of a newspaper who may be ignorant or biassed understands the writing.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Ignorant of the language?]

The Advocate-General.—No, then there is an end of it. It does not mean that he has read all the previous issues and will read subsequent issues. It has nothing to do with the impression produced upon the mind of any given person. 'May have a tendency' may be applicable even to one man.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—One selfish man?]

The Advocate-General.—The question is whether the language is possible of such construction, whether by implication, suggestion, allusion, metaphor, inference or otherwise.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—You keep the words "May have a tendency, directly or indirectly" and eliminate the whole of the rest. Will not those words be taken with the words retained?]

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

The Advocate-General.—The two parts refer to two different things. The words “directly or indirectly” refer to the effect of the tendency. The words “inference, suggestion, etc.”, refer to the quality and meaning of the words themselves. They are not identical. The language may be veiled in a variety of ways. It may be by innuendo.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—If the words “have that tendency directly or indirectly to incite murder, etc.” be retained, do not they by ‘inference, suggestion’, etc., come within those words. They do not extend the meaning; they all come within it.]

The Advocate-General.—The words “may have a tendency” have a wider scope. It is the possibility of tendency, namely, whether it tends in that direction, not whether it actually produces that effect or whether the Court is able to say that the actual result is likely to be produced. Can the Court say that it is impossible to produce it?

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Supposing it is said that the words read in their natural meaning in the circumstances have not the tendency.]

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—It is possible that some men may have a tendency.]

The Advocate-General.—The possibility does not include reasonableness.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—He must be a man who understands the language. He must be possessed of sufficient knowledge and not a man absolutely carried away by prejudice. If you have all those elements, does it not mean that he is a reasonable man?]

The Advocate-General.—It does not follow. People are intelligent, but they are not possessed of all these elements.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Good many men do not take newspapers. I do not mean that class, but I mean the men likely to be influenced by newspapers, and they also can come under the category of reasonable men.]

The Advocate-General.—It is practically upon a perusal of these passages Government gives its opinion.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—It seems to me that our jurisdiction is simple. We are not asked to say that the Government is wrong.]

The Advocate-General.—I have not said that your Lordships have no jurisdiction to say that the Government is wrong. The onus is on the applicant and the question that the Court has to decide is whether the words which are included in the order of forfeiture were not of the nature described. That is why I stated that “not of the nature” means “were not likely or would not have a tendency.” If your Lordships say that it could possibly have no tendency, the Court would have jurisdiction.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Read in its natural meaning it would not have a tendency? In any document we have to take the natural meaning. That criterion of judgment cannot be done away with.]

The Advocate-General.—What is the standard of result? How the consequence is to be measured is the only question that is in dispute.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—One must judge for oneself.]

The Advocate-General.—So far as the effect is concerned the opinion of the Court should be on the question whether there can be no possibility of such effect.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—You must construe the meaning of these words in the light of the context. As regards the tendency, it must be such as will be produced on men of average intelligence. Surely that must be the standard, whether you call it possibility or probability.]

The Advocate-General.—I do not mean what its effect would be on a lunatic or one who does not understand the language.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Nor on an abnormally excited person.]

The Advocate-General.—Disturbed conditions have to be considered. The question is not of average temperament or of finding a normal man and seeing what its effect would be on that person.

That would be so if the words were “are likely” and the other words were left out.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—If your interpretation is upheld no newspaper can exist.]

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—You seem to accept the position taken up by the Calcutta High Court?]

The Advocate-General.—Yes.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—If a newspaper incites criminal tribes or pickpockets

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

to offence it comes within the purview. If you condemn a criminal class or class carrying on a shameful profession it comes under the purview of the Act. Is that the argument that you are contending for?]

The Advocate-General.—The construction placed on the section by the Calcutta High Court.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—We are not compelled by the language. They may use any number of synonyms.]

The Advocate-General.—In an ordinary case of a construction of a document your Lordships may not say mere suggestion, allusion, etc.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Take libel for instance.]

The Advocate-General.—Attenuated effect is also the effect which is protected by this Act. Those are the various ways by which the language can be made to have effect but the effects themselves are described in the words "which are likely or may have a tendency." It is by reading both together. I say the variety of language is covered by expressions such as inference, suggestion, implication, metaphor, allusion and then the words directly or indirectly refer to the words. Then come the words "which are likely or may have a tendency." It means "may possibly have a tendency." Whether your Lordships go as far as the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court go or not is a different question. It cannot be said that the interpretation placed by the Calcutta High Court is wrong. These words are contrasted with the words "which are likely." The policy of the Act is to leave it to the Government to decide the exercise of the power, and the Court to say whether the power was validly exercised.

Explanation I deals with disaffection and explanation II deals with comments and expression of disapproval of Government measures without exciting disaffection or contempt or hatred against Government established by law in British India.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—That is bodily taken from the Penal Code. That involves an element of intent. Explanation II shows that the person charged must have a certain intention.]

The Advocate-General.—The person charged need not have intention. The keeper of the Press may be proceeded against.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Then how do you interpret explanation II?]

The Advocate-General.—Comments excite.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—It means that there must be some agent.]

The Advocate-General.—The intention may be in the writer or may not be. The editor may be innocent of what appears in the paper.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Comments attempt to excite. You mean the person making the comments?]

The Advocate-General.—Read in the light of the section that is all that it means. The Penal Code says: "whoever does a particular thing", but here it is not a person but the words that do it.

That must be found on the face of the article itself. This is one of the cases in which no question of intention or motive affects. A newspaper may be conducted by one person, matter may be printed by another and the keeper may be a third person. This does not deal with criminal intent but only whether a particular written matter is of a particular description and then there is a safeguard so far as comments are concerned.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Comments are taken from explanation 2 to section 124 A. "Comments" means whoever makes comments without exciting hatred or contempt.]

The Advocate-General.—The explanation itself does not show any intention. That is merely a description of a fair comment and has nothing to do with the intention of any particular person. Here the primary question of intention is absent.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Look at the explanation. The explanation implies intention.]

The Advocate-General.—That depends upon the governing words of the section. If they do not require intention, there is no difficulty in reading the explanation along with that.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Suppose the words have a particular tendency but the comments do not excite or attempt to excite. That would be quite enough.]

The Advocate-General.—If comments come within explanation 2 that will cover the explanation.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—When you give a proper meaning to the body of the section, when you come to explanation 2, it is exactly the same meaning as in the Penal

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

Code. Clause 1 of section 4 is much wider than the language in explanation II.]

The Advocate-General.—This does not import into the governing words of the section an intention which otherwise is not necessary.

Explanation II deals with comments relating to disapproval of measures of Government. Justice Strachey in Queen-Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (17) drew a distinction between disapproval of measures and attacking Government. To attack a measure is one thing and to attack a person is another thing. In the one case, you attribute motive, in the other hostility to people's welfare. That at once rouses antagonism to the Government. Whereas if you attack a particular measure only and do not attack a person, that is a different thing. Not only should it be a fair comment but it should be a comment that does not excite or attempt to excite hatred or contempt. If it fulfils all these things, it does not come under clause (c). There is a further point in Mahomed Ali v. Emperor (2). Clause (d) deals only with comments expressing disapproval of Government measures with a view to obtain alteration by lawful means. It leaves out those things which bring into hatred or contempt any class of British subjects. If you compare section 153A of the Penal Code with section 4 of the Press Act, the words are not identical. Bringing into hatred Indian Princes or a Magistrate and exciting hatred between one class and another class are all omitted there. The explanation is embodied and the words are not hatred between different classes of His Majesty's subjects. You can bring any class or section of His Majesty's subjects into hatred or contempt even in the estimation of one or two men.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—To bring into hatred or contempt does not mean in the estimation of one or two men. Does it not mean in the estimation of the public or a class of the public?]

The Advocate-General.—It has nothing to do with the public.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Can there be disaffection between one person and Government?]

The Advocate-General.—Yes, my Lord.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Is it a majority?

of the public or is it any proportion? It does not mean an isolated individual. It must mean bringing into disrepute.]

The Advocate-General.—The words are simply 'bring into hatred or contempt.' Ten persons or five or even two persons would be quite sufficient. It cannot be said that hatred or contempt means hatred or contempt of a considerable number of the public.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—It means that it creates an evil reputation.]

The Advocate-General.—The words are hatred or contempt. The persons against whom are not defined.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The Government has to try its best and we have got to try our best.]

The Advocate-General.—In speaking of the different classes of His Majesty's subjects, it does not say that it means different classes of His Majesty's subjects in India and elsewhere.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Suppose a newspaper produces evidence to show that there is no malicious intention.]

The Advocate-General.—I take my stand on the letter of the Act.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—I suppose a newspaper has to praise such acts. A newspaper ought to keep quiet. Then you are taking away the legitimate province of a newspaper.]

The Advocate-General.—I have nothing to do with that. The Calcutta case is a distinct authority on that position. There the question was upon the clause relating to hatred. Therefore all the more it was a considered opinion of the Court upon this very question. I submit that, as your Lordships have merely the words "hatred and contempt" and words "which are likely or may have a tendency," it is impossible to say whether it is applicable to an average man or the whole public or the majority of the public. The volume of hatred or contempt and the group within which these feelings are prompted are not within the competence. It is only the quality of the words that is intended. Section 153A says "between class and class." Here no such limitation is to be found.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Take all cases.]

The Advocate-General.—It is an argument against the Act.

ANNIE BESANT V. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Are we bound to impute such absurd intentions to the Legislature?]

The Advocate-General.—I have tried to construe the language of the statute.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—You must put a reasonable construction and give the words their natural meaning. I do not know why you should depart from that classical rule.]

The Advocate-General.—I am not referring to those decisions in Maxwell's.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—If general words are used, you must give them their ordinary meaning.]

The Advocate-General.—What is the reasonable construction that a layman can put? Every word must have its effect given. How can it be said that this Act contemplates crime, sentences and criminals? It has nothing to do with the question of crimes. That is the basis of the whole argument. It is to prevent to a certain extent crime and possibly other disturbances. It may be right or wrong. It is not identical with the Criminal Law. It is different and there is no necessity to import elements of criminal offence.

[AYLING, J.—It may be much wider than the Penal Code.]

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—In some respects it is not in the sense in which the Advocate-General regards it]

The Advocate-General.—To bring into hatred any class of His Majesty's subjects in British India does not mean between class and class.

[AYLING, J.—You apply the extreme meaning and you are paraphrasing the section of the Penal Code. The Calcutta Judges rushed to the extreme meaning. It would be better if you took the various articles and said if they fitted in with this section.]

The Advocate-General.—That is what I am going to do after finishing this part of the argument. Maintenance of law and order is not such a light thing. The policy of this legislation is altogether different.

[AYLING, J.—We speak of words as exciting. I do not know how we can speak of words as attempting to excite.]

The Advocate-General.—There is no difficulty in that. I do not think it can be regarded as bad English or unidiomatic English. It is the nature of the tendency that we have to look to. Explanation II does not enable importation into the section all the intention which the section does not require. There is no question of intention in the case of only one particular clause. The definition of "comment" was transferred here from the Penal Code, but it does not bring in the question of intention.

I am not in the position of the prosecution, and I submit that the applicant should have satisfied the Court that these articles did not come within the section. The purport of the articles was stated and she passed on. It was assumed by Mrs. Besant that it was for me to show how every article comes within the section and that she is in the position of a person defending herself against an attack. That is really not correct, because the onus is on her. I will read these extracts which she did not read. Whether it is a correspondent or the Editor or any other person that writes it does not matter. My whole position is that the way in which Anglo-Indians, bureaucracy and Government are all identified and treated as identical is objected to, and the whole attempt has been to attack these classes as well as the Government.

Before I go through the articles I think it will be convenient if I place my submission as to the exact scope of explanation II to section 4 of the Press Act. In going through the articles I am putting aside the Calcutta case and I am dealing with them irrespective of the powers which your Lordships have and the way in which those powers have to be exercised. Explanation II to section 4 says: "Comments expressing disapproval of the measures of the Government or administrative acts without exciting hatred or contempt do not come within the scope of the clauses." It must first be a comment and it should not express more than disapproval and the expression of such disapproval should not excite hatred or contempt or attempt to excite hatred. These three conditions are on the face of the explanation stated clearly. Assuming for a moment the question of intention is immaterial, my submission is after all what the words which are employed mean. It is the same thing as in the law of defamation. It is not necessary to show criminal intent. We must judge what is the intention of the writer by the words he used. That is the ordinary canon. I submit, therefore, that really the discussion of the intention ultimately resolves itself into merely a question as to what the meaning of the words used is. As regards this matter even under the Penal Code with respect to explanation II some principles have been laid down in the case of Queen-Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (17). That was before the amendment of the Penal Code which has made them stricter. It is said disloyalty is a general term comprehensive of bad feeling towards Government. The amount of intensity of ill-feeling is not required. It is absolutely immaterial whether the feelings of disaffection have been excited by the publication or not.

As regards explanation II to section 124A, the old explanation was very much wider than the present. If your Lordships come to the conclusion that the writings are not attacks on the measures of Government or against the Government and its essential characteristics, its motives or its feelings towards the people, then you must put aside the explanation altogether and apply the first clause of the section.

I shall now refer to Mayne's Criminal Law, page 95. The old explanation was that you can disapprove measure of Government with much severity, but still if it is compatible with a disposition to obey Government that will not come within the section. There must be no intention to subvert Government at all. It will be perfectly compatible with paying due obedience to Government. A person may be inimical to Government and still obey Government. The present law is that it is not necessary to enquire into the question whether the comments are of the character which are compatible with due obedience to Government. The only question is whether, if the articles are taken as a whole (putting aside the Calcutta case) it is possible for your Lordships to say that there was any possibility of exciting or attempting to excite hatred.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—In the one case the intention to subvert Government must be shown and in the other, you say if he does so intend and at the same time obeys Government, he is not liable.]

The Advocate-General.—Here disaffection is explained as disloyalty and all feelings of enmity, not the absence of affection. It means hatred, dislike or every form of ill-will towards Government. A person may bear ill-will to Government, but does not want to destroy it. It is quite possible for a person to entertain feelings of hatred against Government and still he might not wish to destroy it.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—If he tries to subvert Government by secret plotting?]

The Advocate-General.—He does not come within the explanation. What I venture to submit is the effect of the words. The difference between the Penal Code and the Press Act is very great. Taking the explanation and the general principle as they stand, the comment should be the expression of disapproval of Government measures. The strength or the severity of disapproval does not matter provided the language employed is incapable of exciting hatred or attempt to excite hatred or disaffection. I am using hatred in a compendious way. Hatred may be stronger and disaffection includes all categories of ill-feeling towards Government. That positive ill-feeling need not be of a high degree. It is sufficient if that positive ill-feeling is introduced. That is all that the Statute requires. I do not want to go into the English Law. The two systems, no doubt, differ. The only thing that Mrs. Besant can ask your Lordships to do is to ask you to apply the law of the land as it stands. Chief Justice Best said that the only question is what the words mean.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—If it is a question of intention, it can only be gathered from the words.]

The Advocate-General.—I go further and say that under the Press Act no intention is material.

[AYLING, J.—I quite appreciate that; you say where there is a comment on the measures of Government, intention is immaterial. That is a point on which I am not quite clear. The explanation takes out of clause (c) comments on the measures of Government made without exciting or attempting to excite hatred. Does not that imply the question of intention?]

The Advocate-General.—I shall draw your Lordships' attention to the language of the section—"Words which are likely or may have a tendency, directly or indirectly, to bring into hatred or contempt." It is words that bring a person or institution into hatred. Comments of a particular description are taken out of that: By virtue of the explanation, the intention is not a condition precedent, if the governing parts of the section do not require that intention.

[AYLING, J.—I do not follow you. Explanation II takes out particular classes of comments.]

The Advocate-General.—Comments made without bringing into hatred or contempt any measures of Government. I shall substitute for 'exciting' the words 'bringing into hatred or contempt.' It is merely a change of language.

[AYLING, J.—The section says 'tending to bring into hatred or contempt.']

The Advocate-General.—Only a word is used for a phrase. What is within the explanation must first fall within the clause in order to be taken out of it. Therefore, I would ask your Lordships to read the explanation along with the whole wording. What are the words: "words which may have a tendency to bring into hatred or contempt." But any comments which do not excite contempt and which are of a general character come within the explanation. If a man makes a comment with an innocent intention, action lies under the Act.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The Legislature might well have said that if a man makes a comment without intending anything wrong against Government measures, then the provisions of the Act need not apply.]

The Advocate-General.—The question is whether the keeper of a press who uses strong and violent languages escapes the Act when he says that he did not intend it.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—As far as the section is concerned there is no question of intention.]

The Advocate-General.—The same words are used in the explanation.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Can you with comments attempt to excite? Can words attempt to excite disaffection?]

[SESHAGIRI AYYAR, J.—Can you give us an instance where words attempt to excite disaffection?]

The Advocate-General.—Exciting is bringing into hatred or contempt Government established by law. I submit your Lordships will read this explanation as co-extensive with the original clause.]

[AYLING, J.—Has this explanation II been considered in any of the reported cases?]

The Advocate-General.—In Amar Singh v. Emperor (5) (the "Komagata Maru" case) the Judges follow the language of the section. My contention is that the explanation does not add anything to the section, and but for the explanation, it would come within clause (c).

As regards the words "Government established by law," I submit that the General Clauses Act says it is the persons charged with the Executive Administration of the Government.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—How is it possible to have Home Rule without changing the persons?]

The Advocate-General.—What I said is it is possible to advocate Home Rule but without doing any of the things which come within this clause.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The tendency of the articles comes to this—that the present machinery is not suitable to India. Therefore the machinery must be changed and it ought to be substituted by Home Rule.]

The Advocate-General.—To attack the existing political system is one thing and to paint the virtues of an ideal system of Government is another.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—If you want to understand the position, you must suppose that the attitude taken up by this article is that the present machinery of administration in India is not suitable and it ought to be substituted by a different machinery.]

The Advocate-General.—That is a very large question.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Do any of the articles tell us what is meant?]

The Advocate-General.—I am entirely in your Lordships' hands.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—I want to know how your admission affects it.]

The Advocate-General.—If you can advocate Home Rule without offending the Press Act, you are at liberty to do so, but it may not suit Mrs. Besant's views.

ANNIE BESANT V. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The drift of the articles is that the present machinery of Government established by law is not suitable. Therefore, it has to be substituted by a different machinery. That is what is called Home Rule. Five means are suggested to attain it. Would they come within the purview of the Act apart from the language used?]

The Advocate-General.—It does. Everything depends on the nature of the arguments advanced. Supposing a person brought himself under section 124A by advocating Home Rule, my admission cannot prevent him from being convicted. The question is not one of intention but is one regarding the meaning of the words used. Assuming intention is material, it is a question of the meaning of the words. It depends on the arguments put forth. The matter is explained in Regina v. Burn (18). Mayne's Criminal Law, page 300. My submission, therefore, is that it must be shown to be a comment on a measure of Government, or its administration. Home Rule is not a measure of Government or administrative action, therefore, you can advocate Home Rule. It does not require the aid of the explanation. Urging Home Rule cannot be said to be any comment expressing disapproval of Government measures.

[The Advocate-General then commented on the various articles, the subject of the charge.]

Mrs. Besant, in reply.—The Advocate-General desired to introduce into section 22 before "forfeiture" the word "legal." If it is said that it is a valid forfeiture, then it is necessary that the Court shall not go into the nature of the words described, because they were also included in the proceedings purporting to be made under the Act. If a legal procedure which may be entirely erroneous is shut out by section 22, then the enquiry into the nature of the words described which is ordered in section 19, would equally be shut out and it would not be possible even on the narrower ground which is contended for the Press Act, which allows and penalises the person referred to, and the words because the forfeiture being valid, it must be presumed that the words were such as were described by the Government order.

The Advocate-General's contention implied (18) 1 State Trials 1.

that the Court had power to set aside a valid forfeiture. It seems to reduce the whole argument of the Advocate-General to an absurdity. He said that a forfeiture is valid and must not be questioned. On the other hand, he has told us that the Court must set it aside.

Another point that was raised by the learned Counsel was that the powers of the High Court are as limited as the powers of the applicant, that the High Court had no more power to interfere with this supposed valid forfeiture than the applicant had under the Act. From that it clearly follows that, however gross a mistake may be, which happens in the course of the proceeding, the High Court has no power to intervene nor to protect any one who may be suffering from the consequences of that mistake. There is no wrong without a remedy, but that maxim will then certainly be traversed and proved to be inaccurate.

He argued that the sub-section includes the proviso. A proviso has never been held to be a part of a clause which it qualifies; see the very strong views put forward in the House of Lords by Lord Herschell, Lord Watson and Lord Halsbury.

There is one other point about the statute with which I shall deal because of a curious result in connection with section 8. There are two provisos. If the proviso to section 3 is to be read as part of section 3 (1), then it would imply that provisos 1 and 2 must also be read as part of section 8. That would be a very inconvenient argument when pressed to a point. But what puzzles me still more was a statement made by the learned Advocate-General that exceptions and explanations and provisos were apparently different words for the same thing. The point was introduced in dealing with the explanations to section 4 and they were said of the provisos. I propose to deal with it fully when I come to explanations. Proviso is not explanation and proviso to section 3 cannot be read as explanation to the section and to make such a change would make all reasonable construction impossible.

I was using the Moment case (15) in order to show that a section of the statute might be declared ultra vires, even although the whole statute might not reasonably be challenged under the present conditions of the Special Bench. The whole of my argument turned on the question of unwritten law and constitution. I traced down these words from the first Act as they occurred in the Act of 1813 and traced them to William IV and down to the India Councils Act of 1861, but only in order to show that the Act of 1915 was simply repeating the words that formed part of previous legislation for a long time and the whole argument depends on the validity of those words. Another argument was put by the learned Advocate-General with regard to forfeiture and allegiance. I feel a little doubtful whether the Calcutta Judge considered the whole constitutional law of the country when he stated that no failure on the part of the Sovereign could absolve a subject from his allegiance. It has been held over and over again and emphasised by the facts of history that allegiance to the King is a corollary to protection by the Sovereign. Sovereign and subject are two people tied together by protection and on the valued protection of the Sovereign must depend the allegiance of the subject. That is most certainly the constitutional law of England, as laid down by the greatest of our constitutional lawyers, and it may be within your Lordships' memory that Mr. Justice Norman quoted one or two appeals pointing out that if it were denied, we were denying the right of self-defence to the subject and that it would be contrary to law and justice. It seems to me then that the words read are more of the nature of a sentence thrown out without very careful thinking, than having to do with the main subject which was before the Court. I admit that the question of allegiance was introduced as a substantial part of that question, and yet it was dealt with so lightly by his Lordship and brushed aside as a view impossible for him to accept, giving one the idea that he was swayed in that by the law that he was administering, more than by the political opinions which he held, for it is certain that there are people of political opinions in England who would be shocked that the King could forfeit the allegiance of his subject. English history has shown that such a forfeit is possible and the most important point turned on that very question. It was because of forfeiture and fines levied by the power of the Crown without the consent of a Court of Justice that there were great struggles in the 7th century in England, from the time of Henry VIII onwards in the constitution because of the illegal exactions by the Crown, right down to the time of Charles when the struggle went on without a break.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—We are only to construe those words in the Government of India Act. The question of allegiance of the subject to the Sovereign has hardly any bearing.]

Mrs. Besant.—The Petition of Rights presented for the disregard of which James II was driven away and the Bill of Rights passed in Parliament, which is one of the main points of the grievances of a subject, led to the exile of James and recognition of the claim of a subject that he should not be deprived of any part of his property.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The question is what bearing it has on unwritten law. It is common law.]

Mrs. Besant.—In the Magna Charta it is laid down that we have unwritten laws. Those are fundamental laws of the King but I would not venture to urge that. I confine myself to this one point, the illegality of taking a subject's property where a Court of law has not definitely given the claim to that property to the Crown. I grant that any forfeiture or fine inflicted by a Court of Law does not and ought never to touch the allegiance of a subject. Where the law speaks I do not for a moment pretend that any law-abiding subject has any complaint. If the law has spoken, it should be accepted, no matter how hard it may press. So long as a man feels himself wronged and so long as opportunity is given to go to higher and higher Courts, so long a man has a right to resist.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Yet a man commits a crime and the Police arrests him. In certain cases a certain procedure is necessary to be followed.]

Mrs. Besant.—In all those cases there is always an opening. That is not on all fours with my case. Where a man is accused of crime and is arrested by the Police, Habeas Corpus, though asked, will be refused. Certain offences are non-bailable by law,

ANNIE BESANT V. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Take the case of a man who absconds. His property is attached and is not made over to him until he surrenders to the Court.]

Mrs. Besant.—There is a difference, my Lord, between forfeiture and attachment.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Government has a right to forfeit a man's property, if he absconds. The property is restored to him when he is found. That is exactly like this.]

Mrs. Besant.—Government had apparently a right to seize and hold property for a time. But I was not aware except in some cases of revenue that special power was given to seize and keep property.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The forfeiture is operative until it is set aside. There is a right of appeal to the Court.]

Mrs. Besant.—In England even in the question of taxes, a competent Court has to decide before a forcible seizure of property has to be made. In the Revenue Laws here, there are certain exceptions which do not come in the ordinary Courts. If it were that the ordinary Courts of Law here permit such forfeitures, I am afraid that I should say that those laws were made without proper consideration and would be broken if appeal were made to higher authority as in England. There was one word which struck me from a remark of Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar in regard to absconding persons. Is it not a different case, a man seeking to evade a process of law? He does not submit himself to a trial which he has a right to demand. There seems to be very great difference between a man who remains with personal property within the area where the Court exercises the jurisdiction and a person who runs away and evades the process of law to which he should subject himself. If a man conceals his person from due process of law, I do not know if such a man has not lost his right to property.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The Police arrest such people and deprive them of the liberty before they are found guilty.]

Mrs. Besant.—Even those men can be bailed out except for certain offences.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—In non-bailable offences a man is arrested by the executive authority first and tried afterwards.]

Mrs. Besant.—That is the case when a man runs away. Even then the liberty of the person is strained. There are certain limits of other liberties which I have not dealt with at all. I do not plead they are questions relating to the liberty of the press, because I did not feel I could bring it under the unwritten law. While that was a tempting side on my case, it could not bring it under that particular clause. On that very question I heard with great surprise a statement from the Advocate-General that except with a license there is no right to keep a press here at all. With all submission it is an entire misreading of the Act. There is no license under the Act of 1867.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The Advocate-General probably meant declaration.]

Mrs. Besant.—I do not know, my Lord. The Advocate-General said that we are given license and that we have no right to keep a press without a license. He went on to say that every press in England is licensed.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—He may be perfectly wrong.]

Mrs. Besant.—He is absolutely wrong. In the year 1878 no paper could be printed without security, which is analogous to the condition here. But that limit on the liberty of the press was swept away in 1878 in a famous case, in which Charles Bradlaugh was concerned and he refused to give security. Liberty of unlicensed printing was ours for a long time and the very word licensing is rather held in disrepute and disliked so that some pains were taken to argue that this particular Act did not impose a license. It is perhaps that which brought to my mind the error in putting it. So far as the press of India is concerned it is an unlicensed press.

The next point is the action of the Court in the famous case of Ameer Khan. That is with regard to the difficulty the Judges felt there with the issue of the Habeas Corpus. I feel sure that this High Court will declare that the forfeiture to recognize though the Government may no sion. and give affect to the Court's decision.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—If the forfeiture is wrong, there need be no anxiety as to the result.]

Mrs. Besant.—The learned Advocate-

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

General contended that the order of forfeiture followed the language of the section. The Government may know such limitations in its order. It is said that all copies of "New India" wherever found should be forfeited without any limitation and without confining itself to the words of the section. Hence I submit that the words of the order themselves were wrong. The only point to which I intend to invite your Lordships' attention is the question of the proviso read along with section 8 with its two provisos. If the proviso to section 3 is read in the sense in which the Advocate-General read it, then it must also be in a similar way read as regards section 8. According to the Advocate-General the proviso takes away the protection given and would enable the Magistrate to impose security, although he has specially exempted once by proviso 1. On that general point I venture to suggest that the ordinary discretion of the Court is not taken away, because the effect may be proved in the substance of the proceedings. I would invite your Lordships' attention to the curious omission of the word 'tendency' from sections 17 and 19. In section 14 tendency as well as the nature of the words are brought in. But both in sections 17 and 19 that is omitted. The Court is directed to set aside the order of forfeiture, if the nature of the words is not such as is described in section 4 and similarly in section 17 under which I have presented my petition, nothing is said as to tendency.

With regard to the words 'hatred and contempt' on which so much stress was laid in regard to these extracts the Legislature is endeavouring to take certain acts out of the section by means of the explanation what it is unable to do by words. The Legislature put in the explanation in order to prevent the Press Act from being resorted to in cases to which it is not really intended to apply. The general position and tendency of the articles and the nature of the articles, whether the writer was wholly loyal, honest and straightforward, are all to be taken into consideration. This explanation was intended to protect the honest editor and bring to book a man who in carefully chosen words is trying to insinuate disloyalty. In this connection I refer your Lordships to the same volume 22 Bombay, the case of Queen-Empress v. Ramchandra Narayan (19), which was heard by a Full Bench. Three Judges concurred as to what is the real meaning of the words 'hatred and contempt.' Farran, C. J., observed that disapprobation is not incompatible with thorough loyalty, provided that it is compatible with a disposition to obey Government and to support its lawful authority against attempts to resist or subvert it. That view was also concurred in by Parsons, J., at page 161 and Ranade, J., also agreed in that view.

The explanation deals with comments on measures of Government, on the administration of Government and on actions of the Government. So that all comments upon Government would be covered by the explanation. Outside Government measures anything said must be judged on the merits, whether the writing is right or wrong. The learned Advocate-General said that intention was immaterial. If a man does a thing, he must have the intention to do it. In the main part of section 4 we have it stated that if a Press is used for the purpose of so and so, then it certainly implies an intention on the part of the keeper or the editor of the Press; and similarly where a tendency comes in, the writer must be held to have an intention to do that towards which his words tend; and so I submit that under section 4 intention is a necessary ingredient of the offence. There it comes under sections 124A and 153A. What I meant was that India should be within the Empire and be connected with Britain, but that we may criticise the views of the persons composing the Government for the time being.

I took up this newspaper two years ago at the age of 67. A woman of that age does not take up a paper simply as an amusement to play with. I took it up with the one object of helping India to gain Home Rule and nothing except that is the object of the paper. All that conduces to that I try to use. All that is against it I leave on one side. When I find that Government is doing things—bureaucracy or autocracy—which undermine the supremacy of the Crown and which tend to lessen the allegiance of the people to the British Empire, I think it then my duty as a publicist to draw attention to the facts in order that they may be changed, and in that I am acting under the explanation of the Penal Code. Drawing attention to facts which cause hatred and contempt is a legitimate thing to do and in every case where I have spoken against the bureaucracy and autocracy, I have spoken under the belief that their action tends to make Indians despair of law-abiding and constitutional means and drives them to that secret conspiracy which finally seems their only hope. I believe that by that policy, my Lords, I have rendered a great service to the Empire. I believe that during this terrible time of War the fact that I have spoken out openly has saved the British connection, and that, if it were not for those who are following this policy, there would be a serious danger to the British connection with India, for it is written, and written truly, that the tears of the weak undermine the throne of Kings. My Lords, my devotion to the King-Emperor is very deep and strong. I believe that the English connection is beneficial to India. I have never pleaded independence which would be a blunder and would lead to endless difficulties and wars. So I have taken up this paper in my old age and shall continue it as long as the law permits me to do it. But if the law should say that the second security is forfeited, that I must not criticise, that I must go along the lines of Mahomed Ali v. Emperor (2) and that we must accept that as the rule of journalism in this country, then I drop journalism. It has no interest for a woman like me and I simply throw the thing away and go to the platform.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—What is the answer to the Advocate-General that it is possible to advocate Home Rule without bringing into hatred or attempt Government established by law in British India?]

Mrs. Besant.—My answer to that would be that there is nothing to bring Government here into hatred and contempt and I do not know of any way of advocating it except on the lines I have adopted. For thirty years it has been asked for by the Congress without any result.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—You say that Government really means the supremacy of the British Crown?]

Mrs. Besant.—Yes, and the connection.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Supposing it means also the Government of India as constituted by law?]

Mrs. Besant.—I should fall back on the statement that the real Government of India is the British Cabinet which is represented by the Government of India, and it is ultimately the British Cabinet that is the Government of India.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—I am not expressing any opinion. But supposing the Government means the Madras Government or Bombay Government, then in that case, supposing in order to push forward the cause of Home Rule, you wanted to show that the Government as now established are unfavourable or are not interested in the people and it creates hatred against the Government?]

Mrs. Besant.—If hatred and contempt are to be construed as they were construed in Mahomed Ali v. Emperor (2), I believe my case would be, alluding to the Madras Government, that I could not prove that I have written nothing. I confess that that task is impossible and I have not tried to do it. I have attacked the bureaucracy because I believe it to be injurious to the Crown. I have attacked these actions of Government because they have turned the hearts of the people against the Crown and, therefore, I am not exciting the kind of hatred and contempt which would bring me within the Act reasonably construed, but I am exciting a feeling which would make people think that there is still a hope for us in England and that these actions are only a few of the kind which we can get rid of by getting a change. I, therefore, come within the explanation of the Act.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—If you disapprove of the present form of Government you would not come within the mischief of the Act?]

Mrs. Besant.—I think not. It distinctly says that disapprobation of measures is admissible and is covered by the explanation.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—That is as regards comments on certain measures.]

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

Mrs. Besant.—Administration, actions and everything—comments expressing disapproval of measures or other actions of Government. Every comment is under the protection of that clause. My contention is that I did not excite hatred and contempt. I excite a desire for change, an effort for change, but always on constitutional and law-abiding lines, in order that it may lead to no disturbance. I am not even advocating passive resistance. If this and the other securities are forfeited, I must turn to the platform. For that would be my only resource, holding it to be my duty to urge Home Rule for the safety of the Empire. If, however, the decision goes that the paper shall not be destroyed, even if your Lordships think that even if one or two comments are harsher, it would be fair for Government to warn and that, therefore, you will not allow the whole paper to be destroyed because of the two or three unwise or hysterical remarks, then it seems to me that the whole press of India will be relieved by your Lordships' decision. Since this happened, the whole of the press has been writing against the Press Act. There is now an agitation going on in the whole country, because it has been so misused in this case as to bring within its net a paper which should never have been touched. Seldom, I venture to say, has a Court had to sit to decide an issue more important than the present, for on your decision, my Lords, the whole liberty of the press of India depends. If your Lordships re-affirm the Calcutta decision, as the learned Advocate-General has practically asked you to do, it is the death of journalism in India. The only remedy then will be in the Parliament, and an agitation which at the present time is most undesirable. I am not pleading that, if your Lordships think it right, you should not give such a decision, because I have not forgotten that Judge who in Wilke's case said that God forbid the Courts of Justice in England should ever cease to declare the law because of the danger of agitation. That I feel must guide your Lordships, as it guides the Courts of Justice in England. That decision was given, although it was a triumph of agitation, and against the action of the High Court of Parliament. I am told that this is not a criminal procedure, yet I am debarred from the Privy Council unless I point out, as I hope to do on Friday next, if the judgment go against me, that the forfeiting section is ultra vires. But I do submit that the whole Indian Press will be muzzled and the injury would be added that practically it will tell India that there is no hope for her in constitutional and law-abiding agitation. There is only one remedy for India, which would be to try and break the British connection. Because I feel that that connection is necessary not only for India but for England and for the Empire at large, and because I believe breaking off connection with Britain would mean invasions from other countries and quarrels here, I do appeal to your Lordships to construe the Act which is tyrannical in its essence if applied in the strictest sense as the Calcutta High Court decided, and construe it in a way which will rejoice the heart of every loyal and patriotic newspaper here in India and give to India that freedom of discussion without which no nation can be peaceful and without which it can never become truly great.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—This is an application under section 17 of the Indian Press Act of 1910 by Mrs. Annie Besant, the keeper and printer of the "New India" Printing Works, and the Editor of the newspaper, "New India." The applicant seeks to have set aside an order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Madras, dated 22nd May 1916, requiring her to deposit security of Rs. 2,000 under section 3 (1) of the Act an order of the Governor-in-Council, dated 25th August 1916, declaring under section 4 (1) the security so deposited and all copies of "New India" wherever found to be forfeited to His Majesty. No copies of "New India," it may be mentioned, have actually been seized.

The order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate is attacked, firstly, on the ground that inasmuch as the press and the newspaper in question were in existence before the passing of the Press Act under the names and styles respectively of 'The Standard Press' and 'The Madras Standard,' the fact that the applicant, having purchased the said press, made a declaration before the Magistrate with respect thereto on the 2nd December 1914, under section 4 of the Press and Registration of Books Act of 1867, in the new name of the "New India Printing Works" did not bring this press under the operation of section 3 (1) of the Press Act. But clearly the provisions of the Act are applicable to all printing presses: under section 3 (1) the Magistrate is to take security from any person who makes a declaration before him with respect to any printing press, apart from any question whether it was set up before or after the Act, and by sub section 2 the Local Government may in certain circumstances require the keeper of a press in respect of which a declaration was made before the commencement of the Act of 1910 to deposit security. Section 4 of the Press and Registration of Books Act of 1867 prohibits any person to keep a printing press without making a declaration to the effect that he has a press for printing purposes at a particular address, which he is bound to disclose. It is directed against the keepers of printing presses for the time being: so with every change of hands, a fresh declaration becomes necessary. In this way, the "New India" Printing Works became amenable to the action of the Chief Presidency Magistrate under section 3 (1), when as required by the law a fresh declaration was made before him by the applicant. I may mention that a certified copy of a judgment of the Patna High Court, dated 5th June 1916, in Criminal Revision No. 93 of 1916, was cited before us in support of the applicant's contention, but it is sufficient to say that I have not been able to find out what exactly was decided in that case.

The Chief Presidency Magistrate, however, chose to dispense with the deposit of security at the time the applicant made the declaration. And it is thereupon argued that he became functus officio so far as the press was concerned and was not competent to pass his subsequent order of 22nd May 1916. By section 3 (1), all keepers of printing presses are required to deposit security at the time of making the required declaration to such an amount, not exceeding Rs. 2,000, as the Magistrate may fix. Then comes the proviso, which says: "Provided that the Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, for special reasons to be recorded by him, dispense with the deposit of any security or may from time to time cancel or vary any order under this sub-section." It is contended by the learned Advocate-General on behalf of the Crown that the words "to cancel or vary any order under this sub-section" gives the Magistrate the power to cancel his order dispensing with security, although he derived authority to pass that order from the proviso itself. But it seems to me that the use of the words "or may" before the words "cancel or vary any order under this sub-section" goes to negative such a construction: it indicates that an order dispensing with the deposit of security is not included in the words "Any order within this sub-section."

It is true in one sense that a proviso is part of the section to which it is attached. But in ordinary legal parlance a proviso is to be distinguished from the enactment, to which it is generally appended either for the purpose of explaining what particular matters are not within the meaning of the enactment [see West Derby Union v. Metropolitan Life Assurance Society (20)], or for providing exceptions and qualifications to the enactment or for other similar purposes. The proviso is something subordinate to the main clause and the general rule is that what is contained in the proviso is not to be imported by implication into the clause.

When a reference is made in the proviso to what is enacted by the section or sub-section to which it is appended, one would not ordinarily read it, unless so compelled, to include anything contained in the proviso itself. Here the main purpose of the enactment is to authorise the Magistrate to fix the amount of security and it is to enable him to cancel or vary this order from time to time that he is given the power under the latter part of the proviso.

It was argued that the Legislature could not have intended that if the Magistrate once dispensed with the deposit of security, he should have no further power to require security if he so chose. But it must be remembered that he is to dispense with security only for special reasons which have to be recorded by him and it is not unlikely that the Legislature thought that where such reasons existed, the particular keeper of the press who was so exempted should not again be called upon to furnish security.

However that may be, I do not feel called upon to put any construction on an enactment such as this which would tend to extend its scope beyond what is warranted by the natural meaning of the words used by the Legislature. Section 3 (1) imposes a serious disability on persons desiring to keep printing presses. It must have the effect of hampering the carrying on of what is ordinarily not only a perfectly legitimate business, but one which has played such an important part in the diffusion of knowledge and progress of civilization.

Upon this application, however, it is not open to us to set aside the order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate. Whether section 22 of this Act bars all interference on our part or not, is a question which will have to be considered in connection with another application which will be dealt with later. But in any case, there is no provision in the Press Act of 1910, under which this application is made, which enables us to deal with the order of the Magistrate purporting to be made under section 3 (1).

As for the order of forfeiture, section 22 read with sections 17 and 19 debars us from interfering with it except on the ground, namely, that the extracts in question are not of the nature described in sub-section (1) to section 4. This is quite clear.

Before dealing with the application on the merits, I should mention that the applicant repeatedly complained to us that the Government before passing the order of forfeiture did not give her sufficient intimation as to the kind of matters published in the paper which they regarded as objectionable nor did they call upon her to show cause why the security deposited by her should not be forfeited.

The Act imposes no duty upon the Government to issue any warning or to ask for any explanation before taking action. There may be force in Mrs. Besant's plea that if she knew what it was in the policy of "New India" or in the nature of the matters published in it to which the Government had objection, she would have been in a position to take steps to prevent anything appearing in the paper which might reasonably be considered to be offensive. She has told us that there was only one letter which appeared in "New India" written by an Englishman on the subject of Indian Servants to which the Government took exception but that, as a matter of fact, the editorial note had made it clear that the views of the writer found no sympathy with the editor. She says she received no other warning of Government disapprobation. It seems quite possible, judging from Mrs. Besant's attitude before us, that if her attention had been properly drawn in time, greater check would have been exercised over the language used in some of the letters and articles published in "New India." But that is a matter which the Government can and legitimately take into account; it can in no way influence our judgment on the questions for decision.

The scope of section 4 was considered by the Calcutta High Court in the matter of a petition of Mahomed Ali v. Emperor (2) and the learned Advocate-General has supported the interpretation put upon it by Chief Justice Jenkins and the other learned Judges of that Court. That, generally speaking, the terms of the section are extremely wide and most comprehensive cannot be doubted. They vest the Local Government with a discretion so large and unfettered that the keeping of printing presses and the publication of newspapers become an extremely hazardous undertaking in the country. A press may be devoted to the printing of most useful and meritorious literature or other publications of an entirely innocent and non-controversial nature, yet it will be liable to forfeiture if any matters printed in such press are considered by the Government to be objectionable within the meaning of the Act. It may be doubted if it is possible for the keeper of any printing press in the country to maintain such an efficient expert supervision over matters that are printed as to detect everything that might be regarded to fall within the "widespread net" of section 4.

Similarly a newspaper may be consistently staunch in its loyalty to the Government, its general policy may be above all reproach, the sincerity and bona fides of the intention of the editor may not be liable to question, but if any letters or other writings are let in, may be through carelessness, which come within the scope of any of the clauses to section 4, the Government may at once without any trial or even a warning forfeit the security, and in this way ultimately put an end to the newspaper itself. That the influence of a periodical on public life of the country is on the whole decidedly beneficial need be no bar to the Government's action. The Local Government, it may be assumed, will not indiscriminately exercise the power which it possesses under this enactment, but the vesting of such unlimited power in the Executive Government is undoubtedly a serious encroachment on the freedom which the Press in India enjoyed before the passing of the Act.

The Act, as is well known, was passed in order to counteract the manifold ingenious devices adopted by the anarchists of Bengal for carrying out their propaganda. How far it has been instrumental in accomplishing that object is not a question with which we are concerned; nor are we concerned with the question whether the Legislature was justified in applying such a drastic press law to the whole of India, while the evil sought to be met was mainly connected with the activities of a band of young revolutionaries in one part of the country.

Mrs. Annie Besant has argued having regard to the nature of the enactment that so far at least as it affects European British subjects, section 4 of the Act is ultra vires of the powers of the Indian Legislature. The Indian Legislative Council is a subordinate Legislature exercising only a delegated authority and section 65 (2) of the Government of India Act, which lays down that "the Governor-General in Legislative Council has not power to make any law affecting...any part of the unwritten laws or constitution of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland whereon may depend in any degree the allegiance of any person to the Crown of the United Kingdom." The contention is this: in the words of Sir William Blackstone, "allegiance is the tie which binds the subject to the King in return for the protection which the King affords to the subject," and to use the language of Bracton "the King is under the law, for the law makes the King." What is meant by allegiance is more fully explained by Norman, J., in In the matter of Ameer Khan (8), "It is the true and faithful obedience of the subject to the Sovereign. Everyone born within the dominions of the King of England, whether in England or in the Colonies or dependencies, being under the protection, therefore, according to our common law, owes allegiance to the King."

By "the unwritten laws" are meant, generally speaking, the laws recognising the fundamental right of the subject to enjoyment of personal freedom and property of which he could not be deprived except by a sentence of the Court of Law. They were embodied in England in the Great Charter and the Petition of Rights which, as pointed out by Norman, J., "are for the most part declarations of what the existing law was, not enactments of any new law." That learned Judge also observes that the infraction of such laws may be carried to such an extent as to give rise to the right of self-defence on the part of the subject, a right which, says Sir Michael Foster, "the law of nature giveth and no law of society hath taken away." Then further on: "It would be strange indeed if a great popular assembly like the Parliament of England had put into the power of a Legislature which has not, and in the nature of things could not have, any representative character, the power of abrogating or tampering with such fundamental laws." Norman, J., however, refused to issue a writ of Habeas Corpus to the jailor who had charge of the body of Ameer Khan who had been imprisoned under Regulation III of 1818, holding that its validity had been duly recognised by the Legislature, and that even if the writ was issued, it would be infructuous, as the jailor acting under the warrant of the Governor-General-in-Council was not bound to obey the writ.

The decision of Norman, J., was upheld in appeal by Phear and Markby, JJ.*; but the learned Advocate-General has relied upon the judgments in appeal as modifying the propositions cited from Norman, J.'s judgment. Phear, J., says (page 477): "But I think it right to say that in my judgment the words 'whereon may depend, etc.' do not refer to any assumed conditions precedent to be performed by or on behalf of the Crown as necessary to found the allegiance of the subject, but to laws or principles which prescribe the nature of the allegiance, viz., of the relations between the Crown on the one hand and the inhabitants of particular provinces, or particular classes of the community, on the other; and obviously such laws and principles as these are not touched by the local Acts which are impeached before us." Markby, J., at page 482 observes: "The restriction, which is the foundation of the second objection to the validity of the Act, is certainly couched in language to the last degree vague and obscure...I wholly repudiate the doctrine contended for, that the allegiance of a subject to his Sovereign can by any possibility be legally affected by the mere withdrawal from the subject of any right, privilege, or immunity whatsoever. I think the notion of reciprocity expressed in the maxim protectio trahit subjectionem, et subjectio protectionem, upon which this argument depends, is one which is wholly inadmissible in any legal consideration. It appears to me that if we are to admit such a doctrine as this we must admit it, not only with regard to Acts of the Indian Legislature, but to Acts of the English Parliament."

As to this last observation I may point out with great respect that there is a fundamental difference between the Legislative powers of the Imperial Parliament which, according to the theory of the English constitution, can enact any laws it chooses and the authority of the Indian Legislature which is purely derivative and subordinate. Any enactment of the latter in excess of its delegated powers or in violation of the limitations imposed by the Imperial Parliament is null and void. This doctrine was recently expressed in very clear terms by the Judicial Committee in the famous Moment case [Secretary of State v. Moment (15)] the judgment in which was delivered by Lord Haldane. In that case it was held that section 41 (b) of the Act of 1891, by which it was sought to debar a Civil Court from entertaining a claim against the Government to any right over land, was ultra vires of the powers of the Indian Legislature as contravening the provisions of section 65 of the Government of India Act of 1858 (corresponding to section 32 of the Government of India Act of 1915). Lord Haldane observed (page 401*): "It appears, judging from the language employed, to have been inserted for the purpose of making it clear that the subject was to have the right of so suing and was to retain that right in the future, or at least until the British Parliament should take it away. It may well be that the Indian Government can legislate validly about the formalities of procedure so long as they preserve the substantial right of the subject to sue the Government in the Civil Courts like any other defendant, and do not violate the fundamental principle that the Secretary of State, even as representing the Crown, is to be in no position different from that of the old East India Company. But the question before their Lordships is not one of procedure but whether the Government of India can by legislation take away the right of the subject to proceed against it in a Civil Court in a case involving a right over land. Their Lordships have come to the clear conclusion that the language of section 65 of the Act of 1858 renders such legislation ultra vires."

The whole question, therefore, here is, what is the meaning of the words in section 65 (2) of the Government of India Act, which has been cited above. Is it as understood by Norman, J., or as suggested by Phear and Markby, JJ.? The question is one of great importance and not free from difficulty and I do not wish to express any positive opinion on it. It is neither necessary to do so to decide the question involved in this application, nor am I satisfied that it has been fully discussed. But as at present advised, it seems to me that the construction put upon the enactment by Norman, J., is what is really required by the plain meaning of the words used. And I find no difficulty in conceiving that the Imperial Parliament, with all its great traditions in upholding the cause of liberty, should have been unwilling to grant to the Indian Legislature, constituted as it is, any legislative powers which would enable the Government of India to encroach upon those fundamental rights of the people the violation of which, especially by a foreign Government, is so calculated to lead to a disturbance of that peace in the realm which it is the highest concern of the Crown always to assure. That the provision of section 43 of 3 and 4 William IV, Chapter 85, is not to be regarded as of no practical value and importance or as something quite obsolete is made clear by its repetition in identical language in section 65 of the Government of India Act of 1915.

The next question in this connection is whether the enactment in section 4 of the Press Act is such as can be said to be in violation of section 65 (2). It is argued by the applicant that the forfeiture of security by the Government under the provisions of section 4 without trial in the ordinary Courts of Law is repugnant to a subject's right to hold and enjoy property, unless it is forfeited to the Crown after due trial for any offence or charge proved in due course of law. The Government acting under section 4 need not hear the person whose property it seizes, need not take any evidence nor is it bound to follow any kind of procedure which would ensure that the forfeiture was made after proper deliberation with due regard to the rights of the parties concerned and in the true interests of the State. The right of appeal to the High Court under the provisions of sections 17 and 19 does not make any substantial difference, as the onus is cast upon the owner of the confiscated property to prove that the order of forfeiture was wrong and that right must, in the circumstances, be treated as more or less illusory.

The contention of the Advocate-General in answer to this reasoning is that there are numerous instances in which personal freedom of the subject is interfered with because of the exigencies of good government. For instance, persons suspected of crimes are daily arrested by the Police before they are placed on trial and the laws of every country place restrictions on the user of certain forms of property in the interests of public welfare. This enactment he says stands practically on the same footing.

But it is unnecessary to determine any of these questions for the very simple reason that this Court is constituted and this application has been made under the special provisions of the Press Act itself and section 22 of that Act prevents all interference on our part except on one ground mentioned in sections 17 and 19. When this was pointed out to Mrs. Besant, she further contended that section 22 itself was ultra vires. Even if that contention were valid, whatever other remedy she may have she has none on this application.

Now I shall examine the provisions of section 4 in some detail. It is contended that the phrase "which are likely or may have a tendency, directly or indirectly, whether by inference, suggestion, allusion, metaphor, implication or otherwise" means that if any of the words used may, by any possible construction, however ingenious and far-fetched, be supposed to have an objectionable tendency of the nature described therein, that is enough to bring a newspaper within the purview of the section. This indeed is said to be the interpretation which found favour with Chief Justice Jenkins. He says that "the provisions of section 4 are very comprehensive, and its language is as wide as human ingenuity could make it. Indeed, it appears to me to embrace the whole range of varying degrees of assurance from certainty on the one side to the very limits of impossibility on the other."

"It is difficult to see to what lengths the operation of this section might not plausibly be extended by an ingenious mind. They would certainly extend to writings that may even command approval."

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

"An attack on that degraded section of the public which lives on the misery and shame of others would come within this widespread net: the praise of a class might not be free from risk. Much that is regarded as standard literature might undoubtedly be caught."

Anything which fell from that distinguished Judge has my greatest respect. But though undoubtedly the language of the enactment is, as I have said, extremely, nay dangerously wide, I venture to doubt if the cases which are mentioned above could reasonably be said to come within the scope of the section. In the first place, the words "whether by inference, suggestion, allusion, metaphor, implication or otherwise" are merely by way of explanation, and do not in any way enlarge the meaning of the words "which are likely or may have a tendency directly or indirectly." By "tendency," I take it, is meant the natural effect of the words used on the readers of the newspaper in question. I do not think that we ought to have any regard in this connection to the effect which they may possibly produce on the minds of abnormally constituted persons, or persons whose acquaintance with the language is inadequate, or on those who might content themselves with reading certain passages or expressions apart from the context.

I do not think that our decision upon the tendency of publications in a newspaper should be affected by a consideration of the interpretation which men of ingenious minds may put upon them. All that we are to take into account is the effect which the words are, by their nature, likely to produce on a normal average reader understanding them in their plain, natural meaning.

But the onus is laid (see sections 17 and 19) upon the person whose security has been forfeited to prove that the publications selected by the Government at their own discretion may not have the tendency described in the various clauses. That is not only reversing the ordinary procedure in trials, but the difficulty of proving such a negative as this must in many cases be insurmountable.

Then apart from explanation 2, we have not, in applying section 4 (1), to consider the intentions of the Editor or the writer, if it is not shown that the words in their plain, ordinary meaning may not tend to produce the objectionable effects mentioned in clauses (a) to (f).

The extracts under consideration are said to come within clause (a), (c), (d) or (e). Briefly speaking, clause (a) relates to words having a tendency to incite to acts of violence; clause (d) to words tending to put any person to fear and thereby induce him to do an act which he is not legally bound to do; and (e) relates to words which encourage persons to interfere with the maintenance of law and order.

That portion of clause (c) with reference to which the extracts require careful examination is this: "to bring into hatred or contempt His Majesty or the Government established by law in British India...or any class or section of His Majesty's subjects in British India or to excite disaffection towards His Majesty or the said Government..." It will be seen that this lumps together the offences defined by sections 124A and 153A of the Indian Penal Code, with this difference that we are not concerned here with any question of intention of the Editor or writer of the articles, leaving aside for a moment the effect of explanation 2 which will be considered presently.

The words of section 124A, which has been the subject of interpretation in a number of cases, have been substantially reproduced in clause (c). "Hatred" and "contempt" which are ordinary English words, I take it, mean something more than mere disapproval or dislike. The word "disaffection" has been explained in the section itself as including disloyalty and all feelings of enmity and I do not think any practical purpose would be served by attempting to suggest any further explanation.

But a question has been raised as to the meaning of the phrase "the Government established by law in British India." It is contended by the applicant that what is meant by that phrase is the supremacy of the British Crown and the British connection as opposed to independence. This cannot be a definition of "Government" as used in the section; it would only indicate the essential elements in the political relation between India and Great Britain. Government denotes an established authority entitled and able to administer the public affairs of the country. On the other hand, Government is not identical with any particular individuals who may be administering the Government. Mr. Justice Strachey of the Bombay High Court defined it as "British Rule and its representatives as such, the existing political system as distinguished from any particular set of administrators." See Queen-Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (17). Justice Batty in Emperor v. Bhaskar Balwant Bhopatkar (11) explained the conception of Government in somewhat greater detail. "What is contemplated under the section is the collective body of men—the Government, defined under the Indian Penal Code It means the person or persons collectively, in succession, who are authorised to administer the Government for the time being. One particular set of persons may be open to objection, and to assail them and to attack them and excite hatred against them is not necessarily exciting hatred against the Government, because they are only individuals and not representatives of that abstract conception which is called Government... The individual is transitory and may be separately criticised but that which is essentially and inseparably connected with the idea of the Government established by law cannot be attacked without coming within this section." The same idea underlay Sir Comer Petheram's explanation of the phrase in the "Bangobasi" case (Queen-Empress v. Jogendra Chunder Bose) (21), where he says that "British India is part of the British Empire and is governed like other parts of the Empire by persons to whom the power is delegated for that purpose. There is a great difference between dealing with Government in that sense and dealing with any particular administration." In the above sense "Government" includes not only the Government of India but also the local Governments.

I think the last passage from Justice Batty's judgment cited above requires some explanation. I do not think he meant that the law prohibits criticisms of the Government as constituted in a particular form, provided such criticisms do not bring it into hatred or contempt or excite disaffection against it. In fact all criticisms of the measures of a Government must in some degree involve reflections on the Government itself. But section 4 allows less scope to criticisms directed against the Government itself than to criticisms of measures of the Government.

Explanation 2, which is transcribed almost word by word from section 124A, says that "comments expressing disapproval of the measures of the Government with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means or of the administrative or other action of the Government without exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection do not come within the scope of clause (c)." The draftsman who borrowed these words from section 124A apparently overlooked the fact that the essence of an offence under section 124A being the guilty intention, explanation 2 necessarily imported the question of intention, while clause (c) to section 4 to which the explanation was attached is not concerned with the intention of the writer of the words charged. However that may be, we must read explanation 2 as we find it. So reading, it means that comments on the measures and actions of the Government are exempted from the operation of section 4, provided the person making the comment does not excite or attempt to excite thereby hatred or contempt against the Government. But the protection afforded by this explanation is extended only to comments on Government's measures and actions, and not to attacks on the Government itself which have to be judged by light of the section 4 alone without reference to the explanation II.

It is evident from some of the extracts, the subject of the charge, from the statements of the applicant herself and certain copies of "New India" tendered in evidence under section 8 that it is the declared policy of this paper to advocate and agitate for Home Rule in India. The method adopted is to draw attention to those measures and actions of the Government that are in the opinion of the editor injurious to the interests of the people and thereby to enforce the teaching that Home Rule is the only efficient remedy for most of the political evils in the country. The learned Advocate-General very rightly told us under instructions from the Government that they did not object to advocacy of any Home Rule propaganda; what they objected to was the nature of the matters published in the paper, connected though they might be with a scheme for Home Rule.

And in fact it is difficult to see how any such movement can be regarded as illegal per se. It lies entirely with the Sovereign, that is in the compendious phrase of Dr. Dicey, the King in Parliament, to establish any Government he chooses for India or any other part of the British Empire. There can be nothing wrong, therefore, in a subject of the Crown urging the desirability of a change in the machinery of Government in India. Changes in the constitution of Government do take place from time to time with the consent or sanction of the Sovereign and the most recent, in the case of India, were the reforms introduced by Lord Morley. In certain stages of society, reforms in the constitution of the Government are a biological and political necessity. To say that such questions are not open to public discussion, supposing that the law is not violated by the manner and the methods adopted in such discussion, would be opposed to all sound maxims of constitutional law. The principle which bears on the subject has been expressed in the following terms, which have met with the approval of some of the most distinguished text-writers:—"An intention is not seditious if the object is to show that the King has been misled or mistaken in his measures or to point out errors and defects in the Government or constitution with a view to their reformation or to excite the subjects to attempt by lawful means the alteration of any matter in Church or State or to point out with a view to their removal matters which are producing or have a tendency to produce feelings of hatred or ill-will between classes of the subjects" (see Stephen's Commentaries, Volume IV, page 150, 16th Edition; Dicey's Law of Constitution, page 240, 8th Edition; 9 Halsbury's Laws of England, page 460, paragraph 902).

The applicant has complained to us that the Madras Government never made any pronouncement on the subject of Home Rule and she thought that they objected to the movement suggesting thereby that if she had known their real attitude, the tone of some of the articles might have been modified. But then she was not justified in supposing that the Government would act contrary to the law, and any such supposition could not be a valid excuse if it led her to publish matters obnoxious to the law.

After the best consideration I have been able to give to these articles, which I shall now proceed to deal with in detail, I fully accept the assurance of the applicant that her newspaper "New India" has been persistently preaching against acts of violence. Nor have I found anything in these articles which can reasonably be taken to suggest that India should sever her connection with the British Crown or the British Empire. In fact, it is expressly stated in some of these extracts, for instance Extract No. 3, that what "New India" has been struggling for, to use its own language, is "Home Rule", by which is meant Self-Government within and as a part of the British Empire. The applicant indignantly repudiated charges of disloyalty to His Majesty, and I find nothing in the language of these articles which would lead me to doubt in any degree the sincerity of her protestation. Nor has the learned Advocate-General suggested otherwise. The real question, however, is whether the words of any of these extracts are likely to have a tendency to bring into hatred or contempt the Government or to excite disaffection towards the Government or to bring into hatred or contempt any class of His Majesty's subjects in British India, or do they or any of them come within the scope of explanation 2 to section 4. I will say at once that none of the articles cited in the charge can fairly be said to have any tendency of the description mentioned in clauses (a), (d) and (e).

I will take serial Nos. 4 (a) to 4 (f) together. These are letters of correspondents and paragraphs dealing with the practice which obtains on certain railways of reserving compartments for the use of Europeans and Eurasians alone and of excluding from them Indian passengers holding tickets issued to them in due course. They are written on the assumption that the legality of such practice was open to challenge. It is possible that the decision of the Sindh Court referred to was misunderstood, but there can be no doubt that the writers bona fide believed that it had declared against the validity of the practice. It is stated that it was a matter of frequent occurrence that, while the compartments reserved for Europeans and Eurasians were empty, Indian passengers were not allowed to use them, even though the other compartments were overcrowded and many Indian passengers holding tickets were unable to find seats. The action of the Railway authorities is condemned not only as illegal but objectionable as tending to emphasise racial distinctions. The suggestion is made in several of the extracts that the passengers should test the legality of this practice. It is urged that the editorial note to Serial No. 4 (d) "why did you get out. It is this submission to illegality that causes half the troubles from which Indians suffer" amounts to a suggestion to use violence: but I have no doubt that the note is not reasonably capable of being so understood, if read in the light of the letter to which it is attached and in connection with the other writings on the same subject. It has also to be borne in mind that some of these extracts had already appeared in other newspapers.

Extract No. 5 which is headed "The price of Liberty" is an article quoted from "the Herald" of London. It is an apology put forward by one John Scurr for the action of persons known as conscientious objectors to conscription. It extols the virtues of those who, for the sake of the cause which they believe in, cheerfully and boldly suffer all kinds of inflictions. Mrs. Besant has told us that as a matter of fact she has been doing everything possible in her power to support the British cause in this War through the medium of "New India" and that is not denied on the other side. There is no question of conscription in this country and the objection of the Advocate-

General to this extract is that it may have a tendency to incite the readers of the "New India" to acts of violence against the Government. But I can find no such suggestion in the extract. Mrs. Besant herself explained to us that the reason why she inserted it in the Home Rule section (that is to say, that part of the paper which is especially devoted to the question of Home Rule for India) was simply to supply an object-lesson to the people of this country in self-sacrifice. I am unable to say that it suggests in any way that people should take the law into their own hands.

Extract No. 7: "The latest political crime in Calcutta and its moral, by Bipin Chandra Pal." This, it is contended, comes under clauses (a), (c) and (e). I have read the article with considerable care and I cannot find in it any palliation of the anarchical crimes committed by the young anarchists or revolutionaries of Bengal, as suggested on behalf of the Crown. What the writer tries to prove is that repression alone is not an adequate remedy for the present situation in that province. He expresses the opinion that if the Government would publicly accept Swaraj or Home Rule "as the ideal objective of the immediate historical evolution of the Indians" and "if they would start some of those necessary reforms in the administration which would give a practical assurance to the future national autonomy inside the coming federation of the whole British Empire", the problem might be more easily solved. Mr. Pal asks the Government not to regard these misguided young students as mere ordinary criminals but rather as political offenders. He does not, however, suggest that their offences should not be punished according to law. In one place he says that these men are possessed of a kind of courage which should not be overlooked, but in the same sentence he condemns 'the suicidal folly and criminal inhumanity of their actions.' I do not think that any reader of "New India," who is not predisposed to read in meanings in the article which are not there, would carry away the impression that it attempts in any way to excuse the conduct of the political assassins in Bengal. Nor is there a single word in the whole of that article which can be said to have a tendency to bring the Government into hatred or contempt or to excite disaffection against it.

Extract No. 3 is "Latest sin of the Arms Act." It notices a dacoity of a very serious nature which was committed in the house of a rich merchant in a village in this Presidency. Large sums of money and jewels were carried away and the victim, it is said, bitterly complained of the helplessness of the unarmed villagers to offer any resistance to the armed bandits. The moral is pointed that such helplessness is the result of the Arms Act and the writer pleads for its repeal or modification. It is difficult to see how this paragraph can be said to go beyond the limits of fair comment on a measure of the Government which has formed the subject of frequent discussion in newspapers and on public platforms.

Extract No. 1. "Bureaucracy in Ex-celsis", is a letter written by one Krishnama Chariar denouncing the action of the Magistrate requiring security from the applicant. It accuses the Madras Government of blind hostility against "New India," dwells on the "unwisdom of relying too much upon the sympathy of the Bureaucracy towards any of her (i. e., India's) truly higher aspirations" and says when "New India" "mercilessly exposes any and every vagary of the Englishman in this land that it can come across, the Anglo-Indian blood boils with all the uncontrollable rage of the most selfish vested interest." This is undoubtedly a violent piece of writing and goes beyond the limits of fair comment.

Extract No. 2 is also a letter from a correspondent. It not only describes the enforcement of the Press Act against "New India" as "inhuman action and barbarous atrocity," but it leaves the readers under the impression that "the much-hated and ever-mischievous bureaucracy" is identical with the Government. It alleges that the Government have a spite against the Editor of "New India", for "she is the head of an institution which works against the missionaries and the missionaries are the parasites of the Government." It is impossible to say that a publication of this character may not have a tendency to excite hatred against the Government.

Extract No. 6 is an editorial article, where it is stated "Repressive measures such as the Press Act, the Seditious Meetings Act, the Official Secrets Act and the Defence of India Act in the hands of people with vested interests of their own naturally assume a shape and a form all too ghastly for the children of the soil, and day and night exert a baneful influence over them, engendering at once fear and hatred." Supposing these measures are all of a repressive character and are objectionable, still to describe them in language quoted is certainly not fair comment, and naturally tends to create a feeling of dislike and hatred against the Government.

Extract No. 8, "Ave Cæsar", is written by Mrs. Besant herself criticising the order passed by the Government of Bombay under the Defence of India Act prohibiting her from entering that province. She told us that she wrote in that strain because she was indignant that the Defence of India Act, which is directed against the enemies of England and of His Majesty the King-Emperor, should have been used against her." I am not inclined to attach much importance to this paragraph, it is an outburst of an enraged woman who felt that she had been very unjustly dealt with.

In similar strain is Extract No. 9. It contrasts the attitude of Anglo-Indians towards constitutional struggles in India with that of Englishmen in England. In Extract No. 10 there is a suggestion that sometimes action under the Defence of India Act is resorted to by the Government from a feeling of personal enmity. Extract No. 11 deals with the case of one Shyam Sunder Chakravathy, Assistant Editor of the Bengalee, who was arrested in Calcutta and in connection with whose arrest the safe of Babu Surendra Nath Bannerji, the editor of that paper, was searched by the Police. Without stating whether the arrest was under the ordinary law or under the Defence of India Act or what was the nature of the evidence upon which action was taken by the Police, it is asserted "the arrest is legal doubtless, but is truly unlawful". "When injustice is perpetrated, when crimes are committed legally, when innocence is no protection and harmless men are treated as criminals, then we live in a condition of anarchy, no matter what legal sanction may cover the wrongdoer. Civilization does not protect us. We should be better off in a state of savagery, for then we should be on our guard, we should carry arms and protect ourselves. We are helpless. We pay taxes to be wronged", words like these exceed the limits of all fair comment and are likely to excite hatred against the Government.

Extract No. 12 is a plea for Home Rule. It is taken from a contribution in the "Commonweal." The Advocate-General has especially drawn our attention to the passage where the writer speaks of this age as "an age for heroes who dare to enter the arena of righteous warfare loved by the true Kshatriyas of old, to whom according to the Gita nothing is more welcome", and to the allusion to Paine, the American writer's saying "that we are living in times that try men's souls." I think the allusion to the true Kshatriyas of old is by way of exhortation not to wage actual warfare against the Government but to fight the constitutional battle for Home Rule. There are also allusions to certain social customs in the East and in the West which are certainly not in good taste and are calculated to arouse class hatred between Englishmen and Indians. There are words which might also be liable to be understood as suggesting that Government has encouraged dissensions among people of different religions and castes in the country.

Extract No. 13 contains the suggestion that the reason why Bal Gangadhar Tilak of Bombay who had instituted an action in the English Courts against Sir Valentine Chirol was refused a passport by the Bombay Government was that he might not go to England to prosecute his case. I find nothing to warrant such a supposition which, if well-founded, would be greatly to the discredit of the Government of Bombay.

The last article, Extract No. 14, contains a statement that the "Education of Indian boys is in the grip of foreigners who impose upon them a crushing curriculum; that some of the professors and teachers often treat them with the greatest rudeness and address them in the most insulting terms and that they have no regard to their miserable poverty nor try to improve their indecent and insanitary surroundings." It is written by way of protest against a suggestion that the actions of educational authorities should not be criticised in the public press. The language used is very strong and it is not right to cast any blame on the English professors and teachers for the "indecent and insanitary surroundings of the students." But I do not think that the passage read in the light of the context can be said to have a tendency to bring the Government into hatred or to excite feelings of class hatred, within the meaning of clause (c).

The difficulties of a foreign Government, constituted as it is in this country, are necessarily very great. It is not to be expected that it should be in complete touch with the genuine sentiments, feelings and aspirations of the people; the information that it can command must at best be second-hand and is often likely to proceed from interested sources. With the best of intentions, it is liable to make many mistakes, sometimes serious blunders. These and other inherent difficulties of the Government as at present constituted may or may not justify the demand for Home Rule, and it may be that Self-Government is necessary for the full growth of the people. But the law does not permit a publicist, discussing the Government's actions and failures, to impute base and dishonourable motives.

Mrs. Annie Besant has assumed full responsibility for everything that appeared in her paper. I am prepared to acquit her of any wilful attempt to disseminate disaffection or hatred against the Government of the country or to create feelings of hatred against any class of His Majesty's subjects. But I have been unable to hold that some of the extracts from the publications in the "New India" cited before us may not have such a tendency.

The application must be dismissed.

AYLING, J.—This is the petition presented under section 17 of the Press Act (I of 1910) by Mrs. Annie Besant, Editor of the newspaper, "New India," and keeper and printer of the "New India Printing Works." In it she applies to this Court to set aside an order of forfeiture passed by the Madras Government on 25th August 1916 in respect of a sum of Rs. 2,000 deposited by her as security under section 3 of the Act for the said Press, and of all copies of the "New India" newspaper. It may be mentioned that the forfeiture of the copies of the newspaper appears not to have been enforced by actual seizure and that the publication of the paper has been continued on deposit of further security under section 5 of the Act.

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

The order of forfeiture was passed under section 4 of the Act, which empowers the Local Government to take such action when it appears to the Local Government that the Press has been used for printing or publishing any newspaper containing any words... "which are likely or may have a tendency, directly or indirectly, whether by inference, suggestion, allusion, metaphor, implication or otherwise, (a) to incite...to any act of violence...(c) to bring into hatred or contempt...the Government established by law in British India...or any class or section of His Majesty's subjects in British India or to excite disaffection... towards the said Government ..." or "(e) to encourage or incite any person to interfere with the administration of the law or the maintenance of law or order."

There are two explanations to the section, one of which is of considerable importance and will be dealt with in due course.

Section 17 of the Act allows any person interested in the property thus forfeited to apply to the High Court to set aside such order (of forfeiture), "on the ground that the newspaper...in respect of which the order was made did not contain any words...of the nature described in section 4 (1)."

Section 18 provides for the constitution of a Special Bench of the High Court composed of three Judges to hear and determine such application.

Section 19 empowers the Special Bench so constituted to set aside the order of forfeiture, if it appears that the words contained in the newspaper in respect of which the order was made were not of the nature described in section 4 (1); and further provides that where there is no majority of the Special Bench which concurs in setting aside the order of forfeiture, the order shall stand.

It will thus be seen that we are a Special Tribunal constituted under a special enactment for a single specific purpose—namely, to determine whether certain words contained in the newspaper (and specified in the order of forfeiture), are or are not of the nature described in section 4 (1). This was the conclusion arrived at by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court similarly constituted in Mahomed Ali v. Emperor (2) with which I respectfully agree.

Much of the argument before us has been devoted to the question of whether and to what extent we should concur in the conclusions to which those learned Judges have arrived, or the further question of the proper construction of section 4 (1). The Advocate General has contended that we should adopt them in their entirety; while the petitioner argues that the language of the section defining the nature of the words which would justify forfeiture has been misunderstood and given far too wide an effect.

I do not propose to follow this argument in detail. As at present advised, I am by no means satisfied that the interpretation of the learned Judges is not too wide. I can find nothing in the Act which seems to me to throw on the applicant the onus of proving that the words, which are made the ground of forfeiture, do not fall within the scope of the section. I certainly do not think this is to be deduced (as has been suggested) from the words of section 19, which empowers the Bench to set aside the forfeiture if it appears that they do not. Whether the words are likely or may have a tendency to produce certain results must be determined primarily by inference from their own nature. The words themselves form the main evidence in the case; and I do not think the Act throws any onus on either side. I am not satisfied that the words of section 4 ("are likely or may have a tendency") "embrace the whole range of varying degrees of assurance from certainty on the one side to the very limits of impossibility on the other", or that the wording of the section is so all-embracing that even a person "acting in the highest interests of humanity and civilisation" is confronted with an almost hopeless task in showing that the words he has used do not fall within it. Whether "an attack on that degraded section of public which lives on the misery and shame of others would come within this widespread net" is a question, the decision of which we may, in my opinion, well postpone until we are asked to decide it. At present we are only concerned with the question of whether the words of the articles before us do or do not come within the mischief of the section; and if, as I think, they do without placing any startlingly wide construction on the section, it is unnecessary for us in this case to decide to what lengths the section might be ingeniously stretched. That the wording of the section is very wide is, however, undeniable; and in some respects it clearly goes beyond the provisions of the Penal Code. The governing words "are likely or may have a tendency" undoubtedly leave the question of intention quite immaterial: and confine our attention to the natural effect of the words without reference to what the writer meant, or wished to be understood.

To this, however, there would seem to be a very important exception in explanation II of the section which runs:—"Comments expressing disapproval of the measures of the Government or of any such Native Prince or Chief as aforesaid with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means, or of the administrative or other action of the Government or of any such Native Prince or Chief or of the administration of justice in British India without exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection do not come within the scope of clause (c)." The learned Advocate-General has argued that even here the element of intention is absent, and that 'attempting to incite' is equivalent to "tending to excite." The wording of the explanation, which is apparently taken from section 124A, Indian Penal Code, is not altogether happy. Comments may excite hatred, etc., but it is difficult to see how comments (i.e., the words used) can attempt to excite. The word 'attempt' seems to presuppose a sentient being and one animated by a particular intention. I am not disposed to accept the Advocate-General's argument in this respect; and shall consider the extracts placed before us from the point of view that in the case of comments on the measures of Government an intention to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection is necessary to bring them within the scope of clause (c) of section 4 (1). The intention is, of course, deducible from the words of the extracts themselves.

Much argument has also been devoted to the meaning to be attached to the words "Government" or "Government established by law in British India" as used in the Act: and to the words "contempt or hatred." The term "disaffection" is defined in section 4 (1), explanation I, which says "In clause (c) the expression 'disaffection' includes disloyalty and all feelings of enmity."

As regards the first point, petitioner asks us to interpret the words "Government established by law in British India" as indicating nothing more than the supremacy of the Crown and the British connection. That is to say, as long as the writer or publisher of an article proclaims his loyalty to the King-Emperor, and his desire that India should still remain a part of the British Empire, he may attack to his heart's content the Government of India or the Government of Madras and hold them up to hatred and contempt, without coming within the scope of the section; and the same interpretation would presumably apply to section 124A, Indian Penal Code, the wording of which is practically identical. To give effect to such an interpretation would go far to render the task of governing India impossible; and I have no hesitation whatever in deciding that it is not the one intended by the authors of this Act, or one which we should adopt. If anything of the kind were intended, the words used would have been chosen to indicate, not the Government, but the form of Government in so far as it embodies the British connection. We must assume that the term "Government", in explanation II to sub-section (1), is used in the same sense as in clause (c) of the sub-section and if petitioner's interpretation is correct, to speak of the "measures of the Government" is absolutely meaningless.

The true interpretation is to be found in section 3 of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897) which governs the Press Act as regards definitions of terms. It is sufficient to quote the following sub-sections:

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

(21) "Government" or "the Government" shall include the Local Government as well as the Government of India.

(22) "Government of India" shall mean the Governor-General-in-Council or, during the absence of the Governor-General-in-Council from his Council, the President in Council or the Governor-General alone as regards the powers which may be lawfully exercised by them or him respectively.

(29) "Local Government" shall mean the person authorised by law to administer Executive Government in the part of British India in which the Act or Regulation containing the expression operates, and shall include a Chief Commissioner.

These definitions (which it may be remarked are substantially identical with those given in sections 16 and 17, Indian Penal Code) govern the Press Act, "unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context" (vide section 3, General Clauses Act). I can find nothing repugnant in the section or Act. The addition of the words "established by law in British India" seems to be intended to emphasise the fact that it is the Government existing at the time that is sought to be protected from attacks of the kind forbidden and to exclude the very plea now raised by petitioner.

As regards the words "hatred" and "contempt" we are asked by petitioner to hold that only such hatred and contempt are contemplated in clause (c) as would lead to the commission of the crimes referred to in the other clauses of the sub-section, e. g., murder, violence, resistance to the law, intimidation of public servants and others.

I cannot find a shadow of justification for such an argument. Hatred and contempt are perfectly intelligible words, but it is impossible to say what degree of hatred and contempt would be sufficient to lead different people to commit different crimes, and there is no ground for giving them such a limited meaning. No case has been quoted to us in which any Court has applied such a limitation even in construing the old section 124A, Indian Penal Code, before the amendment of 1898. The word therein used was "disaffection" and I need only refer to the exhaustive discussion of the matter by Strachey, J., in Queen-Empress v. Bal Ganga-dhar Tilak (17). "Disaffection" (which word is also found in the section we are construing, in addition to "hatred" and "contempt") was held to mean hatred, enmity, dislike, hostility, contempt and every form of ill-will towards the Government. The amount or intensity of the "disaffection" was held to be absolutely immaterial except as regards the question of punishment. The learned Judge says: "I am aware that some distinguished persons have held that there can be no offence against the section unless the accused either counsels or suggests rebellion or forcible resistance to the Government. In my opinion, that view is absolutely opposed to the express words of the section itself, which as plainly as possible makes the exciting or attempting to excite certain feelings, and not the inducing or attempting to induce to any course of action such as rebellion or forcible resistance; the test of guilt."

The learned Judge's charge to the Jury in that case contains an exhaustive discussion of the law of sedition: and I select it for quotation and rely on it with the more confidence because it was substantially approved by their Lordships of the Privy Council in dismissing an appeal specially allowed against the conviction in that case and based very largely on the ground that there had been misdirection on this very point of the meaning of the term "disaffection."

It is not suggested that the subsequent alteration of the law was in the direction of relaxation or less stringency. Section 124A, Indian Penal Code, was practically re-cast so as to make it clear that Strachey, J.'s interpretation of the law was correct (vide Mayne's Criminal Law of India, 4th Edition, page 298). Nor is it suggested that a more lenient construction should be put on the section with which we are concerned than would be applied if petitioner were on her trial for a criminal offence.

The learned Judge's remarks are also of the greatest value in dealing with explanation II to section 4 (1). The explanation to the old section 124A, Indian Penal Code, with which he was dealing was admittedly susceptible of interpretation much more favourable to an accused person than the explanations to section 4 (1) of the Press Act, or those to the present section 124A,

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

Indian Penal Code. Strachey, J., however, says:

"A man may criticise or comment upon any measure or act of the Government, whether legislative or executive, and freely express opinion upon it. He may discuss the Income Tax Act, the Epidemic Diseases Act, or any military expedition, or the suppression of plague or famine, or the administration of justice. He may express the strongest condemnation of such measures, and he may do so severely; and even unreasonably, perversely and unfairly. So long as he confines himself to that, he will be protected by the explanation. But if he goes beyond that, and, whether in the course of comments upon measures or not, holds up the Government itself to the hatred or contempt of his readers,—as for instance, by attributing to it every sort of evil and misfortune suffered by the people, or dwelling adversely on its foreign origin and character, or imputing to it base motives, or accusing it of hostility or indifference to the welfare of the people—then he is guilty under the section, and the explanation will not save him."

The words "dwelling adversely on its foreign origin and character," "imputing to it base motives" or "accusing it of hostility or indifference to the welfare of the people" all have great importance in relation to certain of the articles, which we have to consider. I need hardly say that the first phrase (dwelling adversely on its foreign origin or character) must not be understood in too comprehensive a sense, or divorced from the context.

All unfavourable criticism of a Government's constitution, policy or measures must necessarily tend to arouse dissatisfaction. So far, there is nothing illegitimate. No enactment of the Government of India with which I am acquainted seems to be intended or, reasonably interpreted, could be used to stifle such criticism. But between dissatisfaction on the one hand and hatred, contempt and disaffection on the other, there is a vast gulf.

It is open to any one to draw attention to the non-Indian elements in the Government of India, and to argue that these impair the efficiency of that Government, and that it would be to the public advantage, if they were replaced by Indian elements. That is legitimate criticism. But it is not legitimate to go further and to use the existence of the non-Indian elements of Government as a means of exciting hatred, contempt and disaffection against Government—as Strachey, J., puts it, to hold up the Government to hatred and contempt by dwelling adversely on its foreign character and origin. It all depends on the manner in which and the object with which the circumstance is used in argument.

With those preliminary remarks, I shall now proceed to a consideration of the various articles in "New India" which have been made the basis of the order of forfeiture. They are in all twenty in number, though seven of them have been grouped together under the heading of Extract No. 4 (a-g) in the list appended to the order of forfeiture.

In addition to these articles, a number of others culled from various issues of "New India" between August 1st 1914 and the date of the order of security have been filed on both sides. They are relied on partly under section 20 of the Press Act in "aid of the proof of the nature or tendency of the articles specified as the basis of forfeiture," and partly as illustrating the policy of the newspaper and, in that way, the probable intention of the petitioner where such intention is relevant.

I have considered these articles but find myself unable to derive material assistance from them, one way or the other. In no single case has any attempt been made to show such a connection between one of them and any of the specified articles as would enable a Court to say that a perusal of the one threw appreciable light on the nature and tendency of the other. As regards intention, it seems to me most unsafe to judge of the intention of petitioner in publishing the specified articles, by reference to other articles previously published at long intervals of time, and mostly in other connections. The additional articles filed on petitioner's behalf are, as she explains, intended to show that she has upheld the British connection and the authority of the Crown (as distinguished from the Government of India); and that in certain instances she has approved of the action of Government. I have already dealt with the distinction she seeks to draw between the Crown and the Government: and an occasional instance of praise of Government has no bearing on the tendency and extremely little on the intention (where such is relevant) of the specified articles. The articles filed by the Advocate-General stand in much the same position. It is sought to prove, by reference to other articles in the paper, that the specified articles were published with the intention of exciting hatred, contempt, or disaffection. I prefer to base my conclusions on the actual articles which have to be construed. I do not say these other articles are irrelevant: I have considered them to the best of my ability, but have found them of so little assistance that I do not propose to lengthen my judgment by further reference to them, and shall confine my remarks to the articles specified in the forfeiture order.

Extracts Nos. 1 and 2 have some similarity and may conveniently be dealt with together. They purport to be letters from correspondents published on the 7th and 8th June 1916 respectively, with reference to the order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, dated 22nd May, demanding security from petitioner under section 3 (1) of the Press Act. It is not suggested that the fact that they are letters of correspondents makes any difference and Apurba Krishna Bose v. Emperor (12) would be clear authority against such a proposition even in a criminal prosecution. But it is contended that they are comments on the measures of Government and fall within explanation II. If one were inclined to take a narrow view of the explanation it might be difficult to bring the first extract within it. Extract No. 1 is only a comment on the security order in the sense that it has apparently been evoked by the latter. The nature of the order is not even referred to, except incidentally in a single passage towards the end. I shall, however, treat both letters as comments on Government measures, and merely consider whether they satisfy the requirement indicated in the words "without exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection." Extract No. 1 begins by remarking that "out of evil comes good": and after referring to the benefits indirectly arising from the tyranny of the Stuarts, Aurangzeb and Lord Curzon, says that "out of the blind hostility evinced by the Madras Government towards 'New India,' our ultra moderate begging politicians are bound to learn the unwisdom of relying too much on the sympathy of the Bureaucracy towards any of our truly higher aspirations." The writer then goes off at a tangent and proceeds to speculate on the motives which have prompted Government's action. He finds no difficulty in discovering them. "We can well guess how the journal, 'New India,' has offended the Bureaucracy." "The strong plain speaking of 'New India' has grown intolerable for the over-delicate, self-adulent, flattery-loving ears of Anglo-India." "When 'New India' mercilessly exposes any and every vagary of the Englishman in this land that it can come across, the Anglo-Indian blood boils with all the uncontrollable rage of the most selfish vested interest." This is clearly indicated as the cause for the Government's action. "The real issue may indeed be expressed in one small phrase 'Anglo-India versus New India'"—or as it is put further on, "the attempt, bound to be futile, is made by Might to overawe and put down Right."

The characteristic feature of the article is that it treats the "Bureaucracy," "Anglo-India" and the "Madras Government" as synonymous. Certainly no attempt is made to distinguish Government from the Bureaucracy and Anglo-India, and blind hostility is specifically attributed to the former. The motive suggested as animating all three is of the basest—the protection of selfish vested interests, and the resentment at plain speaking of flattery-loving ears.

Extract No. 2 follows much the same lines. The first three paragraphs and the first part of the fourth are unobjectionable—at any rate not beyond the limits of fair comment. The writer refers to the fact that "New India" has condemned anarchy and has not advocated the severance of the British connection, and observes that the drastic legislation was very drastically applied, the maximum security being demanded without warning or reasons assigned. The term "inhuman action" is, of course, very inappropriate to a measure of the kind referred to: but had the writer stopped here, I should certainly hold that the letter did not come within the mischief of the section.

The letter, however, proceeds: "What private cause has made the Government stoop to such barbarous atrocity we know not. But this we know full well: the much-hated and ever-mischievous Bureaucracy discountenances outspoken criticism and no good Government should be afraid of criticism. We also know that the Government have a spite against the Editor of 'New India', for she is the head of an institution which works against the Missionaries and the Missionaries are the parasites of the Government." Further down it proceeds: "News of Prussian aggression and German atrocity are communicated to India to bewilder the Indian imagination. They are committed, under pressure, during the War, under passion. They are common. But what does this mean? This perpetration of atrocity in civic life, in peaceful times, in a peaceful province? This thunder during this sunny day sets the world a-wondering."

Apart from the grossly exaggerated language applied to the measure, which is the subject of comment, and which it is obviously impossible to justify, what I attach particular importance to is the discussion of motive. "Private cause" is hinted at: and Government is said to have a spite against petitioner for working against the Missionary parasites of Government.

No one could write these passages without the intention of exposing Government to the hatred and contempt of its subjects, and it is not questioned that in all cases the intention of the writer must be ascribed to the publisher.

Neither of these letters can claim the protection of explanation II: and each falls to my mind beyond question within the scope of section 4 (1).

I shall next take Extract No. 6, an article entitled "Prussianism in India." The writer begins by referring to the well-known fact that in India we live hemmed in on all sides by repressive measures. The Press Act, the Seditious Meetings Act, the Official Secrets Act, the Defence of India Act, not to mention several despotic measures of early days—potential of mischief and capable of retarding democratic progress—are all there in the hands of a powerful Bureaucracy to be used as it thinks fit." He says they have been used, and tend to terrify people. So far, it may be treated as legitimate though perhaps hardly reasonable comment: but the article then proceeds:

"These iniquitous measures, in the hands of people with vested interests of their own, naturally assume a shape and form all too ghastly for the children of the soil, and day and night exert a baneful influence over them engendering at once fear and hatred."

Here we have the same characteristic. Not only are the measures of Government described in language too exaggerated to be explained merely by an honest desire to criticise: but the motives of Government are impugned and its actions ascribed to a desire to protect "vested interests."

There is a great deal more in the article but while it certainly contains nothing to qualify or soften the passage above quoted, there is nothing to add materially to it and I pass it over.

With this may be taken Extract No. 10 which is short enough to be given in extenso. "What does..... Great Britain." (See Extract No. 10, page 541)

The salient feature again is the imputations of motive. The 'four men' referred to can only be the Governor of a Presidency and his members in Council, "His Excellency the Governor-in-Council", and they are described as a group who may be the personal enemies of the individual interned and who are his enemies in thought and belief.

What is this but an attempt to excite hatred against Government?

I pass on to Extract No. 13. This is an article commenting on the action of the Bombay Government in calling on Mr. B. G. Tilak to furnish security for Rs. 40,000 to be of good behaviour under section 108, Criminal Procedure Code. The action was, of course, taken by a Magistrate; but the article treats it, and, I do not say unreasonably, as taken under the orders of Government. Here again there is no attempt at legitimate comment or criticism: the writer goes at once to the motive, which he ascribes as dictating the measure. Mr. Tilak is described as "again in the toils of his enemies" which can only mean Government, and the object of the demand of security is suggested as a desire to save Sir Valentine Chirol (against whom Mr. Tilak had brought a civil suit in England) from being brought to account. Petitioner admitted in answer to a question by me in open Court that this was the suggestion and added that it was a warranted inference. This is a specific imputation of the basest motive against the Bombay Government and could only be dictated by a desire to arouse hatred, contempt, and disaffection against it.

Extract No. 11 is of a slightly different nature. It is called "An outrage in Calcutta" and is a comment on the arrest of the Assistant Editor of the "Bengalee" and the search of the Editor's safe. There is nothing to indicate whether this was under any special enactment or was under the ordinary criminal law. Petitioner admitted in Court that it might be under the latter. No special motive is assigned (unlike the cases previously dealt with), but the writer after expatiating on the blameless and respectable life of the Assistant Editor says:

It seems to me impossible for any one to use language such as this without attempting to arouse hatred, contempt, or disaffection against the Government. It was used absolutely without excuse, so far as appears. In every country in the world innocent people are liable on occasion to be arrested or to have their safes and houses searched on suspicion. Can any writer not actuated by a desire to arouse hatred and disaffection describe such a state of affairs as anarchy, worse than savagery or say "we pay taxes to be wronged?"

Extract No. 9 is an article called "By what it feeds on." It has nothing to do with Government and is not covered by explanation II. It was apparently elicited by a suggestion of an Anglo-Indian paper, that petitioner's publications may not be allowed to use the mails. It is simply an attack on Anglo-Indians as a class. (The term Anglo-Indian is used here and I think in most, if not all, the articles in the old fashioned sense of an Englishman living in India.) The comparison is between the Englishman and the Anglo-Indian. The writer says—

"The Englishman...tyranny." (See Extract No 9, page 541.)

I do not regard this article as anything like as bad as those with which I have already dealt; but think it is likely to bring Anglo-Indians as a class of His Majesty's subjects into hatred and that it must be held to fall within the scope of clause (c) of section 4 (1). It is difficult indeed to justify such a general attack on a class by a single article in a journal, however representative of that class.

Extract No. 12 is entitled "Three ways to Home Rule;" and is taken from the "Commonweal." It is a very long article, and much of it is not open to serious attack. I do not agree with the Advocate-General that reasonably construed as a whole, it is an encouragement or incitement to violence, or falls under either clause (a) or (e). But it seems to me to display again the desire to arouse hatred against both the Government and the Anglo-Indian class. The writer says: "All efforts that Indians make to assert their own rights to gain liberty for the Motherland, to win Home Rule for themselves are resented, and our opponents have recourse to repression and Prussianism."

Anglo-India and the Government are again treated as synonymous. The usual motive is assigned: "the vested interests of her (Great Britain's) sons in this land drive out of them their love of liberty and push them on to mean and undesirable means of action."

Further on the foreign character of the Government is emphasised: "If we are to be tyrannised and lorded over, better that Indians do it—be they Brahmanas or Muslims—than that foreigners do it."

"Indians.....labour." (See Extract No. 12, page 544.)

The article is not protected by explanation II and seems to me to fall under clause (c).

Extract No. 14 again is a comment, not on any measures of Government, but on a speech of the Hon'ble Mr. V. S. Srinivasa Sastriar objecting to the intervention of newspapers in educational disputes. In combating Mr. Srinivasa Sastri's views the following argument is used: "Even if the education.....despair." (See Extract No. 14, page 545).

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

Petitioner explains that this is simply a criticism of the educational policy of Government. So much might be said of the crushing curriculum and the early specialisation. But the reference to the neglect of the miserable poverty of the boys and their indecent and insanitary surroundings seems to me to go further and to attack Government itself; while the phrase "in the grip of foreigners" is one only calculated to arouse hatred. In this as in the last-mentioned articles the foreign character of Government is utilised in what I have tried to distinguish as the illegitimate manner.

Extract No. 7 is of a very different nature to all the rest, and its construction with reference to section 4 appears to me to present peculiar difficulty. It is headed "The latest political crime in Calcutta and its moral" and is dated 8th July 1916. The crime in question appears to have been the assassination of a Bengali Police Officer by anarchists and the writer discusses the character of the assassins, the light in which they are regarded by the public, and the best way to deal with them so as to prevent the recurrence of such crimes. The Advocate General seeks to bring the article under each of the clauses (a), (c) and (e). I can find nothing in it coming under clause (c), and clause (a) seems to me less applicable than clause (e): I shall, therefore, consider whether the words of the article "are likely or may have a tendency, directly or indirectly, whether by inference, suggestion, allusion, metaphor, implication, or otherwise, to encourage, or incite any person to interfere with the administration of the law or the maintenance of law and order."

In this case, intention is entirely immaterial: we have only to consider the natural tendency of the article as it would present itself to an average reader.

The writer begins by emphasising the failure which has hitherto attended all attempts to suppress, detect, or punish these political assassinations. He pays a well merited tribute to the courage of Bengali Police Officers. He repudiates all sympathy with the crime on the part of himself or other reasonable Indian politicians. He then proceeds to consider the psychology of the criminal and the best means of dealing with him. This is the important part of the article. The writer passes to and fro from censure of the crime to what I think I may not unfairly call admiration of the criminal. He emphasises the "quiet and even courageous determination of the assassins." He says: "Heroism may, according to some people, be too noble a word to apply to men guilty of such ignoble assassinations; but that there was a kind of courage in any case—an utter disregard of personal consequences even in these criminals, cannot be denied." Whence comes this determination? He ascribes it to the fact that they are not ordinary or hardened criminals but idealists of a type. He says that for this reason people pity them as "youthful and misguided enthusiasts" just as they pity a man who kills a faithless wife or a treacherous friend. The ideal they hold is that of seeing their people occupy a legitimate place in modern history and politics. He concludes that punishment and repression are not the right remedy for this evil; but a recognition by Government and the general public of their ideal (above referred to) as containing nothing wrong or criminal. "We shall then be able to convince these young men of the folly and futility of their ways."

Now I am very anxious to do no injustice to the writer but I can only understand his article as amounting to this. The political assassins are courageous young men animated by an ideal with which every Indian must sympathise, and with which no reasonable man of any other race could quarrel. The Government and public should recognise them as such and in place of punishing them, endeavour to convince them of the "folly and futility" of their ways (i.e., the assassination of their heroic fellow countrymen in the C. I. D.). This seems to me most pernicious writing; and writing which must tend to encourage political assassination by removing public detestation of such crimes. "New India" is presumably read by numbers of excitable young men animated (and not unnaturally) by the same ideal which the writer ascribes to the assassins, but which it is impossible for any right-minded person to connect with their crimes. Such young men are practically told that the assassins are pursuing the same ideal as themselves with singular courage and disregard of self: and that such criminals should not be punished but convinced of the folly of their ways. The article presents the assassins to such young men (and to the public generally) in a far more favourable light than any ordinary person would have viewed them in: and although it may not amount to incitement, it certainly seems to me to give encouragement to the commission of crimes which undoubtedly falls within clause (e) of section 4 (1).

As I have already said, we have nothing to do with the intentions of the writer. He may be perfectly sincere in reprobating the crime, while sympathising (as he undoubtedly does) with the criminal. We have merely to consider the effect of his writings.

I can only conclude that this article falls within clause (e) of section 4 (1).

I have now dealt with 10 of the 14 extracts, all of which seem to me to fall in one way or another within the mischief of section 4 (1) of the Act. I propose to briefly dismiss the others. It is not necessary to find that all the articles specified are of the same nature: and the remaining articles are such as, by themselves, to form at best a very doubtful basis for an order of forfeiture.

Extract No. 8 (Are Cæsar) is a protest against the order of the Bombay Government excluding petitioner from that Presidency: and I do not feel satisfied that we should be right in inferring a desire to arouse hatred simply from the single use of the term tyranny and the reference to the Royal Arms.

Extract No. 5 is taken from the Herald, a London newspaper: and is an impassioned defence of the conscientious objectors to military service. I fail to see how it has any tendency of the nature specified in clauses (a), (c) or (e) under all of which the learned Advocate-General would bring it.

Extract No. 3 is a comment on a serious dacoity in a village in Bhadrachalem Taluq, of the Godavary Agency. It is argued that the helplessness of the villagers to protect themselves is due to the operation of the Arms Act. As a matter of fact, it is now admitted that the Arms Act does not apply to the Agency tracts: and so had nothing whatever to do with the case under discussion. Nevertheless, the article is a comment on the operation of an Act and seems to me to fall under explanation II. It is a foolish article but I am not prepared to say that it was written with the intention of exciting hatred or disaffection.

Extract No. 4 series consists of 7 letters and articles dealing with trouble that has recently arisen in Madras owing to a popular idea that the reservation of Railway compartments for Eurasians and Europeans had been declared illegal. There is very little in the series except an Editorial note appended to a letter No. 4 (c). The correspondent had stated that he entered a reserved compartment but left it when ordered to do so by the Station Master and threatened with prosecution. The Editor says: "But why did you get out? It is this submission to illegality that causes half the troubles from which the Indians suffer."

Now the sole question is, what is the natural result and tendency of these words and how are they likely to be understood by the readers of the paper.

Petitioner explains that all she meant was that the correspondent should not have got out until the Railway Officials had used such show of force, as would justify him in bringing a test case to question the legality of the reservation. If that were the meaning of the words, I do not think that could fairly be brought within any of the clauses of section 4 (1). But is that the sense in which they would be understood by the ordinary reader? I cannot find anything in the series of articles remotely suggesting the testing of the legality of the Railway Company's action in this way. On the contrary, the three preceding articles all speak of the illegality of the reservation as if it were beyond question.

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

It is clear from the series that there was a great deal of popular excitement at the time which culminated in a riot [vide Extract No. 4 (g)]. It seems to me that it was the duty of any newspaper in counselling such modified resistance to the Railway Officials as would afford basis for a test case to make its meaning clear. Otherwise there was every danger of the words being construed as advice to resist by all possible means any attempt at eviction and if such were the tendency of the words they would fall within clause (c).

I am inclined to hold that the Editorial note to this article Extract No. 4 (d) does fall within the scope of section 4 (1): but that the rest of the series do not.

On the findings I have set forth above, I am of opinion that the petition should be dismissed and the order of forfeiture should stand.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The Press from which "New India" is printed has been in existence for over half a century. In it the "Madras Standard" was printed till July 1914. Mrs. Besant purchased the printing press as well as the good-will of the "Madras Standard" on the 14th of that month. From the 1st of August 1914, the name of the paper was changed into "New India." Mrs. Besant made the usual declaration under section 4 of Act XXV of 1867 on the 2nd of December 1914. It is admitted that no security was demanded from the petitioner at that time. On the 22nd of May 1916, the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Madras, informed her: "I hereby cancel my order, dated 2nd December 1914, dispensing with security in respect of the 'New India Printing Works' and require you under section 3 (1) of Act I of 1910, to deposit security for Rs. 2,000." It may be taken from this notice that the Chief Presidency Magistrate dispensed with the deposit of security at the time of the declaration and that he recorded his reasons under the proviso to section 3 of the Press Act when doing so. The security was furnished, and the paper continued to be published as before until the 2nd of August 1916, when the Local Government acting under section 4, clause (1), of the Press Act declared that "the security deposited in respect of 'The New India Printing Works, Madras,' and all copies of 'New India' wherever found to be forfeited to His Majesty."

The present petition was filed under section 17 of the Act to revise the said order. The first point taken by Mrs. Besant was that the order of the 22nd of May demanding security was illegal. Although there is a separate petition complaining against the levy of the security, the question has been raised in this case, presumably on the ground that if the Magistrate was wrong in his demand, there was nothing to forfeit and that consequently the order of the Government was void and of no effect. I have discussed the legality of the demand at some length in my judgment in Criminal Revision Case No. 661 of 1916;* I adopt the conclusion therein come to. The further point is, that even if the demand of security was illegal, whether that question is open in an application presented under section 22 of the Press Act. The answer to this question depends upon the construction to be placed on the section. That section lays down in general terms that a declaration shall be conclusive evidence as against all persons that the forfeiture has been incurred. I cannot accept the learned Advocate-General's suggestion that this clause must be read as declaring that the forfeiture has been legally made. It only enacts that the declaration is notice to all persons that the Government have declared the forfeiture. But the matter does not end here. The succeeding clause of section 22, which empowers the High Court "to call in question any proceedings purporting to be taken under the Act," leaves little room for doubt that our powers are restricted. The section refers back by the expression "such application as aforesaid" to section 17. Under that earlier section, the grounds of interference are confined to holding that the newspaper did not transgress section 4, sub-section (1). A party is not entitled to complain under that section that section 3, sub-section (1), has been violated. Mrs. Besant suggested that our rights of interference are not controlled by the grounds that are open to the party. But the foundation of our jurisdiction under the Act is section 17. It is a statutory right that we are asked to exercise; and we can grant relief only in respect of the grounds on which the party can seek our intervention. That is what section 19 distinctly lays down. That is also the view taken by the learned Chief Justice of Calcutta and by Mr. Justice Stephen. It is true that the language of section 22 reads as if all proceedings under the Act were liable to be revised by us. The apparent intention of the Legislature was that only such proceedings under the Act as lend themselves to attack on the grounds mentioned in section 17 should be revised by the High Court. It may be said that the Legislature must have known that proceedings under section 3 cannot be questioned on such grounds. I do not say that the language employed is apt. On the other hand the other construction would result in not attaching any meaning to the words "on such application as aforesaid" in section 22. The use of the expression "no proceeding purporting to be taken under the Act" may have been inserted ex majori cautela. We have to choose between not giving any meaning to a very important clause, and regarding another clause as somewhat inadvertently expressed. It was pointed out, by Coleridge, J., in R. v. East Ardsley (22) that a Court of Law should reject words as surplusage if it appears that, by "attempting to give a meaning to every word, we should have to make the Act of Parliament insensible." Lord Selborne used similar language. [See Hough v. Windus (23).] The true aim to be kept in view is to construe the Statute in such a way as to carry out its main intention. In doing that, inaccurate and loosely worded phrases have to be subjected to some pruning and adjustment. Bearing these propositions in mind, I am of opinion that proceedings under section 3 are not subject to our revisional jurisdiction under sections 17 and 22 of the Press Act.

*See 37 Ind. Cas. 607 Infra.—Ed.

ANNIE BESANT v. GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS.

The next point relates to the construction of section 4. Before dealing with the arguments on behalf of the Crown, I shall consider a preliminary objection raised by the petitioner. It was broadly contended at the outset that the whole Press Act was ultra vires of the Indian Legislature. But when it was pointed out that the petitioner herself invoked our interference under section 17 of that Act, she contended that section 4 of the Act at least was ultra vires. It was not Mrs. Besant's case that the Press Act offends any Act of Parliament. Her point was that the provisions of section 4 affected "the unwritten laws and constitution of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, whereon may depend in any degree the allegiance of any person to the Crown of the United Kingdom or the sovereignty or dominion of the said Crown over any part of the said territories." She argued that to declare property to be forfeited without first obtaining the decision of the Civil Courts in that behalf was an act of confiscation which interfered with the allegiance of the subject to the Crown. Mr. Justice Norman's observations in the Wahabi case [In the matter of Ameer Khan (24)] were relied on. The learned Judge, after referring to the Great Charter and the Bill of Rights, said: "Now if it be true, as laid down in Calvin's case (24), that protectio tribuit subjectionem et subiectio protectionem, that allegiance and protection are reciprocally due from the subject and the Sovereign, it is evident that the strict observance of the laws which provide for such liberty and security ensures the faithful and loving allegiance of subjects.....No man can study the history of England, or can read the great judgment passed by the High Court of Parliament by the Bill of Rights on King James II, without seeing that on the faithful observance by the Sovereign of the unwritten laws and constitution of the United Kingdom, as contained in the Great Charter and other Acts which I have mentioned, depend in no small degree the allegiance of the subjects. It would be a startling thing to find that rights of so sacred a character could be taken away by an act of the subordinate Legislature. It would be strange indeed if a great popular assembly like the Parliament of England had put into the power of a Legislature which has not, and in the nature of things could not have, any representative character the power of abrogating or tampering with such fundamental laws." The question in that case related to the right of the High Court to issue a writ of Habeas Corpus to produce a person detained in custody. It was held that the right of the subject to move the High Court was not taken away by any Act of the Indian Legislature. I do not think the observations above quoted can affect the present case. As Lord Justice Buckley pointed out in West v Gwynne (25), there is no presumption that an Act is not intended to interfere with existing rights. Most Acts of Parliament, according to the learned Lord Justice, interfere with existing rights. An Act of the Legislature in this behalf cannot be regarded as interfering with the allegiance of the subject. Markby, J., said in the appeal from the decision of Mr. Justice Norman in the same case [In the matter of Ameer Khan (26)] that an Act of the Legislature does not affect the prerogative of the Crown and conversely the allegiance of the subject, merely because it affects the liberty of the subject. The foundation of all criminal laws in India would be shaken to its root, if it is held that the Legislature has no power to enact laws depriving the subject of his liberty. So also with reference to property. It is possible to argue—I do not wish to commit myself definitely to an opinion on this matter—that any Act of the Legislature which permanently deprives the subject of his property without vesting in a judicial tribunal the power to pronounce on the legality or justice of the step taken may be said to strike at the root of the allegiance due from the subject. This question requires a great deal more argument than has been addressed to us; but under the Press Act, section 4, the subject is not deprived of the right of showing that the forfeiture has not been incurred. Instead of taking the decision of the Court first and then declaring the forfeiture, the process has been reversed; such a procedure cannot be said to affect the allegiance of the subject. The Indian Legislature has enacted other provisions of a similar nature, e. g., sections 88 and 89 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. I am of opinion that section 4 is not ultra vires of the powers of the Imperial Legislature. Mrs. Besant seemed to suggest that she carried with her to India her inherent rights under the Bill of Rights and the Great Charter; but she did not press the point.

I now turn to the construction which the learned Advocate-General sought to put on the various sub clauses of section 4 (1). I thought, at first, that he was asking us to put a very illiberal construction upon them; because, if accepted, it would make the publication of any respectable newspaper impossible; but on thinking over the matter, I am not sure that I have been fair to the learned Advocate-General. I do not think that the seriousness of the consequences is the right test. We have to administer the law as we find it. In my opinion, there is great force in the arguments for the Crown, although I do not accept them in their entirety. The language of the section is this: "containing any words, signs or visible representations which are likely or may have a tendency, directly or indirectly, whether by inference, suggestion, allusion, metaphor, implication or otherwise." The word likely refers to the probable inference that may be drawn; when that word is followed by the words "may have a tendency", the contention that the barest possibility of the words, etc., conveying a particular impression was contemplated seems not unreasonable. I asked, in the course of the argument, whether the probability or possibility should not be reasonable. The learned Advocate-General replied that a possibility is not generally reasonable. I do not think the word reasonable would be misapplied even to a possibility. I am not prepared to hold that what the Legislature had in mind was an unthinking, perverse and blind possibility and not a consequence, however far-fetched and remote it might be, which can be deduced by a reasonable human being. The process by which the inference is to be drawn is very tightly worded. When the probability or possibility is to be reached "directly or indirectly, whether by inference, suggestion, allusion, metaphor or ~~impersonation~~ or otherwise," it looks as if all egress is barred. The word otherwise is the finishing stroke. It is no wonder that the learned Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court pronounced the right vested in the High Court as illusory.

If the language had stopped here, I would have considered it a waste of time to examine the articles complained of, because by no stretch of ingenuity can they be said not to contravene one or the other subsections of section 4 (1). But there is explanation II, and it is mainly with reference to its language that the keeper of the press can expect to get some redress. The learned Advocate-General drew our attention to the difference in language between the explanations to sections 124A and 153A of the Indian Penal Code and the explanation to section 4 of the Press Act. The latter is impersonal, whereas the former apparently refers to the motives and intentions of the offender. There is much force in this observation. At the same time, I am not prepared to hold that the intention of the writer is of no consequence in applying the provisions of the Press Act. I adhere to the opinion which I expressed during the course of the argument that while the operative portion deals purely with the language employed, divorced from considerations of motive or intention, explanation II furnishes a ground of exemption, if it can be shown that there was no intention to excite or to attempt to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection. It is true that in the vast majority of cases the intention must be gathered from the language employed, but it is possible to show that what prima facie appears objectionable should not be given the meaning attributable to the words employed. The difference is very thin no doubt; but I think that the Legislature was contemplating in explanation II the possibility of proof by the person proceeded against that the intention to create disaffection was not in the mind of the writer. The other alternative would compel us to hold that whatever the motive, if the words employed have the remotest tendency to make a single unreasoning individual disaffected, the press should be forfeited. In other words, it is the forbearance of the Crown from taking steps under the Act that gives life to a respectable newspaper and not any protection which has been introduced into the Act by the explanation. I am unwilling to proceed on this basis.

The meaning to be attributed to the words "without exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection" is not free from difficulty. The learned Advocate-General relied upon the summing up of Strachey, J., in Queen-Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (17) in explanation of the various terms. I may say at once that I agree with the conclusion that the word disaffection is used in the sense of disloyalty. That was how Sir Comar Petheram understood it in Queen-Empress v. Jogendra Chunder Bose (21) and that was also the view taken by Mr. Justice Strachey. The learned Judge's interpretation of the words "hatred and contempt" requires more examination. This is what he says: "But if he goes beyond that, and whether in the course of comments upon measures or not, holds up the Government itself to the hatred or contempt of his readers,—as for instance, by attributing to it every sort of evil and misfortune suffered by the people, or dwelling adversely on its foreign origin and character, or imputing to it base motives, or accusing it of hostility or indifference to the welfare of the people,—then he is guilty under the section, and the explanation will not save him." With a good portion of the sentiments expressed in this sentence, I agree. Some qualifications are, however, necessary. The times have changed a great deal since the learned Judge delivered his charge. If I may use a very hackneyed expression, the angle of vision has changed largely. In a solemn document issued under the signature of a Viceroy, the legitimacy of the claim to have political autonomy in India under certain conditions was discussed. This implies that the time may come when Indians can be trusted to largely administer the affairs of their own country. The process may have to be gradual. But when the possibility is recognised, one cannot get away from the fact that it is the administration of non-Indians that would be replaced in the endeavour to reach autonomy. Consequently, when the learned Judge says, "dwelling adversely on its foreign origin and character" would make a man guilty of exciting hatred and contempt, I am not prepared to accept it, without qualification. In my opinion, suggestions to the effect that an indigenous agency would be more suitable in certain departments of the administration and should be more largely employed in others should not be regarded as exciting hatred or disaffection. Of course, language may be employed which may render this advocacy dangerous. But prima facie I would be unable to discern in criticisms of this kind an intention to excite hatred or contempt. I would also qualify the phrase which says that attributing indifference to the welfare of the people would amount to sedition. In Reg. v. Alexander Martin Sullivan (21) Fitzgerald, J., told the Jury "that a journalist may canvass and censure the acts of Government and their polity" [Piggott's case (26)]. The learned Judge also said: "A writer may criticise or censure the conduct of the servants of the Crown or the acts of the Government—he can do it freely and liberally, but it must be without malignity and not imputing corrupt or malicious motives. The law does not seek to put any narrow construction on the expressions used and only interferes when plainly and deliberately the limits are passed of frank and candid and honest discussion." In Sullivan's case (27), the same learned Judge cautioned the Jury thus: "It is not mere strong language, such as 'desecrated Court of Justice,' or tall language, or turgid language that should influence you. You should, I repeat, deal with the articles in a free, fair, and liberal spirit. You should recollect that to public political articles great latitude is given. Dealing as they do with the public affairs of the day such articles, if written in a fair spirit, and bona fide, often result in the production of great public good. Therefore, I advise and recommend you to deal with these publications in a spirit of freedom and not to view them with an eye of narrow criticism." I do not see why these salutary tests should not be applied in considering whether the articles in question are protected by the explanation. If criticism attributing indifference to the welfare of the people is couched in language which imports corrupt or malicious motives, the writers cannot escape. But if it aims only to draw attention to a weak point in the administration in the hope that the criticism may lead to the redress of grievances or the removal of a disability, I do not think the writing can be condemned. Subject to these reservations, I accept the summing up of Mr. Justice Strachey as fairly accurately explaining the words I have referred to.

The next argument dealt with the meaning to be attached to the various clauses of sub-section (1) of section 4. Before Mrs. Besant addressed the Court, in answer to a suggestion from the learned Officiating Chief Justice, the Advocate-General pointed out under what clauses the offending articles included in the declaration of forfeiture fell. I shall discuss the articles separately later on. At present, it is enough to say that almost all the articles were regarded as coming under section 4 (1) (c), while (a) and (e) were added to a few. The important question which might have necessitated a great deal of discussion was fairly solved by the admission of the learned Advocate-General that he had instructions to say that the discussion as to "Home Rule" was not per se objectionable. A reservation was made that the discussion might amount to bringing into hatred or contempt the Government established by law in British India, if the methods advocated to gain "Home Rule" and the language employed in pushing it forward were calculated to disseminate hatred or contempt. There can be no doubt that two essentials should be kept in mind in asking for changes in the machinery of Government. The allegiance to the throne and person of the Sovereign should be held as inviolate; and there should be no suggestion that the connection which makes India an integral part of the British Empire should be severed. Within these limits, it is permissible to ask that the details of the administrative machinery should be re-adjusted to meet the exigencies of the times. A demand for change there will be in the most perfect form of popular Governments. That demand ex-necessitate would show that the existing machinery is out of gear in some particular or other. In one sense such a criticism may excite disaffection towards the Government established by law. It is conceivable that there may be even dislike; but if the object is to re-arrange the personnel and even in a measure substitute new classes of men in the places occupied by the old, provided the advocacy is attributable to a genuine desire to strengthen the feeling of loyalty and the link that binds the Empire, there can be no room for saying that hatred, contempt or disaffection was preached. Mr. Justice Batty has given clear expression to this idea in Emperor v. Bhaskar Balvant Bhoputkar (11). This is what he says: "One particular set of persons may be open to objection, and to assail them and to attack them and excite hatred against them is not necessarily exciting hatred against the Government because they are only individuals, and are not representatives of that abstract conception which is called Government. Individuals come and go, but the Government is supposed to remain," and again at page 441*, the learned Judge says: "Changes in policy and changes in measures are liable to criticism, and to criticise and urge objections to them is a special right of a free press in a free country. The British nation has always specially boasted that it had a free press but the freedom of that press is conditional upon one thing; every liberty is given to all men to express their opinions, so long as they do not misuse or abuse that power to the injury of others, including, among injuries to others, injury to the State. It is only on that condition that it is possible to have a free press." I entirely agree. Stephen in his Digest of the Criminal Law says: "An intention to show that Her Majesty has been misled or mistaken in her measures, or to point out errors or defects in the Government or constitution as by law established, with a view to their reformation, or to excite Her Majesty's subjects to attempt by lawful means the alteration of any matters in Church or State by law established, or to point out, in order to their removal, matters which are producing, or have a tendency to produce, feelings of hatred and ill-will between classes of Her Majesty's subjects, is not a seditious intention." The demand that there should be alterations in the State is one of those claims which every law-abiding subject interested in the well-doing of the Government might legitimately advance. I am not to be understood as suggesting that the expression "Government established by law in British India" applies only to British Sovereignty and the British connection. I adopt Mr. Justice Strachey's definition of these words. He says: "It means, in my opinion, British rule and its representatives as such, the existing political system as distinguished from any particular set of administrators." It is the system of Government that section 4 (1) (c) contemplates, and not the persons who for the time being carry on the details of the administration. Clause (a) does not require much comment. A great deal will depend upon the language used. Clause (e) is not easy to define. The objects aimed at must be those which would render friendly co-operation between the different races living in India impossible. The language must be such as to lead to the breaking of the peace. Otherwise, any argument tending to suggest that particular persons are not carrying on the machinery of Government efficiently may be said to incite the people to interfere with the maintenance of law and order. Dissatisfaction with men and measures is believed in many quarters as a healthy sign of progress. It is not necessarily incompatible with a desire not to interfere with the administration of the law or with the maintenance of law and order. I propose to keep before me these principles in judging of the character of the articles complained of.

(27) 11 Cox Cr. L. C. 51.

On one other section of the Act, I shall say a word, before discussing the articles. When Mrs. Besant wanted to put in copies of other articles which appeared in the "New India" newspaper, the learned Advocate-General contended that it is only the Crown that is entitled to this right under section 20 and not the petitioner. I do not think such a contention can be upheld. The more serious question under the section is whether articles evidencing the general policy of the paper can be received in evidence. In my opinion, there must be some connection between the subject-matter of the articles tendered and of the articles which are objected to. The articles are to be received "in aid of the proof of the nature or tendency of the words, signs of visible representations contained in such newspaper". Speaking for myself, I would have rejected some of the articles tendered on either side as being unconnected with the views taken exception to. But, however, we have let in only such of them as either bear on the general policy of the paper or are connected with the subject-matter of the impeached articles. I am content to accept the decision come to by the learned Chief Justice on this question.

Now, I proceed to deal with the articles.

Extract No. 1—I gave expression; during the course of the argument, to my ideas regarding the inappropriateness of the language employed in this letter. It is ill-balanced and foolish. I am not, at the same time, able to attach to the language the sense which the learned Advocate-General imputed to it. To one reference in this letter, he attributed a meaning which I cannot but regard as far-fetched. This reference is to the "grim contest between Hiranya and Prahlada." I am afraid I must adopt the role of the Puranic storyteller for the nonce. The story is very familiar to the readers to whom, in the main, the paper is addressed. Hiranya was not a bad king. At least, I am not aware that it is with reference to his misrule the story has been told. Hiranya, in the Purana, symbolises the egotistic self. He is his own God. He says to himself and to others that there is none greater than himself. There is no God to whom Hiranya is accountable. His son personifies the abnegation of self—the subjection of the man to the dictates of the Supreme. From his cradle he lisps the name of God. In school, he invokes God's name. He infuses this spirit into his fellow students. The teacher is much upset and complains to Hiranya. At first, the father is contemptuously tolerant, then he coaxes his son into accepting his dogmas, then there is threat; violence afterwards, followed by every attempt to be rid of the stripling who defies all his cherished ideals. Even here, the father, by instinct of nature, resists the temptation to kill the boy himself. He employs other agencies. Even the fond mother is pressed into service; but all the machinations prove of no avail. The patient trust in God and the uncomplaining tenacity of purpose so exasperate Hiranya that he resolves to lay his own hand on his son. Before he takes the fatal step, he asks his son to point to the place where the God he worships can be found. The boy boldly replies, "He is everywhere." The irate father asks, "Is He in this pillar?" "Yes, He is everywhere" is the quiet answer. Then the father kicks the pillar violently saying, "let Him come out, if He is there". God does come out of the stone pillar and destroys Hiranya. This is the story recounted everywhere to prove the omnipresence of God and the immanence of righteousness and virtue. In the Hindu theology, Prahalada is the foremost of religious devotees.

Now in this story, Prahlada does not wage war against Hiranya. He does not kill his father. Prahlada is in the letter intended to represent the Indian, and Hiranya, the Anglo-Indian. It is clear, therefore, that the people are not incited to violence against the Anglo-Indians. If they behave like Prahlada, they must lead uncomplaining lives, leaving the justice of their cause to be vindicated in the fulness of time. I do not say that a certain amount of dislike will not be engendered by the comparison; but I do not think that hatred or contempt will be inculcated by the reference, if that story is understood rightly. Nor do I think that the Anglo-Indian will be incited to hate the people by his being depicted as Hiranya. The cultured few who represent that class are not likely to be led into a feeling of hatred or contempt by hysterical writing of this kind. At the same time, I cannot but condemn, in strong terms, the latitude which the writer has allowed himself in describing men and measures. Mrs. Besant, like most others, might exclaim, "Save me from my friends." She has rightly taken the responsibility for this effusion on herself, and while I am unable to see that the article is covered by any of the clauses of section 4 (1), I cannot help saying that it is a mischievous and an ill-balanced production.

Extract No. 2.—This letter lacks the adjectival exuberances which characterised the previous one; but portions of it are more culpable than the former. The paragraph in page 15 beginning with line 29 and ending with line 35 is unjustifiable. I think it is calculated "to bring into hatred or contempt" the Government of Madras. "Prussian aggression" and "atrocities in civic life in peaceful times" are expressions which cannot be condoned. Further, the sentence "that the missionaries are the parasites of the Government" is unwarranted. I hold that portions of this letter come under section 4 (1) (c). I do not think sub-clause (e) applies.

Extract No. 3.—I can see nothing wrong in this article. It is true, as pointed out by the learned Advocate-General, the article ignores the fact that the Arms Act does not apply to the Agency Tracts. But the subject-matter of the grievance is not what affects these tracts. The general sentiment is in no way incompatible with perfect submission to everything that the most fastidious can insist upon as being due from the subject to the Government.

Extract No. 4.—Here again, there has been a misunderstanding of the law as declared by the Punjab Chief Court. It is extraordinary that an overruled judgment should have been allowed to be the basis of comment so long. The learned Advocate-General has informed us that the decision in Mathradas Ramchand v. Secretary of State (1) on which these articles were based was reversed on appeal in April 1913 [Mathradas Ramchand v. Secretary of State (29)]. The articles were all written since the date of the appeal decision. There is no doubt that there has been a great want of judgment in the writer not having taken care to ascertain whether Mathradas Ramchand v. Secretary of State (1) was modified or set aside. I say nothing about the correctness of the law as expounded on appeal; but granting that the critic ought to have exercised more care and caution, I fail to see how hatred, contempt or encouragement to interfere with the administration of the law can fairly be attributed to these articles. I think they are covered by the explanation. The editorial note finding fault with the persons who walked out is only an exhortation to submit themselves to some personal inconvenience in order that the legality of the procedure adopted by Railway Companies may be tested in a Court of Law. I hold that these articles do not offend any of the provisions of section (1).

Extract No. 5.—This is a quotation from "Herald," London. At first, I was inclined to think that its place under the "Home Rule Section" was objectionable; but on carefully reading it through, I find that nobody is held up to hatred or contempt and none is encouraged to break the law. The burden of the article is "the price of liberty is death." It is a call to make heavy sacrifices; not an exhortation to use violence, but a call to stand at the post of duty even to the point of death, if the person is in earnest in securing rights. The theme is in the main religious. The martyrdom of Catholics, Protestants, and Atheists is extolled. They suffered death to testify to the strength of their conviction. It is the spirit of self-sacrifice that the "Herald" preached to the pacifist who refused to join the army corps. In inserting the article under the heading "Home Rule," the person responsible for the selection wanted those that advocated "Home Rule" to act in this spirit. I am unable to see in this article anything which brings it within the mischief of section 4 (1).

Extract No. 6.—This is strong writing. But I am unable to detect anything in it which is calculated to bring the Government into hatred or contempt. The word Prussianism has been objected to. In this article, it is applied to a particular journal and not to any class. I hold this article is not obnoxious to section 4 (1).

Extract No. 7.—As was suggested by the learned Officiating Chief Justice during the course of the argument, I read this article once again, forgetting, for the time being, that it was written by Bepin Chandra Pal. I am not able to detect its sinister import. If one reads a great deal between the lines and then begins to argue that the article is dangerous, he must be prepared for the answer: "You are not condemning my words, but words which you are interpolating." On the face of it, the writer points out how the political anarchists have not been brought under the grip of law, notwithstanding the severe measures taken to put them down. He suggests a new mode of dealing with their crimes. I am not able to spell out of this article an intention to extol anarchism and to invite unwary youths to commit acts of violence with impunity. I do not think that sub-clauses (a), (c) and (e) of section 4 (1) apply to this contribution.

Extract No. 8.—I hold this article comes under section 4 (1) (c). Mrs. Besant said that she wrote it under great provocation. That is apparent. To say that the "escutcheon" of the Bombay Government should have the words "Justice gagged, sable and gules," and the legend: "My strong arm and your wrong," is calculated to bring that Government into hatred and contempt.

Extract No. 9.—This article extols the Englishmen at home at the expense of those that have come out to India. I do not think this article contravenes section 4 (1) (c).

Extract No. 10.—This refers to the probable result of an internment order. The reference to four men "who are his personal enemies and who are his enemies in thought and belief" is undoubtedly misconceived. I am not prepared to say that the characterisation of the personnel of the Government as the personal enemies of the writer is calculated to excite contempt or hatred. I do not consider this article comes under section 4 (1) (c).

Extract No. 11.—I am satisfied that this article comes within the purview of section 4 (1). The statement that the arrest which was conceded to be legal is "truly unlawful" and breaks "the sacred Law of Justice which holds society together," is meaningless. But the sting of the article is in its tail: "Civilisation does not protect us; we should be better off in a state of savagery for then we should be on our guard, we should carry arms, and protect ourselves. We are helpless; we pay taxes to be wronged." The appeal to barbarism may incite violence, and the sentence "that we pay taxes to be wronged" is calculated to bring the Government into contempt, by suggesting that the taxes are utilised for oppression. I think this article is within section 4 (1) (c) and (e).

Extract No. 12.—This long extract from the "Commonweal" is not really objectionable. The reference to the Gita and the appeal to evince the true Kshatriya spirit are not intended to create disaffection. It is intended to whip up laggards. The gate of heaven, in this case, being the gate to "Home Rule", the exhortation is to the people to come forward at once, and not to lose the opportunity of gaining their rights. The suggestion is not to fight, but to take time by the forelock. The word "Prussianism" seems to have a fascination to writers of this school, but I am inclined to think that these men do not use the word with a knowledge of what it imports. Such catchwords are the stock-in-trade of writers aspiring to write to newspapers and other periodicals. The statement that "political petitioning and prayer should be abandoned" is not an appeal to give up constitutional methods, but an advice to proclaim rights without following it up by deputations for their enforcement. I do not think this article is impeachable under section 4 (1) (c) or (e). I certainly see nothing in it to bring it under section 4 (1) (a).

Extract No. 13.—Portions of this article are clearly objectionable. The suggestion that the Bombay Government is in league with Sir Valentine Chirol is certainly calculated to bring that Government into contempt. I hold this is covered by section 4 (1) (c).

Extract No. 14.—This article was written after the extraordinary meeting of the Senate of the Madras University. I am not able to see in it anything which brings it within section 4 (1) (c). The statement about insanitary surroundings refers to the agitation to provide hostels.

Apart from the legal tests, it is not easy to lay down any absolute rule by which the culpability or otherwise of these articles can be judged. Personal inclinations would necessarily play a great part in passing judgment upon a question of this description. Experience of life, and a knowledge of the modes of thought and of the activities which actuate men who, though engaged in politics, are honestly devoted to their Sovereign and are unquestionably endeavouring to promote good-will and a closer understanding between the rulers and the ruled, may also serve as guides. Even here temperament would play no mean part. Considerations like those I have mentioned have weighed with me in the main.

To summarise my conclusions I hold that Extracts Nos. 2, 8, 11 and 13 contain statements and sentiments which are calculated to bring the Government established by law into hatred or contempt and to interfere with the maintenance of law and order. It is not for me to say whether the punishment inflicted is necessary to expiate the offence. We have no right to apportion the quantum of punishment. I, therefore, hold that Mrs. Besant has not shown that the extracts I have mentioned "did not contain any words, signs or visible representations" of the nature described in section 4, sub-section 1. At the same time, I am clear that none of the articles to which our attention has been drawn has been written in a spirit of disloyalty to the Sovereign. If I may say so, they all aim at making India better understood and better appreciated. They undoubtedly very freely express disapprobation with the existing machinery of the Government. These comments, according to Mrs. Besant, were intended to make British rule in India more firmly established and to remove causes of discontent which may have a tendency to undermine the British connection. I have little doubt that this has been the policy of the paper; but what we have to see is, not whether the intentions of the Editor are praiseworthy and the articles themselves may ultimately help good Government and law and order, but whether the articles taken exception to are not obnoxious to section 4 of the Press Act. Viewing the four articles I have referred to from this point of view, I am of opinion that they do offend the Press Act. The petition must, therefore, be dismissed.

Petition dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 661 of 1916.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 542 of 1916.

October 18, 1916.

Present:—Mr. Abdur Rahim, Offg.

Chief Justice, Justice Sir William Ayling, KT., and Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar.

MRS. ANNIE BESANT—RESPONDENT—

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Press Act (I of 1910), ss. 3, 22—Government of India Act, 1915 (5 and 6 Geo. V, C. 61), ss. 106, 107—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 435—Security, imposition of, after being dispensed with, legality of—Order of Magistrate, whether judicial or administrative—Interference by High Court, powers of—Certiorari, issue of—Nature of writ—Jurisdiction of High Court—Letters Patent—Revision.

Per Curiam.—It is not competent to a High Court to interfere with the order of a Magistrate under section 3 of the Press Act, requiring security from the owner of a Printing Press either in the first instance or in variance of an order dispensing with security, either under sections 106 and 107 of the Government of India Act or under section 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. [p. 628, col. 2; p. 631, col. 2; p. 636, col. 1.]

Per Abdur Rahim, Offg. C. J., and Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—The words 'proceedings under the Act' in section 22 of the Press Act do not include orders passed by the Magistrate under section 3. Under the powers vested in it by the special provisions of the Press Act (sections 17 to 22) the High Court can call in question only orders of forfeiture though the general jurisdiction to issue writs of certiorari even in respect of orders passed under section 3 is not taken away by section 22. [p. 626, col. 2; p. 634, col. 2.]

A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to demand security from the keeper of a Printing Press under section 3 (1) after having dispensed with it in the first instance. The words 'may vary or alter any order', in the proviso to the sub-section, refer only to orders demanding security and not to orders dispensing with security. [p. 626, col. 1; p. 637, col. 2.]

The High Court, however, has no jurisdiction to issue a writ of certiorari to the Magistrate or to revise his proceedings under the Charter or under its powers under the Code of Criminal Procedure, as the orders under section 3 (1) of the Press Act are administrative and executive and not judicial. [p. 628, col. 2; p. 637, col. 2.]

The power to issue writs of certiorari to inferior Tribunals is not taken away from the High Court by the Press Act. [p. 626, col. 1; p. 636, col. 1.]

Per Abdur Rahim, Offg. C. J.—A High Court has jurisdiction to issue writs of certiorari in order to remove the proceedings of Courts or of persons entrusted with judicial functions out of the ordinary course of legal procedure for the purpose of quashing them. [p. 626, col. 2.]

The powers of revision and control are available only over the proceedings of ordinary Courts: while a writ of certiorari is issued not only to Courts but to Tribunals specially constituted and entrusted with duties of a judicial character. [p. 626, col. 2; p. 627, col. 1.]

Proceedings will not be removed into the superior Court by a writ unless they are capable of being determined there. [p. 628, col. 1.]

None of the provisions of the Press Act either singly or collectively have necessarily the effect of taking away the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court over the proceedings of the Magistrate if he is acting judicially. But having regard to the scheme of the Press Act and to the functions of the Magistrate under section 3 (1) and the large discretion vested in him, it follows that the proceedings under section 3 (1) are not of a judicial character, but of an Executive Officer entrusted with the performance of administrative functions. If an Executive or Administrative Officer acts in excess of his powers, such acts are not liable to be reviewed by the High Court, whether by means of a writ of certiorari or under its ordinary revisional powers. The only remedy open to an aggrieved person in such cases would be by an action. [p. 628, col. 2.]

Per Ayling J The provision in section 3, requiring the record of special reasons, does not apply to an order cancelling or varying an order. [p. 629, col. 2.]

It is open to a Magistrate, on the right construction of the section, to alter or vary an order dispensing with security. [p. 629, col. 2.]

The term 'proviso' as applied to the second part of section 3 is a misnomer. The sub-section must be treated as a whole and the words 'any order' cover an order dispensing with security. The sub-section is intended to give the Magistrate fullest discretion both as regards requiring security and determining the amount, and this discretion is to be exercised not once for all, but may be revised from time to time. [p. 629, col. 2; p. 630, col. 1.]

The words 'no proceedings purporting to be taken under this Act' in section 22 of the Press Act include proceedings under section 3 (1). [p. 630, col. 2.]

The jurisdiction of a High Court to issue certiorari is taken away by the Press Act both in respect of proceedings taken with jurisdiction as well as in respect of proceedings purporting to be taken under the Act. The Press Act is self-contained and complete and, though it is open to any one to argue that it is unnecessary or impolitic, effect must be given to what seems to be its plain meaning, and, by reason of section 2 of the Act, it is not open to the High Court to interfere with the Magistrate's order by virtue of any power which it possesses outside the Act. [p. 631, cols. 1 & 2.]

It is within the competence of the Legislature to take away from the High Court the power to issue a writ of certiorari. Whether the power is taken away absolutely or only in respect of proceedings with jurisdiction, must depend in each case on the wording of the Statute which takes the power away. [p. 631, col. 1.]

Bradlaugh, Ex parte, (1878) 3 Q. B. D. 509; 47 L. J. M. C. 105; 38 L. T. 60; 26 W. R. 758, distinguished.

Dubitante.—If it were necessary to decide the question, the proceedings of the Magistrate under section 3 (1) may be viewed as an executive act, and on that ground, even if the power of certiorari is not taken away by section 22 of the Press Act, the High Court will not interfere under sections 106 and 107 of the Government of India Act, the more so where the application is presented after long delay, relief under the said sections being discretionary with the Court. [p. 631, col. 1; p. 632, col. 1.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—A High Court has the same powers over persons resident within the local limits of its ordinary original jurisdiction as are exercised by the Court of King's Bench in England. [p. 632, col. 2.]

The freedom of the Press is not a 'licensed calling' but a common law right inherent in the subject, subject to certain limitations, and this right is not affected by the Press Act. [p. 634, col. 1.]

Re v Dean of St. Asaph, 3 T. R. 429n.; 100 E. R. 637; Re v Cobbet, 29 Stato Trials 41; Re v Reeves, (1796) Peake's Add. C. 84; 4 R. R. 871; Re v Gray, (1900) 2 Q. B. 36; 69 L. J. Q. B. 502; 82 L. T. 534; 48 W. R. 474; 64 J. P. 484; 16 T. L. R. 305, referred to.

It is not a condition precedent to the issue of a writ of certiorari that the Court issuing should be able to place itself in the position of the Court whose order is complained against. The writ may assume various forms. It is enough that in the exercise of its jurisdiction, it directs the lower Court to re-consider its order or judgment. The fact, therefore, that the High Court cannot place itself in the position of the Magistrate and itself fix the amount of the security is no bar to entertaining the application. [p. 634, cols. 1 & 2.]

The fact that the power to issue the writ is recognized in legislative provisions is not an argument for holding that the power does not exist ab initio. [p. 634, col. 2.]

Unless the power to issue a writ of certiorari is expressly taken away, it inheres in the Court. There is nothing in the Press Act which can be said, expressly or even by implication, to take away this power from the High Court. All that can be said is that the Act does not provide for the order under section 3 being revised. [p. 634, col. 2.]

R. v. Reeve, (1760) 2 Burr. 1040; 97 E. R. 696; R. v. Jukes, (1700) 8 T. R. 542; 5 R. R. 445; 101 E. R. 1536; R. v. Plowright, 3 Mod. R. 94; 87 E. R. 60, referred to.

Even if the right is taken away, the High Court can interfere, if there has been a want of jurisdiction in the inferior court. The reason of the rule is that the power prima facie exists in the High Court in all matters which are not within the cognizance of the inferior Court; and when this latter Court acts beyond its powers, it usurps jurisdiction which the High Court can control. [p. 634, col. 2; p. 635, col. 1.]

R. v. Gillyard, (1848) 12 Q. B. 527; 17 L. J. M. C. 153; 12 Jur. 655; 116 E. R. 965, referred to.

Prima facie an order passed by an officer who acts ordinarily judicially may be presumed to have been passed by him in that capacity. The officer need not be sitting as a Court to attach to himself judicial functions, nor is the fact that he may have to take evidence a test of his acting judicially. But the nature of the functions that a Magistrate has to perform under section 3 of the Press Act, which gives him an unfettered discretion in fixing the amount of the security without stating any reasons or taking evidence, shows that his proceedings thereunder are only ministerial. [p. 635, col. 2.]

The power to dispense with the security only qualifies the rule which imposes the security. The first part of the proviso to section 3 of the Press Act is a conditional avoidance of the antecedent clause to demand the security. It should be regarded as defence clause to the first part of the section. The second proviso naturally would govern the power to vary given in the second portion of the section. It is not reasonable to hold that an order which necessitated the record of reasons in its inception could be capriciously set at naught the next moment. A Magistrate has, therefore, no power to demand security after having dispensed with it at the time of the declaration. [p. 636, col. 2.]

A proviso may at times serve to introduce an exception. It is often in the nature of a condition precedent to the enforcement of the operative clause. It is doubtful whether it can ever add to the clause itself. The preponderance of authority is in favour of the view that a proviso annexed to a section should not be read as enlarging the scope of that section. [p. 637, cols. 1 & 2.]

Petition under sections 66 and 117 of the Government of India Act, 5 and 6 George V, Chap. 61, and section 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1893, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Egmore, Madras, dated the 22nd May 1916, calling on the petitioner to deposit security for Rs. 2,000 under section 3 (1) of Act I of 1910.

FACTS.—This case is connected with the previous case.* The facts are fully stated therein. The Government Solicitor wrote the following confidential letter to the Chief Presidency Magistrate before he called upon Mrs. Besant to furnish security on 9th May 1916:—"I have been instructed by the Government of Madras to move before you for the cancellation of your order made on the 2nd December 1914, dispensing with deposit of security in respect of the New India Printing Press, and I have the honour to request that you will allow me to attend before you in Chambers on Monday morning, the 22nd instant at 10 o'clock, if convenient, to lay before you the papers in support of my application. Mr. Williams of the C. I. D. will accompany me." The interview took place on 22nd May 1916 and notice was thereafter issued to Mrs. Besant calling on her to furnish security for Rs. 2,000 in fourteen days.

The petitioner applied to the Magistrate for inspection of the papers, but the same was refused.

Mr. C. P. Ramaswami Iyer, for the Petitioner.—The petition is presented under section 435, Criminal Procedure Code.—Your Lordships will permit me to move under section 106 also. I have given notice of this to the other side.

In regard to the Presidency Magistrate's Court, the High Court has got a right to issue a writ of certiorari. It is well known and exercised whenever inferior tribunals act ultra vires. By 39 and 40 George III, Chap. 79, the first Supreme Court was established at Madras with full powers to exercise all criminal and original jurisdiction. It is stated: "It is our further will and pleasure that the said Chief Justice and the Puisne Judges shall severally and respectively and they all or every one of them thereby appointed shall have such jurisdiction and authority as our Justices in the King's Bench have",...Under the Letters Patent issued under the Act of 1800, this High Court inherited as far as the Courts and Functionaries within the Presidency Town are concerned all the powers of the King's Bench. In the Act of 1861 the temporary Charter of 1862, the Act of 1865 and the Charter issued in 1866 in pursuance of that Act, these powers of the High Court have been preserved. Under Chap. 12 of the Charter Act, the High Court has jurisdiction over all proceedings pending in the Subordinate Courts. The Government of India Act of 1915 says that the High Courts shall exercise all such jurisdiction as are vested in the High Courts at the commencement of this Act.

*See 37 Ind. Cas. 525—Ed.

ANNIE BEFANT v. EMPEROR.

In the first place the order of the Presidency Magistrate was passed in violation of the jurisdiction conferred on him by the section; there is an utter absence of jurisdiction.

Secondly, if the Magistrate acted in this matter in any capacity at all, he acted as a Court.

Thirdly, if he is not technically a Court, the proceedings before him are judicial proceedings. The Magistrate puts the heading "Under the Press Act" but does not appear to act under it.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Even that I would not concede.]

[AYLING, J.—Surely he purports to act under the Press Act.]

Mr. Ramaswami Iyer.—He is purporting to act under the Press Act. At any rate that is the point for your Lordships to determine. Supposing under section 3 (1) he imposes a security on a person who has no Press at all, it is a question whether in so doing he purports to act under the Press Act or he is merely acting beyond any powers conferred on him. If he passes an order that is entirely out of his jurisdiction, this Court in spite of section 22 has power to revise it by certiorari even if he acts or purports to act under a special provision and even though all powers of revision are taken away. Further the Magistrate did not act under section 3. Therefore I have a right to have his proceedings revised.

[The Advocate-General.—Certiorari means removing a case from a Subordinate Court: it may be a pending proceeding.]

Mr. Ramaswami Iyer.—It need not be pending proceedings. There are various powers given to the King's Bench. In the Patna case the High Court revised under section 107 an order passed under section 3 (1) of the Press Act. They held that it is the Government that must move under section 3, clause 2, because it was an old press and that the continuity of the press was not affected by the change of proprietorship after 1910. They further said that the proceedings were irregular because the Magistrate acted instead of the Local Government.

Section 2, clause (a), of the Press Act says: 'Magistrate' means 'the District Magistrate or the Chief Presidency Magistrate.' The Criminal Procedure Code, section 6, says a Presidency Magistrate is a Court, that is the Magistrate referred to in section 3 of the Press Act.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—He is a Court. There is no doubt as to that.]

[The Advocate-General.—My contention is that the order in question is an executive order of the Magistrate.]

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Not, that he is not a Court.]

Mr. Ramaswami Iyer.—Then he is a Court. If in a Statute a public body or functionary is allowed to pass orders, his action in such a proceeding is a judicial and not an executive one.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Supposing the Government passes orders?]

Mr. Ramaswami Iyer.—If the Government has to pass orders on hearing both sides or on giving reasons, the order is judicial in character. It is clear from section 17 that the whole procedure ought to be judicial and not executive or administrative.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Do you mean the Magistrate or the Government?]

Mr. Ramaswami Iyer.—I deal with both. It is a fortiori case in the case of the Magistrate. Even if revision is specially taken away, a revision lies if the functionary acted without jurisdiction.

[SESHAGIRI Aiyar, J.—That will be apart from the Press Act.]

Mr. Ramaswami Iyer.—Section 17 indicates that the orders even of the Local Government are judicial in character. The section indicates that in demanding security or in the demanding of fresh security, the Magistrate or the Local Government is acting judicially and not executively.

ANNIE BESANT v. EMPEROR.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Have you got any case in which Government has passed orders?]

Mr. Ramaswami Iyer.—The Government of the country is constituted as a Court in regard to Agency Tracts. See Maharaja of Jeypore v. Gunupuram Deenabandhu Patnaick (1). There are many instances in which either the Local Government or certain departments of Government act as Courts and their proceedings are judicial proceedings capable of being revised. The power under section 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act is of a judicial character. See In re Siddeshwar Borul (2).

Even if the machinery is on the face of it administrative or executive, still if there are elements of a judicial enquiry, then the powers of the High Court can be invoked. Even in the case of an ex parte order it is possible that it may be a judicial order. It has been so held in the case of licenses to be issued by Municipalities. Notice to show cause must be issued on the general principle, audi alteram partem. That principle applies to proceedings under the Press Act. In the language of the Patna Judges, there must be a notice to show cause. There are a certain class of cases under the Criminal Procedure Code where all orders passed under section 145 coming within Chapter 12 of the Code are expressly exempted from the jurisdiction of the High Court by way of revision under section 435: see Hurbullubh Narain Singh v. Luchmeswar Prosad Singh (3) and Kamal Kutty v. Udayavarma Raja Valia Raja of Chirakal (4), but nevertheless if a person acts in entire absence of jurisdiction, the revisional powers come in.

There is a very instructive case of Natigal Telephone Company v. Post Master General (5). It decides that if to an existing Court certain functions are given by Statute, it must be taken that that Court gets those functions, unless there is something inherent taking away all powers under the Statute itself. See the judgment of Lord Parker at page 562. The judgment is not based on the fact that it is a Court of Record. The reasoning of the Lords would apply equally cogently whether it was a Court of Record or otherwise.

It is the duty of a person keeping a printing press to deposit a security between Rs. 500 and Rs. 2,000. But if the Magistrate has to cancel or vary, he must ask the petitioner to show cause why the order demanding security should not be passed. He has to fix it on some enquiry, and on certain materials which he has to call for.

Whenever a Magistrate is asked to exercise discretion so as to affect the right of property or status, he is thereby performing a judicial function. Even in fixing the amount my contention is that he must act judicially. Whatever that be, in regard to the dispensing with security before cancelling or varying the order under the sub-section, he has to give notice. For dispensing with security he has to give reasons. He is then acting judicially. It may be the Legislature might say that special reasons may or may not be recorded in a special class of cases but if the kind of act which he is required to do is one which involves the exercise of judicial discretion, it is a judicial proceeding.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Prima facie, a Magistrate to whom jurisdiction is given to pass certain orders will be a Court. If he is not to take evidence and if he does not give a judicial determination, we have to see in order to come to a decision whether the Magistrate is acting as a Court, what his functions are.]

Mr. Ramaswami Iyer.—All orders under section 3 are judicial. The proviso is an exception to section 3 (1). It gives powers of a somewhat wider and comprehensive nature. In Partridge v. General Council of Medical Education and Registration of the United Kingdom (6), a Medical Council had to act under certain powers in exercise of a discretion vested in them. When a public body is entrusted by an Act of Parliament with a duty which consists in the exercise of discretion, it cannot be said that it is merely a ministerial act. There is in Sharpe v. Wakefield (7) a case very near to the present. It was on the application for renewal of license for intoxicating liquors.

To hold otherwise would mean that under the Press Act the Magistrate is not entitled to give reasons for cancelling the order of exemption. If there is no appeal revision lies. In Hodson v. Pare (8) the argument was that none of the conditions attendant upon a judicial proceeding were present. Rex v. Wood House, Hyderabad Ex parte (9) is a case of licensing Magistrates. The case arose on an application for certiorari.

In Erudlaugh, Ex parte (10) there was a special Act which said that it shall not be removed by certiorari. In spite of that they were removed by certiorari. In King v. Justices of Somersetshire (11) it was not a pending proceeding. It was a quashing of the proceeding which had taken place before another body. Queen v. Wool (12) was a case under the Public Health Act of 1848 where conviction was quashed by certiorari because the Court had acted without jurisdiction. It was not a judicial body but it was a Local Board of Health acting in pursuance of certain Statutes.

In Queen v. South Wales Railway Company (13) a Railway Company for the purpose of giving compensation for land acquired had acted beyond a Statute; and a certiorari was issued to remove the whole proceedings.

Of the Indian cases, the latest case on the point is Vasudera Aiyar v. Devasthanam Committee of Negapatam (14), which was an order made under the Religious Endowments Act in regard to the nomination of one of the committee members. This judgment refers to a Privy Council decision, Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (15). Whether a Magistrate is acting entirely as a Court or not, if he is acting under a Statute and violates the Statute there is power in this Court to interfere.

In the case of In re Nataraja Iyer (16), a writ of this Court was applied for. It was an income tax case. In that case Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar and Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar came to different conclusions as to the right of the High Court to issue writs beyond the original jurisdiction. As to the writ of certiorari within the limits of this Court there was a concurrence. They refused the writ on the ground that there was another remedy open to the applicant in that case. In this case I have no other remedy.

There are several cases where writs of certiorari have been issued within the local limits. Pirbhai Khimji v. Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway Company (17), Reg. v. Nathalal Pitambar (18), Reg. v. Ramdas Samaldas (19). In Reg. v. Ramdas Samaldas (19) it was decided that the passing of the Criminal Procedure Code has not taken away the right to issue certiorari. It was held that there should be a special enactment to remove the right of issuing certiorari. In Colonial Bank of Australasia v. Willan (20) they refer to particular instances in which a writ could be granted. It is only where the Court is satisfied that there was want of jurisdiction that it can interfere by a writ of certiorari.

Going to section 3 of the Press Act and the provisos, 'an order under this sub-section' can only refer to the words in the sub-section and does not include the provisos.

There are two provisos. The normal state is to give security. The provisos relate to the sub-section and the second proviso does not relate to the first proviso. A proviso has to be construed with reference to a previous clause. There are two or three cases on the point. The first case is Duncan v. Dixon (21). That was a case under the Infants Relief Act. It might be said that the power to impose security between Rs. 500 and Rs. 2,000 carried with it the power to change it. Under the Act as it stood some security between the two amounts should be given.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Where is the power to dispense with security? You cannot call it an exception.]

Mr. Ramaswami Iyer.—A proviso need not necessarily be an exception. A proviso is something which has reference to the preceding portion and speaks as a kind of commentary to it.

In Stourbridge Navigation Co v. Dulleys, Earl of (22) the proviso was sought to be construed to enlarge the powers.

Where there is an enacting part, a proviso and another proviso, each of these provisos must be read as part of the enacting clause: West Derby Union v. Metropolitan Life Assurance Society (23). There is also West Derby Union v. Metropolitan Life Assurance Society (24), where there are two judgments of Lord Halsbury and Lord Watson. The Press Act is a penal enactment.

[AYLING, J.—What will be the effect of your argument? Is it that the Magistrate cannot alter or cancel his previous order as regards security?]

Mr. Ramaswami Iyer.—Yes. Section 12 gives the right to the Local Government to forfeit.

[AYLING, J.—Even if the press remains in the hands of the same person, if the Magistrate dispenses with security under section 3 (1), that dispensation cannot be altered and would be irrevocable?]

Mr. Ramaswami Iyer.—That would be my contention. It is impossible to speculate what reasons there could be for varying the order.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—You are assuming that he is acting as a Court. There is no evidence to be taken and no reasons to be given. The Act does not require it. I do not think that any Magistrate can give reasons.]

Mr. Ramaswami Iyer.—Supposing the Act itself says that for special reasons to be recorded he might dispense with security. Can he not be taken to be acting as a Court?

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—I do not know how he can be in regard to the other case.]

Mr. Ramaswami Iyer.—Once the security is dispensed with he has no power to cancel or vary the order. I am concerned with the case where an order has been made dispensing with security. That is a judicial order.

My contention in the petition has been that the Press Act is ultra vires, at all events section 4. I do not think I can contend that section 3 is ultra vires.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—We are not concerned here with section 4. If the Government seizes property unlawfully what is your remedy? You will have to sue for recovery of the property.]

Mr. Ramaswami Iyer.—If a person purports to act under a Statute but in violation of it, I can come to the High Court.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—That is another matter. Even under sections 17 and 22 of the Press Act you could come in. You cannot come in either under section 435, Criminal Procedure Code, or sections 106 and 107 of the Government of India Act.]

Mr. Ramaswami Iyer.—Whether it is ultra vires or not I can come in under sections 106 and 107 of the Government of India Act.

The whole question is whether a body is acting under statutory authority.

ANNIE BESANT v. EMPEROR.

Section 17 does not affect this matter at all. If the Act is not ultra vires, the fact that section 22 takes away the jurisdiction does not preclude the Court from revising the order or issuing a writ of certiorari.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—I want to know whether section 22, if an order of forfeiture has been made, has reference to an order under section 3.]

Mr. Ramaswami Iyer.—It begins by stating that no proceedings purporting to be taken under that section can be called in question except by the High Court. The whole section is with reference to proceedings consequent upon forfeiture and not proceedings by way of demanding of security or variation of security.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Section 22 includes anything purporting to be done under this Act.]

Mr. Ramaswami Iyer.—I would venture to dispute that, but it is unnecessary to go to that extent. It may be that, read as a separate sentence, it may protect the Magistrate against an action. But it is unnecessary to consider that, because I have not chosen to take any action against the Magistrate. Even if it be construed that the words "purporting to do an act" include proceedings under section 3, I contend that even that taking away of the power or the restriction upon the calling in question, does not take away the inherent right of the High Court to revise the proceedings if there is an absolute want of jurisdiction.

In Nundo Lal Bose v. Corporation of Calcutta (25) there is a decision on the certiorari power of the High Court to quash proceedings. That is a case where there was no Court. It is a case of an appeal against the rental fixed by the Calcutta Corporation. See also Proudfoot v. Montefiore (26). Jurisdiction was exercised where there was not necessarily a Court. Vijayaraghavalu Pillai v. Emperor (27) related to an order of a Presidency Magistrate in which the High Court had no jurisdiction to revise the order. The Magistrate was in the position of a referee between the President of the Corporation and the candidate for Municipal election.

The Advocate-General, for the Government.—The petition is under sections 106 and 107 of the Government of India Act and section 435, Criminal Procedure Code. My learned friend gave notice only this morning about asking for a writ of certiorari. The notice must be to the Magistrate.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—You appear for the Magistrate here and you might take notice of it.]

The Advocate-General.—Section 107 of the Government of India Act is really certiorari business and nothing but that. The powers of certiorari mean that. Instead of using that word, if it is interpreted that the English procedure of certiorari is kept alive apart from the Government of India Act and apart from section 435, Criminal Procedure Code, the practice is well established that the notice must be to the Magistrate. It is a mixing up of two different things. It is the records of the Court that should be removed here. There is no such thing as certiorari in the air.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—I want to know as regards the records of the Magistrate why they are sent here in a "confidential" cover.]

The Advocate-General.—I do not know.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J. opened the cover and showed the records to the parties.]

[Mr. Ramaswami Iyer.—This is a notice calling for security and this is the only order we have received. We now learn that the Government Solicitor made an application, but we did not know of it.]

The Advocate-General.—My submission is whether it is an application to your Lordships under section 435, Criminal Procedure Code, or under sections 106 and 107 of the Government of India Act, a writ of certiorari must be issued to a Court in respect of a judicial act.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—It need not be a Court.]

ANNIE BESANT v. EMPEROR.

The Advocate-General.—I do not say that section 107 limits it. Assuming it does not, it must be either to a Court or in respect of a judicial act. 10 Halsbury's Laws of England, page 171 and Rez v. Wood House, Ryder Ex parte (9) lay down that certiorari lies only in respect of judicial as distinguished from ministerial acts.

In every one of the cases cited there was a difference between two parties. That difference was referred to some party for determination and adjudication between the parties. In such a case as that there is undoubtedly a judicial function to be performed. My learned friend's contention is that the word Magistrate is used and, therefore, it is a Court. It is not that the Magistrate has to perform anything of a judicial function, but the Legislature has itself imposed certain rights and duties upon any person who wants to keep a press.

The Magistrate's act under the Press Act does not constitute a judicial proceeding. No Court is set in motion for the purposes of trying some offence, or convicting some person, or investigating some matter at issue between him and another person.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Nobody can prevent a person from opening a press.]

The Advocate-General.—This Act was borrowed from the Irish Prevention of Crimes Act. In France also such an Act was in force before the Third Republic. Certiorari necessarily means that a matter pending before a lower Court is brought up before your Lordships for the purpose of re-investigating the question and substituting the right judgment and in fact it is really transfer of cases generally. In cases of quashing it is for the purpose of remitting, for proceeding further with it by a certain judgment or certain convictions being suffered or even an indictment being removed. It includes the right of transfer under the Charter Act which was repeated in the Letters Patent of 1865. The Press Act confers on the Magistrate absolute discretion. How is this Court to say that the discretion was wrong?

What are the conditions and what are the grounds of jurisdiction in which the Magistrate is to exercise his discretion? Is he to find out anything in respect of the nature of the press, the estimated circulation of the paper or whether it is a weekly, daily or monthly? There is absolutely no clue even in the Statute. The scheme of the two Acts, XXV of 1867 and I of 1910, is that no person shall keep a press without a declaration. There are various offences which are laid down in the old Act which are triable in an ordinary way. The Act of 1867 says that there is a condition precedent before keeping a printing press lawfully. This Act imposes additional conditions. At the time of making a declaration the keeper has to deposit a security. The amount and other things are left entirely in each case to the Magistrate.

[SESHAGIRI Aiyar, J.—Does it not deprive a man of his liberty?]

The Advocate-General.—We simply ask a man to deposit security. In civil cases we ask for revenue. To ask a man to pay down a deposit is not depriving him of anything.

There has been no inclination of opinion on the part of any Court that even in the case of administrative and ministerial orders the Court of the King's Bench in England would have the power to remove a matter before it in order to quash it.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—In the Calcutta case it was in respect of Municipal assessment. Sir Richard Garth was in the Bench and that decision was not likely to go wrong.]

The Advocate-General.—It depends upon the particular terms of a Statute. In that case the valuation of certain properties had to be taken and it was contended that it was a judicial act. It depends upon how the assessment is fixed and upon evidence.

[AYLING, J.—Or upon certain fixed principles.]

The Advocate-General.—A writ of certiorari issues from a Superior Court and is directed to a Judge or other officer of an inferior Court to transmit the record to be there dealt with in order that the applicant may have more speedy justice. It means really a revision.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—If an order is bad for want of jurisdiction, you cannot proceed with it further.]

ANNIE BESANT v. EMPEROR.

The Advocate-General.—There must be an existing proceeding to be quashed. There must be some case, it may be an interlocutory order.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The order is the order requiring security.]

The Advocate-General.—It is not in connection with any proceeding pending before the Magistrate. The moment a declaration is made, there is no proceeding pending before the Magistrate.

[SUSHRIGRI AIYAR, J.—Supposing it is a judicial proceeding and the Magistrate has passed an order demanding security and the matter is taken up to us and we say that the Magistrate is wrong, is it not a case in which certiorari will lie?]

The Advocate-General.—That will be a case of mandamus and not certiorari. If a man does something which under the law he is not entitled to do, there would be a different principle.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Mandamus is only to an inferior authority to perform a thing. There is no question of quashing an order in mandamus.]

The Advocate-General.—Nor is there in this, because there is no cause or matter pending before the Magistrate.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Suppose the Magistrate heard evidence and then passed an order, would not certiorari lie?]

The Advocate-General.—Yes. Certainly.

In order that there should be a judicial proceeding there must be a cause or matter or pending proceeding.

No reasons are required at all when he is to make an order. Reasons are given when he contravenes a normal statutory provision.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Or if he cancels or varies an order.]

The Advocate-General.—No. It depends upon what the sub-section and the proviso show. With respect to each of the species of certiorari there are limitations imposed, but there can be no certiorari when there is no cause or matter pending in a Court.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Is a Magistrate's Court a Court of Record?]

The Advocate-General.—It has power of inflicting fine for contempt. I do not want to deal with the question whether it is a Court of Record or not. Most of these inferior Courts are by Statutes made Courts of Record. Certiorari does not lie in cases of this description. A deposit has been made. It is suggested that the deposit was made under protest. That does not make any difference. There is no evidence to show that there was a protest. This is not a case of an order requiring a person to make a deposit and the person resisting and asking for relief. The appellant made the deposit and if the deposit is a bad deposit which she was not bound to make and the Magistrate was not entitled to make under law, she is entitled to sue to recover that deposit. There is nothing to be quashed here. A writ can only be issued in respect of matters which are within the jurisdiction of the High Court, for proceedings will not be removed to a superior Court unless sure of being determined there.

There is a decision in Blamires v. Lancashire and Yorkshire (28). If a new offence is created a peculiar jurisdiction is prescribed. Outside the jurisdiction of the High Court certiorari will not lie. Certiorari is a common law right but if common law is transferred to new tribunals, the fact that new tribunals are created will not oust jurisdiction. But what is not a right or an offence is for the first time created and new authority and power is given; there is no such thing as certiorari in respect of that.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—There is no offence created?]

The Advocate-General.—Deposit of security is not an ordinary matter. It is a special matter prescribed by Statute and it is left to a special authority to deal with.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Certiorari will not lie except in matters cognizable in Common Law?]

The Advocate-General.—Yes.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—If there had been deprivation of jurisdiction by special legislation, then certiorari will not lie?]

The Advocate-General.—Yes.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—There are certain sections in the Press Act which refer to fines].

The Advocate-General.—Yes.—The Act creates an offence, but it is not made triable under the Act. The ordinary Courts have to deal with it in the ordinary way. Section 23 merely creates an offence.

ANNIE BESANT v. EMPEROR.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Is not the Press Act a self-contained Act?]

The Advocate-General.—So far as procedure is concerned it is self-contained; so far as declaring that failure to deposit the security is an offence under the old Act, it only declares a new offence. There being no common law in connection with the way in which security has to be deposited, it cannot be regarded as a matter pending before the Magistrate and any act in connection with that cannot be regarded as a judicial act. There are two cases on the point, Rudolf Stullman v. Emperor (29) and Gulli Sahu v. Emperor (30), which are in my favour. Section 3 (2) may stand on a different footing, where any opinion has got to be expressed or reason to be stated or where the Statute gives any indication as to what it is that should be done by the Magistrate. See Gulli Sahu v. Emperor (30).

The High Court has power to revise the orders of Magistrates on the ground that they are inferior Courts.

[AYLING, J.—Is there any reported case of this Court issuing certiorari?]

The Advocate-General.—Not that I know of. I may refer to Sivugami Achi v. Subrahmaniam Ayyar (31).

The writ of certiorari, as far as civil cases are concerned, is governed by section 145 of the present Code (section 622 of the old Code). In regard to criminal cases the writ of certiorari is regulated by section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code and section 107 of the present Government of India Act or section 15 of the Charter Act of 1861. They have exhausted all the jurisdiction of the High Court which can only call for the records but no revision lies.

The writ of certiorari is governed entirely by statutory provisions. It is no longer a common law remedy or anything of the kind.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Why should we regard that the right to issue a writ is taken away unless it is expressly repealed?]

The Advocate-General.—This is not a case where this Court can by itself issue a writ. The question is whether the Supreme Court had the right and exercised it by any statutory provisions. In cases of revenue, for instance, the Court of Exchequer in England always had jurisdiction and Justices of the Peace had civil jurisdiction in respect of assessment, rates and so forth. They were subsequently regulated by various enactments. My submission is that the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction in matters of revenue.

[SANKHARIBAI AYER, J.—Section 44 of the Letters Patent says it is open to the Governor-General-in-Council to legislate, not that the right is taken away from the High Court.

The Advocate-General.—I do not say that the right existed and that it was taken away, but what I am stating is that in construing the various Statutes by which the High Courts were constituted, your Lordships will have to look at the constitution of the High Courts as a whole and if there was an exhaustive provision made for that purpose, in that case you could not require any deprivation of inherent jurisdiction which a Court of Common Law in England would require.

In judging whether your Lordships have power under section 107, your Lordships must see whether it is an inferior Court. See Nundo Lal Bose v. Corporation of Calcutta (25).

Suppose inferior Courts deal with certain matters which were originally within the scope of the jurisdiction of the High Court but which are now summarily dealt with by the new Courts constituted. The jurisdiction of this Court to superintend inferior Courts will not be taken away. There is no doubt that the Presidency Magistrate is a Court and if he acts judicially he comes under section 107. See the leading case of Hartley v. Hooley (32).

The right of issuing certiorari was exercised by the superior Court unless it was taken away, because its power was sought to be set aside by barring the right of appeal and a new Court was constituted to dispose of such cases in a summary manner:

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—But what remedy has the man over whom jurisdiction is wrongly exercised?]

The Advocate-General.—A suit.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Unless the power of the High Court is taken away, the High Court can exercise the right.]

The Advocate-General.—Demanding of security does not touch any question of the right of a man. This right not known before, is transferred by the Act from the Common Law Courts to a new authority created by the Act.]

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Don't you come back to the same position whether it is a judicial act or not?]

The Advocate-General.—I am not speaking of offences. If a Magistrate is clothed with powers which are not recognised in the Common Law, can it be said that the Court of King's Bench or the Supreme Court had power to issue a writ?]

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Power to demand security is a penal provision.]

The Advocate-General.—When a Magistrate imposes fine or sends a man to prison it will be technically a penal Statute. I submit it is not a penal Statute so far as section 3 is concerned. As regards section 23 it is a penal provision when it says that if he fails to deposit security, he will be liable to a conviction. Nobody is compelled to keep a press and if you want one you must pay, if required.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Is it not the ordinary right of a citizen to keep any property he likes?]

The Advocate-General.—Supposing for the purpose of acquiring land you have to make certain declarations. You will have to register or you may have to take out Probate or heirship certificate and pay stamp-duty. All these are conditions precedent to the enjoyment of property. So the provision relating to security is not a penal one. It is no more penal than the various taxing enactments, which are to be met with before a man could acquire property. See 10 Halsbury's Laws of England, page 161, under this very head of certiorari and 6 American Cyclopaedia 739. It is not to be assumed that this extraordinary power could easily be invoked unless it is shown that such a jurisdiction has been previously exercised.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—If that proposition of yours is pressed, then I should say section 15 of the Charter Act gives us wider powers, because the Presidency Magistrate is an inferior Court.]

The Advocate-General.—The writ lies in cases in which Courts have jurisdiction. But the existing Magistrate is used for a new purpose unknown to the Common Law. My submission is (1) that the action of the Magistrate is not judicial and (2) even if it be a judicial act, it would depend on special legislation whether it created a new thing unknown to Common Law. See Gulli Sahu v. Emperor (30), In the matter of the Petition of Damma (33), In re Dalsukhram Hargovindas (34) and Chinnasawmy Iyer v. Emperor (35).

In Rex v. Lediard (36) it was held that no writ of certiorari lay against a ministerial Act. If the Chief Presidency Magistrate issues a warrant there can be no right to issue a writ.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—We have wider powers. We can quash his warrants. It was frequently done in Calcutta.]

[SESHAGIRI Aiyar J.—A warrant issued under the Gambling Act can be quashed.]

The Advocate-General.—Under section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code, your Lordships can do it. It is a question whether it is more than certiorari. What I would submit is that when this new provision was created, it must be taken to displace the old provisions.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—We can do that which we cannot do by certiorari.]

The Advocate-General.—This demand of security cannot be said to be charging a man with an offence. He cannot be in a better position than a man against whom a Magistrate issues a warrant.

The fact that a person may be a Court for some purpose does not make him a Court for all purposes. It will depend upon the particular kind of function he has to discharge. See Reg. v. Lucey, Ex parte Gosling (37).

A review of the English cases shows that it is only when a right or duty has to be investigated and the Court has to come to a decision on that investigation that there can be a judicial act.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Suppose the Magistrate dispenses with security and gives no reasons for doing so. Could we set aside that order on that ground?]

The Advocate-General.—I submit, not.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—He has to perform a certain duty and he fails to do it?]

The Advocate-General.—It is pure discretion. The reasons need not be examined.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The Magistrate is given certain power under certain conditions. He does not perform his duties.]

The Advocate-General.—That he dispenses with security may be for the information of the public.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—What is the remedy if the Magistrate does not perform his duty?]

The Advocate-General.—Mandamus.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The Magistrate has passed his order already and we are asked to quash it. It is a serious thing if a Magistrate who is empowered to do a duty fails to do it. There must be a remedy.]

The Advocate-General.—There may be many conditions precedent to the exercise of an administrative or judicial act. The conditions precedent do not necessarily make an act a judicial act instead of an administrative act.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—If he dispenses with security and gives no reasons, as a matter of fact the object of the Act is frustrated.]

The Advocate-General.—It is not; from time to time he may cancel or vary the order dispensing with security.

(37) (1897) 1 Q. B. D. 659; 66 L. J. Q. B. 308; 61 J. P. 388.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Suppose that does not apply to dispensation of security. So far as dispensation of security is concerned, he has got to give reasons.]

The Advocate-General.—Can it be shown that the keeper of a press, when he gives a declaration before the Magistrate, has any claim or particular grounds to ask the Magistrate to excuse him from security? He has no such right, he does not rely upon particular grounds, and the Statute merely leaves it to the Magistrate as a matter of discretion, and the security is required for the safety of the public or of Government.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Where is the necessity for recording reasons, unless it is subject to revision?]

The Advocate-General.—It is for the information of Government.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Can Government ask us to interfere when the Magistrate has not given reasons?]

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Is a Magistrate precluded from taking evidence by the Act? Supposing for the purpose of dispensing with security he wants to take evidence?]

The Advocate-General.—The Act does not contemplate taking evidence.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Why?]

The Advocate-General.—If he takes evidence it must be for his own information. The Act does not provide for his taking evidence. The declarant may say that he will pay security. If a person refuses to give evidence, can the Magistrate punish him?

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Certainly.]

The Advocate-General.—If he has an issue to decide and determine some right or duty he may have ample power to take evidence. Suppose documents are refused to be produced.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Why is he precluded from taking evidence? He has power to take evidence as a Magistrate.]

The Advocate-General.—If he exercises his duty as a judicial officer, undoubtedly he has power to take evidence. It is open to persons to refuse to give evidence.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Under the

ANNIE BESANT v. EMPEROR.

Criminal Procedure Code, he has full power to take evidence.]

The Advocate-General.—This is not under that Code.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—As regards calling for explanation, is there any provision?]

The Advocate-General.—There is provision for notice under the Act.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—How is the notice to be served?]

The Advocate-General.—In the manner provided for the service of summons.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Under the Criminal Procedure Code?]

The Advocate-General.—Yes, section 25 of the Act provides for that. I rely upon section to show that they are not judicial acts. See Sivagami Achi v. Subrahmanya Aiyar (31). The very fact that necessity is felt to protect Magistrates being proceeded against under section 22 shows that they are not judicial officers, because they would otherwise be protected by the Criminal Procedure Code.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—There has recently been a case in which a Magistrate has been sued for acting under the Criminal Procedure Code.]

The Advocate-General.—If they are judicial officers, they do not require protection.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—It is not only the Magistrate but the Government also requires protection.]

The Advocate-General.—The Government as such do not require to be protected, because the Government of India Act protects them and they are protected by Statutes of Parliament.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Cannot Government be sued for damages?]

The Advocate-General.—Not as such.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The Secretary of State?]

The Advocate-General.—He would not be responsible for the torts of these persons. The members of Government cannot be sued. The Government as such does not need this protection.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The State could be sued?]

The Advocate-General.—That was considered recently in this Court. That is a very different question. There are more than sufficient indications to show that it is merely a ministerial and administrative act and not judicial.

[SESHAGIRI AYYAR, J.—Although evidence is to be taken, it is an administrative act?]

The Advocate-General. Section 22 is wholly unnecessary if the Magistrate is acting as a judicial officer. The only question I have to deal with is whether certiorari would lie. Vinayaghavalu Pillai v. Emperor (27) is under the Madras City Corporation Act. It was held that there was no jurisdiction to revise the Magistrate's order as regards competency or otherwise of a candidate for election. It is not necessary that a Magistrate's order should be made in open Court and before the public.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Why do you say that?]

The Advocate-General.—A Magistrate has not to hear parties, and when an applicant comes to make a declaration, there is no evidence to be taken and nobody can say that the applicant should furnish security at the time of making the declaration. There are no words in the Statute to show that it is otherwise than pure discretion. There is nothing to show that these proceedings take place in public Court.

If this deposit of security is ultra vires, it could not be tested by means of proceedings against the Magistrate or Government. It could be tested by an action. See also Vasudeva Aiyar v. Devasthanam Committee of N. g. patam (4).

The reason for holding that no right of appeal lay was that they viewed it as a purely administrative act. Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (15). I shall now refer to the deposit made in this case and the stage at which objection was made to it.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—It is late in the day. You should have raised it earlier before it was opened.]

The Advocate-General.—The rule is that if a person does not object to jurisdiction and acquiesces in it and does a thing, there is an end of it.

It has been held that if a person acquiesces in a jurisdiction, then there is no question of certiorari. Rex v. Williams, Phillips Ex parte (38) and 6 American Encyclopedia 764.

ANNIE BESANT v. EMPEROR.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The only question is as regards delay.]

The Advocate-General.—This application was never thought of till the forfeiture was made. There was no objection to the jurisdiction. All that is said in the petition is that the deposit was made under protest. You may deposit under protest for various reasons. The petition does not state any objection to the jurisdiction. I submit that after depositing the security and after allowing it to go on, coming to this Court now and saying that there is no jurisdiction is not a permissible procedure.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—You ought to have taken this objection earlier. There is no limitation. It is left to our discretion.]

The Advocate-General.—There is no limitation to my taking it at any stage. It is a case of estoppel.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—What could the petitioner have done?]

The Advocate-General.—She could have refused to pay the money.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—And have gone to jail?]

The Advocate-General.—After the matter has reached another stage, it is no longer open to this Court to issue a writ of certiorari. I shall now deal with the merits. I have only to argue about the proviso and not on the question of ultra vires.

A proviso may be of various kinds. An ordinary proviso is of the nature of qualification of an enacting part. 'Section' is defined in the General Clauses Act. When it says 'under this sub-section', the whole of it is in that section. A proviso is always a part of a section.

In the words "Provided sub-section,"...the word may is twice repeated and it is divided by the word or. It is plain that it does not qualify the second part. The reason of it is plain. The Statute requires that security should be deposited. For dispensing with security some reasons are required; for not dispensing with it, no reasons are required.

(38) (1914) 1 K. B. 608; 83 L. J. K. B. 528; 110 L. T. 372; 78 J. P. 142.

It is the only construction that is possible. The only question is whether the word or should be read as and. The Magistrate has to do one of two things. If so they are not simultaneous. It is clear that no option is given to him that it may be repeated. The words "Cancel or vary" assume a prior stage—a point of time—and the words "from time to time" show that the cancellation and variation could be repeated. It cannot be read as merely an alternative power conferred upon the Magistrate. He has not got to make up his mind to do this or that.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—In one case you say he must record reasons and that in the other case he need not.]

The Advocate-General.—In the first case the keeper of a press shall, at the time of making the declaration deposit so much amount as the Magistrate may in each case think fit to require. Fixing the amount is done under the first part of the section itself. He is required by the Statute itself to deposit security and the Magistrate is required to fix the amount.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—If he cancels the order fixing the amount, is he not departing from the Statute? There will be no security after he has cancelled it.]

The Advocate-General. A mere cancellation or variation will not be a dispensing with security.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—What is the substantial difference? You are put in the position of being without security.]

I am inclined to doubt if it is admissible at all to read 'for special reasons to be recorded by him' as applicable only to the first part.]

The Advocate-General.—The intention of the Legislature can be gathered only from the words. The expressed intention of the Legislature requires reasons in one case. It may be said that there is no symmetry or uniformity.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Why don't you read that comma after 'him'? You either dispense with security or from time to time cancel or vary it.]

The Advocate-General.—The word is may.

[SESHAGIRI AYYAR, J.—If there is no comma?]

The Advocate-General.—I do not want to deal too much with commas. The question is what is the meaning of the words 'any order'. It is not 'any other order'. The word 'or' is used loosely. I cannot be certain if 'and' would be better. The words 'from time to time cancel or vary' indicate that an order can be made after an order is made under the first part of the section and then the process can be repeated. The second order made is made under the proviso. 'Any order under this sub-section' includes an order under the second part of the proviso.

Any order means 'every order'. One of the orders is dispensing with security. It is not one power that is given. It is two powers. The first part of it must be at the time when the declaration is made. The second part of it is subsequent. To say that he must choose between one or two alternatives when the point of time is different will reduce the proviso to absurdity.

The word or may be read as and when the thing is required to be so read. The latest case is Walker v. York Corporation (39), [Ditcher v. Denison (40)]. It is a question of context.

The reason why and is not put in is that there is the word 'provided.' That is very loosely done. If it is read as and that would also mean the same thing. It is a simple illustration of the laxity of the English language. Though there is no previous relative clause the words 'and which' are used very loosely by the best English writers. There cannot be dispensing with security when there is no deposit. Security is to be deposited at the time declaration is made. If at that time or means one of two things which the Magistrate can do, then I submit the second thing will be impossible.

What is the exact position of the proviso is important. It is plain that it cannot be an exception to what goes before. It is not a qualification but an addition. A recent case relied upon was Rhondda Urban Council v. Toff Vale Railway (41).

(59) (1906) 1 K. B. 724; 75 L. J. K. B. 413; 94 L. T. 744; 54 W. R. 493; 4 L. G. R. 524; 70 J. P. 270; 22 T. L. R. 456.

(40) (1857) 14 E. R. 718; 11 Moore P. C. 324; 6 W. R. 342; 1 Deane & Sw. 334; 117 R. R. 32.

It was stated there that a proviso meant, whether it started with the word 'provided' or not, that all parts of the enactment must be read together. What was laid down in Reg. v. Bishop of Oxford (42) is that an ordinary proviso may be a qualification.

Lord Herschell does not mean that a proviso would help the construction of a section if the section itself is clear. There is one class of cases in which provisos may be explanations. In Natesan Chetty v. Vengu Nachiar (43) this view is taken. Really there is nothing to prevent a proviso being regarded as a fresh enactment. If this is to be read as a substantive enactment itself, it is perfectly obvious that the word or would cause no difficulty whatever. It gives two powers to the Magistrate, viz., power to dispense with security and power to cancel or vary.

Assuming that I am wrong even on the merits, section 22 of the Press Act is a bar to this petition. That section will apply to any proceeding or order. It will apply to all cases under the Press Act. It has been construed in Mahomed Ali v. Emperor (44) to preclude the Court from going into the legality of a forfeiture.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Section 17 deals with cases of forfeiture.]

The Advocate-General.—Section 22 is not confined to mere forfeiture. The words 'no proceedings purporting to be taken under this Act' cover a variety of proceedings. 'No proceedings' may include also forfeiture. The section does not say 'no proceeding subsequent to forfeiture.'

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Can proceeding under section 4 be called in question by section 17?]

The Advocate-General.—The proceeding must be of the same nature as this.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Read it as 'no proceeding requiring security or forfeiture'—what will it mean? It has no meaning at all. There is no sense in saying that under section 17 you call in question a proceeding under section 3.]

The Advocate-General.—Any proceeding shall not be called in question by any Court, etc.—that is a general proposition.

Every section has to be read with the previous sections. Except as provided in sections 17 to 19 no proceeding shall be called in question. Forfeiture orders are allowed to be questioned, and the High Court can question them.

[AYLING, J.—You say it blocks jurisdiction under sections 106 and 107 of the Government of India Act?]

The Advocate-General.—Certainly. The whole point is the construction of section 22.

[AYLING, J.—The argument was that it does not block the revisional jurisdiction.]

The Advocate-General.—The argument was that "proceeding" did not mean "subsequent proceeding." [Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes, page 213.] Where there is a new duty created by Statute, there is no ouster of the jurisdiction where the Court had any. Section 22 is quite plain and it ought to be given full effect to and cannot be whittled away by reading it in any other way. In R. v. Burah (45) the legislative power of the Governor-General was recognised by the High Court for the purpose of taking away jurisdiction or adding to jurisdiction. It cannot be regarded as if it must be treated as a subordinate legislation in a different sense, so as to say that the Government of India Act preserved this and that it cannot be affected by Indian legislation. Section 21 gives new powers to the High Court, prescribes new procedure and except to the extent of offences created, the Press Act is an exhaustive Code in itself and provides for service of notices, for bar of action, for immunity of officials and exhaustively deals with everything, and the whole scheme of the legislation is to oust jurisdiction except to the extent shown in section 17, and even the High Court has to constitute a Special Bench.

Mr. C. P. Ramaswami Iyer, in reply.—When lower tribunals overstepped their limits of jurisdiction it was held that the High Court could issue the writ. Section 22 does not apply if the Magistrate has acted entirely without jurisdiction or acted in a manner not consonant with natural justice.

[AYLING, J.—Even if he acted in good faith, there may be a remedy.]

Mr. Ramaswami Iyer.—A private party having a remedy does not help us. To say that I have a right of action to recover the security would not meet my case. The earlier part of section 22 has no application.

[AYLING, J.—Only if a person goes to the Magistrate to make a declaration, he is called upon to give security.]

Mr. Ramaswami Iyer.—Supposing that in respect of a certain press which does not come under section 8, a person who is registered as printer is also registered as the keeper of the press and he is asked to give security in flagrant violation of section 8, there is no remedy. To reject that untenable and illogical contention, your Lordships will have to take the scheme of the Act into account and read section 22 in the light which I place it. "No proceeding" must have reference to forfeiture. To import any other construction will be to make a party remedyless in a large class of cases. "On such application" means application under section 17, which is only to revise an order under section 4. Bradlaugh, Ex parte (10) is a case where under the Statute a right of applying to the High Court by a writ of certiorari was expressly taken away. In spite of that, they said that it applied where a normal course is taken by a Magistrate. Certiorari is one method of invoking the revisional jurisdiction of this Court. I use section 106 of the Government of India Act as retaining, or keeping alive the old jurisdiction that this Court might have. To say that the jurisdiction of the High Court is taken away by implication, one must show that it is a necessary implication.

Section 106 of the Government of India Act enacts that the power of superintendence is to be given to the High Court. If section 107 is exhaustive, section 106 is unnecessary. My learned friend somewhat laboured the question as to judicial acts. 10 Halsbury's Law of England 161 says that certiorari also lies to remove the determination of persons or bodies entrusted with judicial functions out of the ordinary course of legal procedure but within the scope of the Common Law.

In Rex v. Wood House, Ryder, Ex parte (9) "judicial act" is defined: "Writ of certiorari is an ancient remedy...In a large number of cases it rests on Common Law. The phrase 'judicial act' must be taken in a wide sense including many acts not judicial" The term "judicial act" is used only in contrast with purely administrative acts. The use of the word Court and the words judicial act must be taken in the widest sense. If they exceed those statutory powers then certiorari has application. My learned friend in one portion of his speech referred to new Acts constituting new offences and new remedies. The new Licensing Act came into force in 1904 and yet certiorari lay. In Queen v. Wood (2) it was simply held that a person who put forward an account would be amenable to the Court's jurisdiction, Reg v. Denton (41). In Rex v. Sunderland Justices (47) it was held that whether it was a Court or not, if it is a statutory body its act is a judicial act. That decision was followed in Rex v. Johasim (48). The origin of certiorari is defined by Lord Halsbury, and the limit of its operation is defined in that case.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—Do you contend that it gives us larger powers than we have under the Charter?]

Mr. Ramaswami Iyer.—I would say that section 107 may give powers equally large with certiorari.

Section 107 says that the High Court has powers of superintendence. Magistrates are normally under your Lordships' supervision under section 105. If it is held that under a special Statute a Magistrate is not subject to the jurisdiction of the High Court, there might be a residuary jurisdiction under section 107. If for the purpose of the Press Act, the Magistrate is not subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court, it is open to me to contend that an officer or Court is subject to the appellate jurisdiction as he is a person whom the High Court may call upon to explain certain acts. I guard myself against a narrow construction of section 107.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—A writ has to be issued to show cause.]

Mr. Ramaswami Iyer.—The order is quashed first and he is called upon to show cause why that order of quashing should not be made absolute. In English cases, both the procedures are adopted. I come back to the real question in the case, viz., whether it ought to be construed to be a judicial act. On that point, I desire to say that if that portion of the section or provision points to a judicial act, it cannot be said that the varying or cancelling order is not a judicial act. An act may be ministerial if it only made an appointment. Cancellation or variation of an order involves the bringing into play of judicial qualities.

A curious fact came to light when the confidential papers were seen in Court here. Mr. Brightwell moved for an order. I did not know of it when the petition was put in. The papers are not found now, because they are not material papers according to the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate. What happened shows that it was a judicial act done by the Presidency Magistrate. Mr. Brightwell moved judicially and the learned Magistrate seems to have regarded it as a private interview. Where it is an act of Court, it is a judicial act when materials are brought before him and he makes an order. That appears to be the irresistible conclusion to be drawn from the section itself, where it is laid down that for special reasons to be recorded the Magistrate may dispense with the deposit of security. Surely, any construction that makes the section a creature of caprice will not commend itself: it must be based on some kind of reason or common sense. This Act does not give despotic powers to the Magistrate.

There is no provision made for payment of interest on the security deposited, if a man's property is dealt with, is it open to my learned friend to say that we have to give all our property and that there is no determination between two parties? Suppose the Magistrate acts on hearsay, his order can be set aside by certiorari. See Emperor v. Gulli Sahu (49). In spite of special enactments ousting jurisdiction of the High Court, the High Court exercised jurisdiction when Courts acted without jurisdiction. My submission is that Emperor v. Gulli Sahu (49) and Gulli Sahu v. Emperor (30) taken together lay down the true principles on which I ask your Lordships to decide this case. Vasudeva Aiyar v. Devasthanam Committee of Negapatam (14), a Municipal case, decided two well-defined grounds. Under the Act the Magistrate was constituted merely as referee between the President and the candidate for election. The second ground is that, under the Act, no penalty is given if there should be disobedience of that order. My submission is that there is a penalty in this order allowing of an inference that it is a judicial act. The next argument adduced on the other side was that all these things were regulated by section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code and that it was no longer a common law remedy. I say that orders of appointment or dismissal are a class of discretionary matters in which the judicial element may or may not enter. There is no use saying that if an unfettered discretion is given you must consider the nature of the act itself. If a Statute went to the extent of saying that a certain officer shall appoint men of such and such qualifications and he does not appoint such men, it would make a difference. Dalsukhram Hurgovindas, In re (34) was decided on the ground that it was a civil liability. Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (15) was a case in which the appellate jurisdiction was invoked. Searching the judgment through and through no other jurisdiction could be invoked. If there was a right of certiorari, it was not likely they would have omitted to say so. The decision is no authority for the two propositions put forward, firstly, that there was no right of revision and secondly, that it was not a judicial act.

(49) 21 Ind. Cas. 993; 41 C. 400; 14 Cr. L. J. 678; 18 C. W. N. 869.

If they had said that it was merely an administrative matter it is hardly likely that the Judges in Vasudeva Aiyar v. Devasthanam Committee of Negapatam (14) would have revised the order. In Shankar Sarup v. Mejo Mal (50) with reference to rateable distribution being administrative, a suit alone lay for redress. Taking section 3 and section 23 together, taking the use of the word order, taking the use of the words special reasons to be recorded, what is contemplated is the exercise of discretion and not exercise of mere whim and caprice, and if it is so whether it is strictly a Court or not, the Judge has to exercise a judicial act.

I am content with an adjudication that the imposing of security is wrong. It may be that I might sue for return of Rs. 2,000, or might not. But it is open to your Lordships—I do not say that there is an obligation on your Lordships—if in a matter of this kind your Lordships are satisfied that there has been a substantial error in the exercise of jurisdiction, or there has been an excess of jurisdiction, your Lordships will interfere.

I come finally to the proviso. A proviso is not an enactment of substantial law. There are two exceptions, the two ways in which the operation of the section is sought to be modified. The normal feature is security. But security may be dispensed with or security may be varied or cancelled. My argument may be put thus; supposing the Statute stood without the first proviso or the 2nd proviso stood first. The words 'or may' are important. The use of those words indicates that one or the other may be read with the preceding clause; if the word 'or' can be meant as 'and', why should we whittle down the terms of the section?

The last argument is with reference to the reasons to be recorded. I ask your Lordships to suppose that the words 'if he thinks fit' 'for special reasons to be recorded by him' are in brackets; then, would your Lordships find it difficult to read it? It does not make bad grammar. "Provided the Magistrate may dispense with the deposit of any security, or may, from time to time, cancel or vary any order under this subsection"—this is not such bad grammar as the Advocate-General would make it. In section 8 there are two provisos, and there also the exact language is used. The draftsman has a partiality for the words "or may."

ORDER.

ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—This petition is under sections 106 and 107 of the Government of India Act, 5 and 6 George V, Chapter 61, and section 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, asking us to revise the order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate requiring deposit of security from the petitioner. I have already dealt with the contention of Mrs. Annie Besant in the petition under section 17 of the Press Act and held that the order was made in excess of the power conferred on the Magistrate but that there was no provision in the Press Act itself which would enable us to revise the order.

Under section 106 of the Government of India Act which continues in this High Court all the powers and authority already vested in it, we are asked to quash the proceedings of the Magistrate by means of a writ of certiorari. The old Supreme Court of Madras which is now absorbed in the High Court had all the jurisdiction and authority of the Court of King's Bench in England, which included the power to issue writs of certiorari. (See 39 and 40 George III, Chapter 79, and the Letters Patent of 1800.) That power has been preserved to the Madras High Court by the High Courts (Charter) Act, 1861, the Charter Act of 1865, Letters Patent, Madras, 1865, and lastly the Government of India Act, 1915. It is not shown that this jurisdiction has been taken away by any Act of the Legislature, which could only be done by express words or by necessary implication.

I find nothing in section 22 of the Press Act which can be said to have deprived the High Court of this power. Section 22 says: "Every declaration of forfeiture purporting to be made under this Act shall, as against all persons, be conclusive evidence that the forfeiture therein referred to has taken place, and no proceeding purporting to be taken under this Act shall be called in question by any Court except the High Court on such application as aforesaid..." The first part, I have no doubt, does not refer to the validity of an order of forfeiture but to the fact that it has been made. And I do not see how it is possible to read the words "and no proceeding purporting to be taken under this Act" as including any order of the Magistrate under section 3 (1), otherwise the passage would run thus: "and no proceeding purporting to be taken under this Act including an order of the Magistrate under section 3 (1) shall be called in question by any Court except the High Court on such application as aforesaid." This would make no meaning. The application referred to therein is an application under section 17, that is, to set aside an order of forfeiture, and that clearly shows that the proceeding in contemplation of the Legislature is a proceeding under section 4 and under similar sections of the Act and not a proceeding under section 3, which has nothing to do with forfeitures at all. This may be an omission on the part of the Legislature but we have to give effect to the Act as we find it.

There can be no doubt whatever that this High Court has jurisdiction to issue writs of certiorari in order to remove the proceedings of Courts or of persons entrusted with judicial functions out of the ordinary course of legal procedure for the purpose of quashing them. It was stated at the Bar that no instance of the issue of such writs by this Court is to be found on record. But that would not extinguish the jurisdiction. It is true, as pointed out by the Advocate-General, that many of the powers which the King's Bench exercises in England by means of writs of certiorari have been expressly conferred upon the High Courts in India by different legislative enactments, such as section 15 of the Letters Patent, section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code, etc.

But these powers of revision and control are available only over the proceedings of ordinary Courts: while a writ of certiorari is issued not only to Courts but to Tribunal specially constituted and entrusted with duties of a judicial character. For instance in England the proceedings of Censors of the Royal College of Physicians, of the Commissioners of Sewers, of Canal Commissioners, of Sheriffs and of Licensing Justices have been held to be subject to the writ. Writs of certiorari have also been issued by the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts. In Nundo Lal Bose v. Corporation of Calcutta (25) an assessment made by the Commissioners of the Town of Calcutta was removed to the High Court by a writ of certiorari and quashed by Chief Justice Garth and Justice Wilson. The learned Judges in that case do not appear to have entertained any doubt whatever that they had jurisdiction to issue the writ. The first and essential question on this application is whether the taking of security by the Magistrate under section 3 (1) of the Press Act was a ministerial or judicial Act. If the former, it is conceded that we cannot interfere even by a writ of certiorari much less under section 435, Criminal Procedure Code, or under the power of superintendence which we possess over the inferior Courts under section 107 of the Government of India Act.

That the writ lies only with respect to judicial acts is well established (see Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 10, paragraph 338). Whether an act is judicial or not depends on the nature of the powers conferred by the Legislature, the character of the act sought to be quashed and the nature and extent of the discretion vested with the authority and other similar considerations. Our attention has been drawn to many English cases in which writs of certiorari have been issued by the King's Bench in England. In some of them it looks as if the line of differentiation between a judicial and administrative act was very faint. But whether any particular function was of a judicial character or not in those cases depended on the provisions of the particular Statutes concerned and no good purpose would be served by reviewing them.

Now what are the functions of the Magistrate under section 3 (1) of the Press Act? Every keeper of a printing press is required to deposit security and all that the Magistrate has to do is to say what should be the amount of security, provided it is not less than Rs. 500 or more than Rs. 2,000. The matter is left entirely to his discretion and so is the question whether he should or should not cancel or vary any order that he may make in this connection. He is not required to hear the owner of the printing press or to take any evidence. He is not to conform to any conditions or formality before passing any such order. In fact it cannot be said that there is any "case" or "cause" before him which he has to adjudicate upon. The discretion which is vested in him, such as it is, is absolute; it has all the attributes of an executive and not a judicial discretion. I do not see how it would be possible for any one, asked to revise such an order as the Magistrate is empowered to pass, to say whether it is proper or not. No doubt when a Magistrate dispenses with the deposit of security, he can do so only for special reasons to be recorded by him. Having regard, however, to the whole scheme of the Act, I do not think that those reasons are required in order to enable the High Court to make any pronouncement upon them. They are apparently required for the information of Government. What is also of importance in judging of the intention of the Legislature as to whether the proceedings of the Magistrate under section 3 (1) are to be regarded as judicial in character or not is the provision of section 22, by which Magistrates purporting to act under the Act are especially exempted from all civil or criminal liability. That would not have been necessary if the Magistrate in exercising his powers under section 3 (1) were acting as a judicial Tribunal.

The Indian decisions which approach at all near this case are Sivagami Achi v. Subrahmaniam Ayyar (31), where it was held by a Full Bench of this Court that the proceeding of a Court under section 257 of the Code of Civil Procedure settling a proclamation of a sale of property in execution is of an administrative and not of a judicial character, Shankar Sarup v.

ANNIE BESANT v. EMPEROR.

'Mejo Mal (50), where an order of distribution under section 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure was held by the Privy Council to be in the nature of an administrative act, Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (15), which decides that no appeal lies from an order of a District Judge appointing a member of a committee of a temple, and Vijayaraghavalu Pillai v. Emperor (27), in which it was held that the High Court has no jurisdiction to revise an order passed by a Presidency Magistrate in an enquiry held by virtue of the rules framed by Government under the Madras City Municipal Act, III of 1924, as to the competency or otherwise of a candidate for a Municipal election.

Mr. C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar, who argued the case of the petitioner with great ability, referred us to a number of decisions of the Calcutta High Court in which they set aside orders of District Judges declaring certain persons to be touts within the meaning of the Legal Practitioners Act. It is perfectly clear from section 36 of that Act that the function to be exercised by the Courts mentioned therein is judicial in nature. They have to hear the persons sought to be proceeded against and to take evidence and their order must conform to certain conditions.

The other contention of the Advocate-General that proceedings will not be removed into the superior Court by a writ unless they are capable of being determined there, is also well established (see Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 10, paragraph 335, page 170, and the cases cited there). None of the matters which are left to the determination of the Chief Presidency Magistrate by section 3 (1) of the Press Act are such that this Court would be in a position to deal with at all satisfactorily. A writ is granted only in respect of matters which but for some especial legislation creating especial Tribunals would have been within the ordinary jurisdiction of the superior Court. The Press Act has conferred upon the Presidency Magistrate novel powers which were never known to be exercised by this Court or by any Subordinate Court in the land. He is to take security from every person keeping a printing press and it is left entirely to his discretion whether to dispense with the security or not. There need be no question of the likelihood of the owner of the press committing any offence or doing any acts to the injury of the public or of any individual, as in the cases covered by Chapter VIII of the Criminal Procedure Code.

I may also notice here the contention of the Advocate-General that the Indian Press Act of 1910 is a self-contained enactment. He points out that it provides for its own rules of procedure and evidence (see sections 21, 25) and section 20, creates a special Court of Appeal for revising certain orders passed under the Act (section 18) and expressly limits jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts in respect of the principal matters dealt with by the Act (section 22). None of these provisions, however, singly or collectively have necessarily the effect of taking away our revisional jurisdiction over the proceedings of the Magistrate if he was acting judicially.

The Legislature, however, in delegating to the Magistrate the functions under section 3 (1) does not regard him as a Court, but as an Executive Officer entrusted with the performance of certain administrative duties. If an Executive or an Administrative Officer acts in excess of his powers, such acts are not liable to be reviewed by the High Court, whether by means of a writ of certiorari or under its ordinary revisional powers. The only remedy open to an aggrieved person in such cases would be by an action.

The petition is dismissed.

AYLING, J.—This is a petition presented on behalf of Mrs. Annie Besant, Editor of "New India" and keeper of the "New India Printing Works." It is connected with Ordinary Petition No. 122 of 1916.* In that petition presented under section 17 of the Press Act (I of 1910), we were asked to set aside the order of forfeiture of security passed by the Madras Government on 25th August 1916 under section 4 of the same. The present petition, which was presented during the hearing of the other, asks for the cancellation of an earlier order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, dated 22nd May 1916, in which he required petitioner to deposit; security, to the amount of Rs. 2,000 under section 3 (1) of the Act. This security was duly deposited; and is the security which was declared forfeited by the order of Government dated 25th August, 1916.

*See 37 Ind. Cas. 525—Ed.

ANNIE BESANT v. EMPEROR.

The main ground alleged in the present petition for setting aside the Chief Presidency Magistrate's order is that it was passed without jurisdiction; but section 7 of the petition runs:—

"7. That the order of the Magistrate is further invalid because the Press Act, or in any event section 4 thereof is ultra vires of the powers of the Governor-General in Legislative Council."

This was not seriously pressed. We have nothing to do here with section 4. If, as is suggested, the whole Press Act is ultra vires and of no effect, it is open to petitioner to seek her remedy in the ordinary Courts. It is no possible ground for the exercise of our revisional jurisdiction.

The contentions of Mr. C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar, who argued the case very ably and fully for the petitioner, may be summarised as follows:—

A. That the order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, dated 22nd May 1916, was ultra vires, because, by a previous order dated 2nd December 1914, he had passed an order dispensing with security in respect of this press, and had thereby exhausted his powers under section 3. He could not afterwards "cancel or vary" it.

B. That it is open to us to set aside the said order, dated 22nd May 1916, in exercise of our powers under sections 106 and 107 of the Government of India Act of 1915.

(Section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code was also referred to in the petition; but was not relied on in argument; as adding anything to the above).

C. That we should exercise our power and set the order aside.

It is not suggested that we can order return of the security; but that our order will set petitioner free to pursue her remedy further at Common Law.

Each of these positions requires careful examination.

The first, A, depends on the proper construction of section 3, (1) of the Press Act, which runs as follows:—

"Every person keeping a printing press who is required to make a declaration under section 4 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, shall, at the time of making the same, deposit with the Magistrate before whom the declaration is made security to such an amount, not being less than Rs. 500 or more than Rs. 2,000, as the Magistrate may in each case think fit to require, in money or the equivalent thereof in securities of the Government of India:

Provided that the Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, for special reasons to be recorded by him, dispense with the deposit of any security or may from time to time cancel or vary any order under this subsection."

It is beyond dispute that on 2nd December 1914, the Chief Presidency Magistrate passed an order under the first part of the proviso dispensing with the deposit of any security for the petitioner's press. The contention is that this order is irrevocable; and that, once it is passed, the press is exempt from all possible liability for security under the Act as long as it remains in the same hands.

It is argued (1) that the words "any order under this section" do not cover an order dispensing with security; and (2) that the proviso merely gives the Magistrate an option of two alternatives (a) to dispense, (b) to cancel or vary, of both of which he cannot avail himself.

Some argument was also devoted to the question of whether the clause requiring the record of special reasons applied to an order cancelling or varying. I feel no doubt whatever that they do not. Their position, enclosed between the words "may" and "dispense," to my mind clearly indicates that their operation is limited to an order dispensing with security. If the first "may" followed instead of preceded the words "if he thinks fit, for special reasons to be recorded by him", it would be different.

Now, returning to the first argument above recited, it is, I think, clear that the term "proviso" as applied to the second paragraph of sub-section 3 (1) is a misnomer. As pointed out by the learned Officiating Chief Justice in the course of argument, the effect of the paragraph is simply to give the

ANNIE BESANT v. EMPEROR.

Magistrate additional powers over and above those conferred by the first paragraph. To quote from Lord Halsbury: "The substance, and not the form, must, however, be looked at, and that which is in form a proviso may in substance be a fresh enactment, adding to and not merely qualifying that which goes before." Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 27, page 137.

This being so, the sub-section must be treated as a whole; and there is no reason why the words "any order" should not cover an order dispensing with security. As the Advocate-General very pertinently argued, had the intention of the framers of the Act been that ascribed to them by Mr. Ramaswami Aiyar, in place of "any order under this sub-section", we should have "any other order under this sub-section". There is no reason why we should read into the "proviso" the word "other" as petitioner's case requires us to.

Just as the first argument requires the insertion of the word "other," so, it seems to me, the second argument requires the insertion of the word "either" after the first "may." It is hardly necessary to say that where a person is by Statute empowered to take a course A or take a course B, the one is not necessarily exclusive of the other and in fact will not be, unless there is something to suggest a choice between two alternatives. There is nothing of the kind here: and the words "from time to time" are strongly against such an interpretation.

The sub-section may not be a triumph of draftsmanship: but its meaning seems to me to be reasonably clear. It is designed to give the Magistrate the fullest discretion both as regards requiring security and determining the amount: and this discretion is to be exercised not once for all, but may be revised from time to time.

If this be, as I think, the true construction, then the order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate passed on 22nd May 1916 was perfectly legal.

Passing then to the second point B, supposing that the order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate of 22nd May 1916 was bad for want of jurisdiction by reason of his previous order dated 2nd December 1914, what powers of interference do we possess?

The petition as originally presented referred us to section 107, Government of India Act, 1915, which is substantially identical with section 15 of the Charter Act, but at the outset of the hearing petitioner was allowed leave to add section 106 of the same. The object was to include the power of interference by way of certiorari which was said to be covered by the latter section. Neither side were able to refer us to a single instance in which this power has been exercised by this Court, and whether section 106 really adds anything to the powers of superintendence under section 107 was the subject of much argument: as also whether this was a case of the class to which writs of certiorari apply. The main difficulty in petitioner's way is, however, section 22 of the Press Act. This runs as follows:—

"Every declaration of forfeiture purporting to be made under this Act shall, as against all persons, be conclusive evidence that the forfeiture therein referred to has taken place, and no proceeding purporting to be taken under this Act shall be called in question by any Court, except the High Court, on such application as aforesaid, and no civil or criminal proceeding, except as provided by this Act, shall be instituted against any person for anything done or in good faith intended to be done under this Act."

The second clause which I have italicised is the important one, and everything turns on the effect to be given to it. It seems to me to be absolutely comprehensive. To quote the language of Jenkins, C. J., in connection with another section of the Act, "its language is as wide as human ingenuity could make it."

I cannot for a moment entertain the suggestion that it only applies to proceedings by way of forfeiture. There is nothing to support such a reading. The language is clear "no proceeding purporting to be taken under this Act", and it must be held to include the proceedings of a Magistrate under section 3 (1).

I must also reject without hesitation the argument that the Chief Presidency Magistrate's order dated 22nd May 1916 did not purport to be one under section 2 (1). A perusal of this order itself is sufficient.

Mr. Ramaswami Aiyar has, however, argued that in spite of this section, the power of the Court to interfere by way of certiorari is left unaffected, provided the proceedings were taken without jurisdiction. The case mainly relied on by him is that of Bradlaugh, Ex parte (10), in which the learned Judges held that a section in an Act of Parliament taking away certiorari did not apply where there was an absence of jurisdiction, or, as Cockburn, C. J., put it, "where the application for the certiorari is on the ground that the inferior Tribunal has exceeded the limits of its jurisdiction."

I have very carefully considered this decision, but it seems to me that the principle therein enunciated is not applicable to the present case. Whether the power of interference by certiorari is taken away absolutely or only in respect of proceedings with jurisdiction, must depend in each case on the wording of the Statute which takes the power away. No one contends that it is not within the competence of the Legislature to take it away altogether; and in cases of a newly constituted offence or liability, it might, without any undue jealousy of the power of the Court, elect to do so. It is in this connection that the greatest importance attaches to the words in section 22 "proceeding purporting to be taken under this Act." There is nothing corresponding to this in 2 and 3 Vict., C. 71, the Act which was relied on as taking away the certiorari in Bradlaugh, Ex parte (10). This, as it seems to me, makes all the difference. The reason underlying the decision above quoted and others to the same effect is thus concisely stated by Lord Halsbury: "Although certiorari is taken away, it may be granted even on the application of the defendant, where the inferior Court has acted without or in excess of jurisdiction, for in such a case the Court has not brought itself within the terms of the Statute taking away certiorari."

Here the jurisdiction of this Court is equally barred in respect of proceedings purporting to be taken under the Press Act, as in respect of proceedings taken under the said Act with jurisdiction.

There is really nothing very startling in this view of the matter. The Press Act is an entirely new enactment brought into force in the interests of public tranquillity and imposing novel liabilities on the keepers of presses and publishers of newspapers, chiefly in the matter of security. As far as can be seen it is self-contained and complete: and reference to the Courts of Law is only left open by section 23 (which relates to prosecution before a Magistrate for failure to deposit security) and applications to this Court under section 17. As regards the latter, sections 17—21 limit most carefully the scope of the enquiry and the nature of the order to be passed; they also provide for the constitution of a special Tribunal, and for the enactment of special rules for its procedure, together with a special provision as regards evidence (section 20). Apart from this, section 22 bars the jurisdiction of all Courts as regards proceedings purporting to be taken under the Act. It is open to any one to argue that the enactment is unnecessary or impolitic: but there is nothing which would justify us in refusing to give effect to what seems to be its plain meaning. I am of opinion that by reason of section 22 it is not open to us to set aside the Chief Presidency Magistrate's order.

Either of the above points is sufficient to dispose of the petition: and I only add a few words because they are both points on which I have the misfortune to differ from the learned Officiating Chief Justice and from my learned brother, Seshagiri Aiyar, J. There remains the question of whether the order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate is of such a nature that we could interfere with it under section 106 or 107 of the Government of India Act, even if we were not prevented by section 22 of the Press Act. This is a matter in which I feel considerable doubt, due chiefly to the very wide interpretation given by the English Courts in numerous cases to the expression "judicial act." I recognise, however, the force of the arguments on the other side: and will merely say that if it were in my view necessary to determine this question I should not be prepared to dissent from the conclusion arrived at by the learned Officiating Chief Justice and

ANNIE PESANT v. EMPEROR.

Seshagiri Aiyar, J. I would, however, prefer to base my decision on the grounds set forth above.

I may add that, even assuming that we possess the power of interference under either section, it would still be, to me, a matter of grave consideration, whether that power should be exercised in this case (Point C). I am not prepared to accept the Advocate-General's contention that by depositing the security as required by the order, petitioner waived her right to subsequently question its validity. But if the order was illegal, it was open to her to petition this Court the very next day to exercise its powers under sections 106 and 107. Instead of this she took no action whatever till more than three months later when the Government, proceeding on the assumption that the initial order of the Magistrate was valid, took further steps under section 4 and forfeited the security. In other words, she waited until the matter had reached another stage altogether before questioning the legality of the order.

Our exercise of these extraordinary powers is always discretionary; and I doubt whether in such circumstances we should feel called upon to exercise our power.

I would dismiss the petition.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—This is an application to revise the order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate calling upon the petitioner to deposit security. Mr. C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar asked the permission of the Court, at the outset, to include section 106 of the Government of India Act of 1915 among the provisions of law he relied on. The point argued related to the powers of the High Court to call up and revise the proceedings of the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate. Before dealing with the specific questions discussed, a short resume of the history of the jurisdiction of the High Court over such matters may be given.

In the Letters Patent establishing the Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras, dated 26th December 1800 (39 and 40 Geo. III, Chap. 79), it was stated that the Court "shall have such jurisdiction and authority as our Justices of our Court of King's Bench have, and may lawfully exercise, within that part of Great Britain, called England, as far as circumstances will admit." By 24 and 25 Vict., Chap. 104, the High Court was constituted. Under section 9 of the Act it was provided that "the High Court to be established in each Presidency shall have and exercise all jurisdiction and every power and authority whatsoever in any manner vested in any of the Courts in the same Presidency abolished under this Act at the time of the abolition of such last mentioned Courts." By section 8, the Supreme and the Sudder Courts were abolished, and the records of those Courts became "records and documents of the High Court established in the Presidency". It is thus clear that the High Court inherited all the powers which the old Supreme Court had. Section 10 which deals with the powers exercised over persons living beyond the local limits of the original jurisdiction need not be considered in this connection. The Letters Patent accompanying the charter distinctly enacts by section 16 "that the said High Court of Judicature at Madras shall have the like power and authority with respect to the persons and estates of infants, idiots, and lunatics, whether within or without the Presidency of Madras, as that which is now vested in the said Supreme Court of Madras." Then came 28 Vict., Chap. 15. The Letters Patent issued with reference to this Statute re-enacted by section 17 the powers given already, and stated that the powers hitherto "exercised before the publication of these presents" shall vest in the High Court. The consolidating Act of 1915 confirms the said powers by enacting that the High Court shall have such jurisdiction "as are vested in them by Letters Patent, and, subject to the provisions of any such Letters Patent, all such jurisdiction, powers and authority as are vested in those Courts respectively at the commencement of this Act." It is apparent from these recitals that the High Court has the same powers over persons resident within the local limits of its ordinary original jurisdiction as are exercised by the Court of the King's Bench in England.

Mr. Ramaswami Aiyar's contention was that as the Chief Presidency Magistrate is subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court, his order demanding security should be revised by us. He asked us to issue a writ of certiorari against the Magistrate's proceedings. The solution of this question involves the determination of the following among other points:—

A. Is the writ in form and substance available to the petitioner?

B. Is our jurisdiction taken away by virtue of the provisions of section 22 of the Press Act?

C. Is the Chief Presidency Magistrate, in performing his duties under the Press Act, amenable to our jurisdiction?

D. Is the action of that functionary illegal or irregular?

As regards the first of these questions, the learned Advocate-General argued that as the Press Act created a new kind of liability which cannot be said to correlate to any of the Common Law rights possessed by the subject, this Court, inheriting the rights of the Court of the King's Bench, had no right to interfere. One broad proposition was advanced that the right to keep a press was not an inherent right of every subject. The learned Advocate for the Crown suggested that the right to have a press is analogous to the right to carry on any trade or profession and consequently, a license should be obtained in that behalf. This argument is so opposed to all ideas of free press and of free speech that we asked for some authority for this proposition. The learned Advocate-General referred us to what obtained during the Third Republic in France and to the Press Laws passed in Ireland when the Coercion Acts were in force. The preamble to the Press Act does not say that this is an emergency measure passed to steer the country during times of apprehended danger. The Act is apparently a permanent addition to the Statute book, intended to regulate the conduct of the press during peaceful and normal times. I do not think that the exceptional circumstances which made the authorities in France and Ireland regard the use of free speech and free writing as exercisable only on licenses obtained thereto have any analogy. In England, the law is clear that the right of free writing is a Common Law right. The early law on the subject is fully stated by Professor Blake Odgers in his article on the Liberty of the Press contributed to 8 Encyclopædia of the Laws of England, page 155. At its inception, Kings, Peers and Priests unaccustomed to the sarcasms printed against them resolved that printing presses should be under the King's supervision. Then a company of certain merchants was given the privilege of keeping a press. Afterwards the universities were each allowed to have one. In the days of Queen Elizabeth, the publications issuing from the press had to be read over by the Bishops and the Privy Councillors. In 1637 the Star Chamber decreed that all printed matter should be submitted to licensers. After the abolition of the Star Chamber, the Long Parliament passed similar decrees. Against this Milton protested in his famous work, "A Speech for the Liberty of Unlicensed Printing." In 1695, when the revision of Statutes came up before the House of Commons, the law of the Long Parliament was omitted from the Statute book after a conflict with the House of Lords. From that year onwards, the liberty of the press has not been interfered with. This short statement about the legal history of the English Press shows conclusively that the freedom of the press is not a "licensed calling," but a Common Law right inherent in every subject, subject to certain limitations. Lord Mansfield in Rex v. Dean of St. Asaph (51) said that "the liberty of the press consists in printing without any previous license, subject to the consequence of law." The principle recognised in England is that so long as free writing does not offend the law of libel, the press is unfettered. Lord Ellenborough in Rex v. Cobbet (52) stated: "The law of England is a law of liberty, and, consistently with this liberty, we have not what is called an imprimatur; there is no such preliminary license necessary. But if a man publish a paper, he is exposed to the penal consequences, as he is in every other act, if it be illegal." "The power of free discussion," said Lord Kenyon, C. J., in Rex v. Reeves (53), "is the right of every subject of this country." The latest pronouncement on the subject is that of Lord Russell of Killowen, C. J., in Reg. v. Gray (54). He said: "the liberty of the press is no greater and no less than the liberty of every subject of the Queen." Professor Dicey in commenting upon some of these cases says: "This principle is radically inconsistent with any scheme of license or censorship by which a man is hindered from writing or printing anything which he thinks fit, and is hard to reconcile even with the right on the part of the Courts to restrain the circulation of a libel, until, at any rate, the publisher has been convicted of publishing it." Of course exceptional circumstances connected with the safety of the Empire may demand a departure from these principles, e. g., the appointment of a censor, etc. But I am unable to hold that the law as to freedom of writing in India is not an offshoot of the principles that obtain in England, but has been borrowed from the emergency laws of the Third Republic. I am prepared to hold that even after the Press Act, the right to keep a press and to use it is a Common Law right and has not the slightest resemblance to the exercise of a trade or calling for which a license should be taken out.

Another argument for the Crown was that a writ of certiorari contemplates that the High Court is capable of substituting its own judgment for that of the Tribunal whose proceeding is revised, and that as we cannot say what the exact amount of the security should be and whether it should be demanded or not, we have no power to revise the order. I do not think that it is a condition precedent to the issue of the writ that we should be able to place ourselves in the position of the Court whose order is complained against. The writ may assume various forms. It may be an order to transfer proceedings (see sections 526 and 528 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and sections 22 and 25 of the Code of Civil Procedure). It may relate to the stay of proceedings (the Code of Civil Procedure provides for this). It may seek to set aside orders or judgments (section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, section 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act). In short, it is enough that in the exercise of our jurisdiction, we direct the lower Court to re-consider its order or judgment. I am, therefore, of opinion that the fact that we cannot place ourselves in the position of the Chief Presidency Magistrate is not a bar to our entertaining the application.

The learned Advocate-General also seemed to suggest that as the right to issue the writ has now been engrafted into legislative provisions, the old prerogative need no longer be invoked. The fact that our powers are recognised in legislative provisions is not an argument for holding that that power does not exist abunde.

The next branch of the argument was that by section 22 of the Press Act, the right, if any, possessed by us has been taken away. As I read the section, I am unable to understand it as expressly or even by implication taking away the power of the High Court. All that can be said is that the Act does not provide for the order under section 3 being revised. It is now well settled that unless the power to issue a writ of certiorari is expressly taken away, it inheres in the Court. It was held in R. v. Reeve (55) that the writ, being one for the benefit of the subject, cannot be taken away without express negative words. See also R. v. Jukes (56) and R. v. Plowright (57). The English Judges have been so jealous in preserving this right, that they have held that even when the Legislature provided that certain matters shall be finally determined by an inferior Court, the Court of King's Bench was not powerless. R. v. Reeve (55). I am, therefore, clear that section 22 has not taken away the right.

Moreover, even if the right is taken away, the High Court can interfere, if there has been a want of jurisdiction in the inferior Court. The reason of the rule is that the power prima facie exists in the High Court in all matters which are not within the cognisance of the inferior Court; and when this latter Court acts beyond its powers, it usurps jurisdiction which the High Court can control. The leading authority on the subject is Bradlaugh, Ex parte (10). Mellor, J., stated in that case that "it is well established that the provision taking away the certiorari does not apply where there was an absence of jurisdiction." King v. Justices of Somersetshire (11) and Queen v. Wood (12) are to the same effect. In Queen v. South Wales Railway Company (13) Coleridge, J., stated: "Where that (want of jurisdiction in the inferior Court) is made out, the statutory prohibition does not apply and the inherent jurisdiction of this Court is unrestrained."

It is on this principle that the High Courts in this country have acted in interfering with orders passed by Magistrates under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Section 435, clause (3), would seem to suggest that High Courts should not revise orders passed under Chapter XII and section 176. But there are no positive words affecting the jurisdiction of the High Court. Consequently, there has been a long course of decisions holding that the prohibition did not affect our powers of interference when want of jurisdiction was made out. The absence of jurisdiction may be founded upon certain proceedings which have been made essential preliminaries to the inquiry or upon facts to be adjudicated upon in the course of the inquiry. See Colonial Bank of Australasia v. Willan (20) and Rex v. Wood House, Ryder, Ex parte (9). A further qualification has been introduced in favour of the interference of the Court of the King's Bench. Even when jurisdiction to issue the writ was expressly taken away, if fraud has been practised in the procuring of the judgment the writ can issue. R v. Gillyard (58).

I shall now consider the third question. I had considerable doubts during the course of the argument upon this subject. Mr.

Ramaswami Aiyar and the learned Advocate-General placed before us a bewildering array of authorities. The question whether a particular act done by an avowedly judicial Tribunal is performed by that Tribunal ministerially or judicially is not easy to determine. I concede that prima facie an order passed by an officer who acts ordinarily judicially may be presumed to have been passed by him in that capacity. I shall also grant that the officer need not be sitting as a Court to attach to himself judicial functions. The fact that he may have to take evidence is not a conclusive test of acting judicially. In Rex v. Wood House, Ryder, Ex parte (9), Vaughan Williams, L. J., doubted whether the fact that there was no jurisdiction to make an administrative as distinguished from a judicial order would enable the Court to issue a certiorari. Lord Justice Fletcher Moulton, after an elaborate discussion on the meaning of the terms "judicial acts" and "administrative acts", says: "The true view of the limitation would seem to be that the term 'judicial act' is used in contrast with purely ministerial acts. To these latter the process of certiorari does not apply, as for instance to the issue of a warrant to enforce a rate, even though the rate is one which could itself be questioned by certiorari. In short, there must be the exercise of some right or duty to decide in order to provide scope for a writ of certiorari at Common Law." The position is thus succinctly expressed in 6 American Cyclopædia 753: "It necessarily follows that the writ will not lie to review acts which were not done in the exercise of judicial power or authority, but were merely ministerial, executive, or legislative in their character." I do not propose to examine the English authorities any further. I am bound, however, to consider a few Indian decisions. The most important of them is that of the Judicial Committee in Shankar Sarup v. Mejo Mal (50). The question related to the construction of section 295 of the old Code of Civil Procedure. Lord Robertson in delivering the judgment of the Board said: "The scheme of section 295 is rather to enable the Judge as a matter of administration to distribute the price according to what seem at the time to be the rights of parties, without this distribution importing a conclusive adjudication on those rights, which may be subsequently re-adjusted by a suit such as the present." In making the distribution, the Court had to hear parties and to decide upon the merits. Mainly relying upon this decision, a Full Bench of our High Court held in Sivagami Achi v. Subrahmaniam Ayyar (31) that a District Munsif acting under section 287 of the Code of 1882 was only performing a ministerial duty and that his proceedings were not subject to revision by the High Court. The District Munsif in settling the proclamation under that section was entitled to take evidence and to come to a conclusion on the question. The learned Judges were much influenced by the circumstance that by section 288, the officer was given the same protection from being proceeded against for damages as Act XVIII of 1850 gave to ordinary judicial officers. The inference they drew was that in settling the proclamation, he was not acting judicially. This proposition applies with equal force to the present case. Then there is the decision in Vijayaghavalu Pillai v. Emperor (27), to which I was a party with my learned brother Mr. Justice Ayling. I do not think the present case is stronger than that. In Calcutta we have Rudolf Stallmann v. Emperor (29) and Gulli Sahu v. Emperor (30), which support the view taken in the Madras case. Reference should also be made to Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (15), in which the Judicial Committee held that a District Judge in appointing a committee member under section 10 of Act XX of 1863 was performing a ministerial duty. As against these decisions may be put the decision in Nundo Lal Bose v. Corporation of Calcutta (25). In that case, however, some judicial authority was given to the Tribunal. On the whole, I am inclined to the view that the Chief Presidency Magistrate was not acting judicially when he called upon the petitioner to deposit security. An examination of the provisions of the Press Act leads to the same conclusions. (a) There is nothing in the Act which compels the Magistrate to hold any enquiry, although I do not say that he is debarred from doing so. (b) The nature of the information to be laid before him is, not specified—Mr. Ramaswami Aiyar has drawn our attention to the fact that an application was made, as a matter of fact, by Mr. Brightwell. (c) The Magistrate is not bound to state any reasons. (d) He has an unfettered discretion in fixing the amount. (e) A special provision is made in section 22 of the Act granting the same protection for proceedings passed in good faith as are secured to judicial officers by Act XVIII of 1850. These considerations have influenced me in holding that the action of the Chief Presidency Magistrate was not judicial but only ministerial.

(58) (1848) 12 Q. B. 527; 17 L. J. M. C. 153; 12 Jur. 65; 116 E. R. 965.

ANNIE BESANT v. EMPEROR.

The last point for consideration is, whether in the exercise of the power given to him by the Act, the Chief Presidency Magistrate acted illegally. Sub-section (1) of section 3 before it reaches the proviso has two substantive provisions: (1) The keeper of the press shall make a deposit at the time of the declaration, and (2) that the amount of the deposit shall be fixed by the Magistrate between Rs. 500 and Rs. 2,000. The first requirement is imperative. The second gives a discretion to the Magistrate. The proviso also consists of two parts: (1) The Magistrate may for special reasons to be recorded by him dispense with any security, and (2) he may from time to time cancel or vary any order under the sub-section. From the context it is clear that the power to dispense with the security only qualifies the rule which imposes the security. The first part of the proviso to my mind is a conditional avoidance of the antecedent clause to demand the security. It should be regarded as a defeasance clause to the first part of the section. The second proviso naturally would govern the power to vary given in the second portion of the section. When the Legislature gave a discretion to the Magistrate to fix the amount, it also gave him power to vary the amount from time to time. It would, therefore, seem that the second part of the proviso should be read as qualifying the clause which gives discretion to demand a varying security. The learned Advocate-General naturally laid stress upon the use of the words "vary any order" under this sub-section. Those words are capable of including orders passed under the proviso; but it has to be noticed that the clause calling upon the Magistrate to record special reasons cannot grammatically be read with the clause beginning with "or may from time to time vary," etc. Is it reasonable to hold that an order which necessitated the record of reasons at its inception was intended to be capriciously set at nought the next moment. That would be imputing incongruity to the Legislature. Further the use of the disjunctive participle, or seems to suggest that the order contemplated by the second clause of the proviso is different in nature from that which the first part enables the Magistrate to make.

I have thus far submitted the section itself to a close analysis. Very able arguments were addressed to us on both sides upon the meaning and office of a proviso. A great deal would depend upon the draftsmen. A proviso may at times serve to introduce an exception. It is often in the nature of a condition precedent to the enforcement of the operative clause. It is doubtful whether it can ever add to the clause itself. The learned Advocate General referred us to Rhondda Urban Council v. Taff Vale Railway (41). In that case, the so-called proviso was in a separate section. It was held that this new section created a new liability. I do not think this case helps us much. Nor does Mohummud Buhâdor Khan v. Collector of Bareilly (59) decide that a proviso can add to the section. On the other hand, the Lord Chancellor, Lord Watson and Lord Herschell held in West Derby Union v. Metropolitan Life Assurance Society (24) that a proviso cannot enlarge the scope of the section. In a later case, Lord Justice Fletcher Moulton says: "The fallacy of the proposed method of interpretation is not far to seek. It sins against the fundamental rule of construction that a proviso must be considered with relation to the principal matter to which it stands as a proviso. It treats it as if it were an independent enacting clause instead of being dependent on the main enactment. The Courts, as for instance in such cases as Partington, Ex parte (60), In re Brockelbank (61) and Hill v. East and West India Dock (59) 1 I. A. 167; 13 B. L. R. 292; 21 W. R. 318; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 363.
(61) (1889) 23 Q. B. D. 461; 58 L. J. Q. B. 375; 61 L. T. 543; 37 W. R. 537; 6 Morrell 133.

Co. (62), have frequently pointed out this fallacy, and have refused to be led astray by arguments such as those which have been addressed to us, which depend solely on taking words absolutely in their strict literal sense, disregarding the fundamental consideration that they appear in a proviso." See Rez v. Dibdin, Thompson, Ex parte (63). The preponderance of authority is in favour of the view that a proviso annexed to a section should not be read as enlarging the scope of that section.

In the present instance we have first a clause making the deposit absolute, then a proviso which enables it to be dispensed with after recording reasons; and we are asked to add a new power which would allow the Magistrate to cancel the last order without assigning any reasons. I am free to confess that the language of the section is by no means clear. Nor are the authorities as to the construction of a proviso uniform. But I am not prepared to impute to the Legislature the want of logic and reasonableness which the construction contended for by the Crown entails. I am, therefore, of opinion that the Chief Presidency Magistrate had no power to demand security after having dispensed with it at the time of the declaration.

But as I have held that the order was passed by the Magistrate in his executive capacity, I am of opinion we have no power to interfere in revision under the Government of India Act. It is hardly necessary to say that the petition has been argued with great ability on both sides.

Petition dismissed.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 43, 46—Insolvent vexatiously refusing to produce books of account, whether can be punished before order of discharge.

A Court is not bound to defer punishment in respect of acts and omissions mentioned in section 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, until the insolvent applies for his order of discharge. [p 638, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 23rd February 1916.

Mr. St. C. Thompson, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under the provisions of section 46 of Act III of 1907 against an order passed by the District Judge of Lucknow, sentencing the appellant to undergo one month's simple imprisonment under the provisions of section 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act for refusing to produce his books of account and concealing his assets. The learned Counsel for the appellant argues that it is not open to the District Judge to take action of this nature until an order of adjudication has been made and proceedings have reached the point when the insolvent applies for his discharge. The words of section 43 are, however, absolutely clear. The insolvent is required under the law to produce his books of account and give inventories of his property, etc., etc., and it is stated that if before or after the making of an order of adjudication he does certain acts or fails to do certain other acts, sometimes wilfully, sometimes fraudulently, sometimes vexatiously, he shall be liable to disciplinary punishment. There is absolutely nothing in the section and nothing in any of the decisions that have been quoted to me to support the proposition that the Court must defer punishment in respect of such acts or omissions until the insolvent applies for his order of discharge, and were such a view taken the section would stand self-condemned, because, if such were the rule, the Court would be deprived of the power to enforce its orders in respect of the producing of books of account and the like.

I, therefore, have no difficulty in deciding against the argument to the effect that the Court acted prematurely when it passed this order of imprisonment. I observe that the point is academic, as far as the insolvent is concerned, for it is admitted that he had already served his sentence before this appeal came on for hearing. I have now to consider whether he should be given the somewhat empty satisfaction of having it declared that he was imprisoned wrongly on the ground that the learned District Judge decided the case against the weight of the evidence. Upon this point I see no reason to differ with the findings of the learned District Judge. The evidence was clear enough and showed that the appellant did keep books of account and that he had a business. An attempt has been made before me to produce additional evidence in the shape of a registered sale-deed, to prove that the appellant had sold his business premises sometime ago. There is nothing, of course, to show that the sale-deed in question refers to the premises where the appellant's creditors assert that he carried on his business, and no sufficient reason has been given why I should at this stage permit fresh evidence to be produced. In any circumstances the attempt to produce further evidence does not cover the point as to why the appellant vexatiously refused to produce his books of account. I am satisfied that he has books of account and that his refusal to produce them was vexatious or fraudulent or both.

I, therefore, dismiss this appeal. The learned Counsel for the appellant has stated that the learned District Judge has refused to carry on the insolvency proceedings against his client. This record does not show what the learned District Judge has or has not done in this matter. There is nothing in the order before me to indicate that the learned District Judge has discontinued the proceedings. The order with which I am concerned is not an order refusing to continue the proceedings, and if the appellant has any grievance in connection with the action or inaction of the learned District Judge in the matter, he should go to the District Judge. The appellant will pay his own costs. The other side has incurred no costs.

Appeal dismissed.

OPPOSITE PARTIES.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 202, 203—Complaint, delay in passing orders on—Magistrate, duty of.

Orders should be passed expeditiously by Magistrates on complaints presented to them. It is, in the highest degree, improper to delay orders for months.

Criminal revision against the order of the Magistrate, first class, Ballia, dated the 17th August 1916.

Mr. G. W. Dillon and Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Applicant.

Mr. Satya Chandra Mukerji, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—It appears from the papers before me that Salimullah applicant on 30th June 1916 filed a complaint before a Magistrate of the first class at Ballia. The Magistrate appears to have put the complaint into his kutcheri box and to have passed no order upon it until the 17th of August 1916. I have in previous cases commented strongly upon such conduct on the part of Magistrates and I am surprised to find a Magistrate of the first class acting in this way. Magistrates have no right whatever to keep complaints instituted before them without order, as the learned Magistrate did in this case. Such action is in the highest degree improper and shows want of proper understanding as to what their duties are. The complainant came here on the 21st of September and filed an application against the order of the Magistrate dismissing the complaint under section 203 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The first two grounds taken in the application are not entitled to weight. If the Magistrate had passed the order he did in June, whether the order so passed had been proper or improper, it would not have been open to attack on these two pleas.

There remains the third plea. I have nothing before me to show how far these persons were seriously hurt and their injuries examined in the hospital. Looking to the nature of the case, I think it inexpedient after the time that has elapsed to re-open the matter; but I draw the attention of the District Magistrate to the complaint and to the seriously improper action of the first class Magistrate. It will be for the District Magistrate to consider whether any action should be taken to secure the keeping of the peace and at this stage I leave the case. The application is dismissed.

Application dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 195 (6), 439 Sanction to prosecute—Revision—Delay in applying to High Court, effect of.

The revisional jurisdiction of the High Court is discretionary and it will not interfere in revision at the instance of applicants who do not shew reasonable diligence in prosecuting their cases. [p. 640, col. 2.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Monghyr, dated the 22nd December 1915, revoking a sanction granted by the Magistrate of the 1st class, Monghyr, dated the 23rd September 1915.

Sir Ali Imam (with him Messrs. Mazharul Haque and Naresh Chandra Sinha), for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad (Deputy Government-Advocate), for the Opposite Party.

AVADH BEHARI MISRA v. DWARKA PRASAD SINGH.

JUDGMENT.—Dwarka Prasad Singh brought a charge against the petitioner and 20 others under sections 143 and 179, Indian Penal Code. All were eventually acquitted and the Magistrate on the application of the petitioner sanctioned the prosecution of Dwarka Prasad Singh on charges under sections 193 and 211, Indian Penal Code. The sanction was revoked by the Sessions Judge and we are now asked to set aside the Judge's order and restore that of the Magistrate.

There is a conflict of authority on the question whether a third Court can interfere in a case of this kind under section 195 (6), Code of Criminal Procedure, or must interfere if at all, under section 439 of the same Code. It is not necessary for us to decide this question of law, for in our opinion the order of the Sessions Judge is clearly right and should not be disturbed even if this matter should be treated as coming before us by way of appeal.

The Magistrate who tried the original case summarised his conclusions as follows:—“For the reasons stated above I entertain very great doubt as to the truth of the case for the prosecution...Avadh Behari's (present petitioner's) daughter was dangerously ill in her father-in-law's house at Hajipur and he went there about the time of the alleged occurrence. The alibi of this accused has been proved to my satisfaction by witnesses of Hajipur, the telegram, and the evidence of two railway clerks and the entries in their registers”.

Counsel for the petitioner relied upon this passage as shewing that this was eminently a case in which sanction should be given for the prosecution of the complainant. But we are not bound to accept the Magistrate's estimate of the value of the evidence produced to prove the alibi set up by Avadh Behari, and on examining that evidence, we find that part of it is irrelevant and that the remainder is of no value. The offence is said to have been committed on February 13th, 1915. The telegram shews that Avadh Behari was summoned to Hajipur on the 9th, and one of the railway officials states that he sold a ticket to Avadh Behari on that date. A ticket-collector proves that he collected at Kiul a ticket issued at Hajipur on the 14th. It is suggested that Avadh Behari travelled back from Hajipur with that ticket, but the ticket-collector did not identify him and it does not appear why Avadh Behari should have booked to Kiul when in the ordinary course he would book to Lakhiserai. Thus the railway evidence is either valueless or irrelevant. The evidence of the two witnesses from Hajipur can certainly not be accepted as proving satisfactorily that Avadh Behari was at Hajipur on February 13th.

We notice also that the plea of alibi was set up in such a way as to prevent the prosecution from enquiring into it or testing it except by impromptu cross-examination. Avadh Behari, when examined by the Magistrate on July 21st, said that he would put in a written statement. The examination of witnesses for the defence began on August 5th, but Avadh Behari did not put in his written statement or the telegram till August 21st when he produced his witnesses. Thus the prosecution had no notice of the defence to be set up until the very day on which the evidence in support of it was produced.

We are surprised that the Magistrate should have expressed the opinion that Avadh Behari's alibi was proved. We find that it was not proved, and we think that there is no prospect whatever of a conviction being obtained, if sanction is given for the prosecution of Dwarka Prasad Singh. In our opinion, therefore, sanction should not be given.

Lastly, we note that the present application for revision was presented not less than three months after the order of the Sessions Judge. The revisional jurisdiction of this Court is discretionary and we wish it to be clearly understood that the Court will not interfere in revision at the instance of applicants who do not shew reasonable diligence in prosecuting their cases.

Application rejected.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss 102, 105, 105A—Record of Rights, suit for amendment of entries in—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts.

In proceedings under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, to which plaintiffs were parties, certain entries in the Record of Rights, describing plaintiffs as tenure-holders and defendants as *raiya*s, were affirmed as correct. Plaintiffs brought a suit asking that the Record of Rights be amended and their names entered as *raiya*s instead of those of the defendants, and that they should be put in possession:

Held, that the status of the plaintiffs having already been determined under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act by a Revenue Court having jurisdiction, the suit was barred by section 109 of the Act [p. 642, col. 1.]

Mr. Pugh (with him Messrs. Kalwant Sahai and Rajendra Prasad), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

ATKINSON, J.—The plaintiffs in this action seek a declaration against the defendants to the effect, that the Record of Rights, which was published on the 14th December 1911, may be amended, and that the plaintiffs, who have been recorded in the Record of Rights as tenure-holders, may be recorded as *raiya*s, and that the defendants, who have been recorded as *raiya*s shall have their names struck out or expunged from the Record and the plaintiffs inserted in their stead; and that consequential upon such declaration the Court shall be pleased to decree possession in favour of the plaintiffs of this holding, now enjoyed and held by the defendants as tenants to the plaintiffs. That is the form of the action. The facts out of which this action arises are shortly as follows.

The Maharaja of Dumraon brought a proceeding under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, against the plaintiffs for enhancement of rent; and in that proceeding the plaintiffs lodged an objection as to their status under section 105A, protesting that their description as tenure-holders was wrong, and that they were in fact *raiya*s. The Settlement Officer, who had jurisdiction under section 105 to hold the inquiry, having heard the parties, held that the plaintiffs in this suit were properly recorded as tenure-holders of the Maharaja, and that the Record of Rights was maintained and held to be accurate. In that Record, as I have stated, the defendants were recorded as *raiya*s.

This action is now brought claiming the relief which I have stated. Mr. Mullick, on behalf of the defendants, raised the point under section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, that this action was not maintainable, on the ground that it was an application or suit concerning a matter which had been already the subject-matter of an application under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; and that therefore, it was not competent for any Civil Court to entertain such an application or suit.

The very essence of the plaintiffs' case here is, to try and get behind the Record of Rights, to have their status as therein described altered and changed to something different, essentially different, and to have the defendants' character as *raiya*s changed. That is the real motive and object of this action; and that consequential upon the change of status of the plaintiffs and the defendants, that then the plaintiffs should be entitled to possession.

Mr. Pugh, when he was faced with this difficulty—although his colleague on the last occasion when this case was argued, frankly admitted that if the identity of the lands could be established in this suit with those giving rise to the proceedings under section 105, then he would admit that there was no jurisdiction in this Court to entertain this action—Mr. Pugh says now, "Oh, this does not matter. I do not want this declaration. What I asked for by my plaint may go by the board

VENKAMMA v. NARASIMHAM.

I want to maintain that part of my claim which deals with recovery of possession. I am suing the defendants here as trespassers. This is an action on title for ejectment against trespassers."

Every bit of the claim, every averment in the claim, is inconsistent with that relief. Mr. Pugh wants us now to give the go by to the entire pleading, to the form in which the plaintiffs have stated the relief they seek in the prayer to the plaint, and treat this action as one for trespass. I shall, for one, be no party to such a proceeding. If the plaintiffs think they have or had, a claim for trespass as against these defendants, they could and might have brought it. And if they had brought it, section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act would not have applied. But they did not think fit, acting no doubt within their discretion, to bring the action in that form; and they proceeded in the present case for the relief prayed for. In our opinion it is obviously clear what was the meaning and intention of the Legislature in enacting section 109. It was to avoid conflicts arising between the Revenue Courts on the one side and the Civil Courts on the other; and when an issue is decided by a Revenue Court having jurisdiction, as in this case, under section 105, the decree having the force and effect of a decree of a Civil Court, no action was capable of being entertained by a Civil Court in connection with any matter decided in the proceeding under section 105.

One cannot, for one moment, entertain the suggestion that this is not an action touching and concerning a matter that had been determined by the Settlement Officer under section 105. The basis of the objection then made by the plaintiffs was as to their status, and it is that status they want now to have rectified, and that is the foundation of their claim.

I desire to refer to the case of Sheodhani Pandey v. Beni Pershad Koeri (1). This case was before a Full Bench and there the very same point as here was taken, but it was not taken until second appeal, and Sir Lawrence Jenkins said, apart altogether from the merits, "In our opinion, however, the suit should have been dismissed under section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; because this is a suit which concerns a matter which has been the subject of an application made and proceedings taken under section 105 of that Act, and a suit of such a character cannot be entertained by a Civil Court under section 109. It was, therefore, not open to the lower Courts and to Mr. Justice Carnduff to try the merits of this case". We adhere to the ruling of that distinguished Judge. Therefore, we think this action should be dismissed on the ground that there was no jurisdiction in the Court under section 109 to entertain this action in its original form.

We allow this appeal, so far as it deals with the plots set out in the Schedule on page 22 of the paper-book from 17 to 347, and we dismiss the action.

The costs in the lower Court, in the lower Appellate Court and in this Court will be paid by the plaintiffs.

The joinder of an unnecessary prayer in a claim which is barred with other substantial reliefs not barred cannot entail the dismissal of the suit. The former may be struck out and the claim adjudicated with regard to the substantial reliefs. [p. 644, col. 1.]

Plaintiff, as next reversioner to a Hindu widow, sued for a declaration that an alienation made by her was void beyond her lifetime. In a previous suit by the widow against the plaintiff for partition, she had produced a Will under which she claimed as heiress of her husband. The plaintiff challenged it as a forgery, but a partition was ordered without any adjudication on the genuineness of the Will. The plaintiff in his present suit also claimed a formal declaration of the forgery of the Will. This portion of the claim was admittedly barred under Article 93 of the Limitation Act. The Trial Court dismissed the suit as barred:

Held, (1) that there was no obligation on plaintiff to set aside the Will; [p. 644, col. 1.]

(2) that the relief claimed in respect of the Will was unnecessary and did not affect plaintiff's rights to the other substantial reliefs into which the Court was bound to enquire. [p. 644, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Vizagapatam, in Original Suit No. 14 of 1913.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, and K. S. Aravamudhu Aiyangar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, T. Ramachandra Rau and A. N. Sitarama Sastri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is quite a plain case. The plaintiff, a Hindu reversioner, sues the widow of his divided brother for a declaration that an alienation of her husband's property by her to her brother, the 2nd defendant, was void beyond her lifetime and for the appointment of a Receiver of husband's estate to prevent waste and preserve the property. That is the substance of the claim. The suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam without a trial of the merits as barred by limitation and the plaintiff appeals. If the suit was of the nature described above, it is obviously not barred as it was instituted within six years of the husband's death and the Articles of limitation applicable to suit to obtain the above reliefs are Articles 125 and 120 which give a period of six years from the date of the cause of action. But it appears that the widow, previous to the present suit, brought an action against the plaintiff for a partition by metes and bounds of certain common properties and produced a Will purporting to have been executed by her husband giving his properties absolutely to her. The present plaintiff as defendant in that suit challenged the document as forgery but no final decision was obtained on this matter and the widow obtained a partition on her title as heiress of her husband. This production of the Will was more than three years before the institution of the present suit and in the present suit the plaintiff claims a formal declaration of forgery of the Will. The right to this relief, it is said, is barred under Article 93 of the Limitation Act and that the further consequence is, that the claim to the other reliefs is inadmissible. The argument was put in this way by the learned Pleader for the respondent. It is only in cases where the widow claims as heiress that the reversioners are entitled to institute an action of this sort and it must be a part of their case, whether expressly so stated in their plaint or not, that the last male owner died intestate and if the widow claimed under an alleged Will of her husband, the reversioner cannot have any relief unless he first obtained a judicial declaration of the forgery of the Will. It is no doubt true that in a suit, of this sort, by a reversioner it is a part of his case that the last male owner died intestate for he has to allege that the widow or other female heir succeeded to a limited estate under the Hindu Law, but there is no presumption in such a case that the deceased left a Will any more than in the case of a suit by an heir-at-law to recover possession of the property of the ancestor against a stranger in possession. If the defendant pleads a Will he has to prove it. In cases where the plaintiff cannot succeed, without setting aside a transaction—whether an act of parties or an order of Court—then if he does not set it aside within the period allowed by law, of course, the suit must be dismissed. This will be the consequence, whether he expressly prays for a relief setting aside the transaction or ignores it in the plaint.

MARSHALL & CO. v. NAGINCHAND PHULCHAND.

This really is not a question of limitation but of substantive law, though no doubt particular Articles of the Limitation Act may throw light on the question. The question was discussed and the principle formulated by Bashyam Aiyangar, J., in Ratnamasari v. Akilandammal (1), in his dissenting judgment and that has been accepted by the Privy Council in their subsequent decisions on the construction of the Articles dealing with adoption in the Act of 1877. The general principle was formulated by their Lordships in Makarjun v. Narhari (2), where they held that if an order is a nullity there is no need to set it aside and the same principle was applied by them to a benami sale in Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandy Serrai (3). Here the Will is challenged as a forgery and it was, therefore, waste paper and there can be no obligation to set it aside. Nor is it possible to contend that it would be binding till set aside. In this view it is quite clear that the suit in so far as it prays for a substantial relief is not barred; the prayer for a declaration of forgery is wholly unnecessary and the appellant's Pleader said that the same may well be struck out without in the least affecting the real reliefs to which, if his case be true, he is entitled.

In this view it is unnecessary to decide the question whether the relief for a formal declaration of forgery of the Will is now barred or not, more especially as the records in the previous proceedings are not filed. The appeal is allowed and the decree of the lower Court reversed and the suit remanded for fresh trial. Costs here and in the lower Court will abide.

Appeal allowed; Case sent back.

Contract C. I. F. D/A.—Vendor and purchaser—Shipment of goods—Outbreak of hostilities between Governments of shipper and consignee while goods and shipping documents in transitu—King's Proclamation forbidding commercial intercourse with enemies, effect of—Commercial Intercourse with Enemies Ordinance (VI of 1914)—Tender of bill of lading.—Liability of buyer—Vessel seized as prize—Acceptance of bill of exchange after announcement of hostilities—Non-payment at maturity—Subsequent delivery of goods.—Liability of buyer to pay bill with interest—Seller negotiating with shipper for passing goods on to buyer.—Priority of contract—Effect of War Proclamation—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 32, 43—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 56.

Ordinarily C. I. F. contracts, under which one of the parties is bound to supply the other with shipping documents before the latter can be compelled to repay him his outlay, are regulated by the provisions of sections 32 and 43 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. The consideration for the acceptance of the bill of exchange under C. I. F. contracts D/A, i. e., acceptance against documents, is, according to law and mercantile usage, no more than the tender of good and valid shipping documents to the buyer, and if the buyer accepts the seller's bill, the matter is finally concluded between the seller and the buyer. Any risk thereafter is the buyer's and he is not entitled to refuse payment on maturity, and if he does, he is liable for overdue interest after that date. [p. 648, col. 2; p. 649, col. 1.]

Exceptions have, however, been grafted on this rule by war conditions. [p. 647, col. 2.]

A contract of affreightment entered into in time of peace between the subjects of countries which go to war, while part at least of that contract is executory, is thereby immediately and finally avoided. [p. 648, col. 2.]

Where the bill of exchange and shipping documents are presented to and are accepted by the buyer before the commencement of hostilities, the buyer is bound to pay for them at maturity even though the goods were for a time detained in transitu as prize if they are subsequently delivered to him and, if he refuses to pay on maturity, he is liable for overdue interest after that date. [p. 647, col. 1.]

Dubitante.—Where the buyer accepts a bill of lading, but neither the goods nor the shipping documents are delivered to the buyer owing to outbreak of war between the Governments of the parties, it must be held, following Arnhold Karberg & Co. v. Blythe, Green, Jourdain & Co., Theodor Schneider & Co. v. Burgett and Newsam, (1915) 2 K. B. 379; 84 L. J. K. B. 1673, that, inasmuch as the bill of lading had become void before it was tendered to the buyer, there was at the time a failure of consideration for the acceptance of the bill and the buyer was not bound to pay at maturity. [p. 654, col. 2.]

Semble.—If the matter were res integra, it is difficult to see how, if the shipping documents came into the possession of the buyer as good contracts before the declaration of hostilities, the fact that war broke almost immediately afterwards, would absolve the buyer from his obligation to pay the bill which he had accepted against the shipping documents. [p. 652, col. 2; p. 653, col. 1.]

Contracts entered into between subjects of countries which were at peace when the contracts were made, are not necessarily abrogated by the breaking out of hostilities between those countries. The general rule appears to be that unless the contracts are of a very special kind, the effect of war is not to avoid them totally but merely to suspend the remedies of one or other of the parties to them. Such contracts would doubtless remain in abeyance during the continuance of hostilities but upon their ceasing no good reason can be shown why the rights still enforceable should not be duly enforced, the Governments of the parties to such contracts having now re-established all peaceful and normal relations. [p. 647, col. 2.]

There are, however, exceptions to be engrafted upon these general rules. If the contract is of a kind requiring continuous performance of mutual duties by the parties to it and such duties cannot be so mutually performed during the continuance of a war, and further suspension of such mutual rights and obligations for an indefinite period going much beyond merely placing the contract in abeyance, the result in the eye of the law would be that the original contract is void, inasmuch as taking it up upon cessation of hostilities would be something more than renewing it, would, in fact, be substituting for it an entirely new contract. A like rule would doubtless be applied to the case of partnerships between subjects of belligerent states. [p. 647, col. 2; p. 648, col. 1.]

Looking to the spirit of the King's Proclamation and the Commercial Intercourse with Enemies Ordinance, VI of 1914, the words 'forbidding commercial intercourse with enemy subjects' would mean purchasing goods, wares or merchandise of and from the enemy's country. It does not prohibit every kind of intercourse between the King's subjects and the enemy. The scheme of the Proclamation, especially the preamble, rests on the old Common Law and is intended to prohibit actual trading or the institution and maintenance of commercial relations with the enemy on and after the date of the existence of a state of war. It is doubtful, however, whether merely taking over a suspended contract, the completion of which, if it ever could be completed, could not by any means augment the enemy's wealth or increase his efficiency, would be any contravention of the spirit of the Proclamation. It would be otherwise if, in order to effect the completion of such a contract, it were necessary to do anything to the detriment or diminution of His Britannic Majesty's resources and the corresponding increase of those of the enemy. [p. 650, col. 2; p. 651, col. 1.]

In cases where the seller gets the shipping documents from the shipper and the insurance company and has completed all that he is bound to do under a C. I. F. contract by forwarding to the buyer valid and legal bills of lading and a valid and legal insurance, he has done all that he is required to do under the contract and is entitled to claim immediate payment, though he cannot have the documents owing to intervening conditions of space and time which prevent their instant transference to the buyer. The contract between the shipper, the insurance company and the buyer cannot be treated in the first instance, as has been done by the Courts in England, as a contract between the shipper, the insurance company and the seller, so that in the event of its becoming void before the goods reach the seller, the resultant loss would fall on the seller and not on the buyer. [p. 654, col. 1.]

Defendants, a Bombay firm, ordered of the plaintiffs, merchants in Glasgow, certain goods to be delivered at Madras C. I. F. terms. The plaintiffs shipped the goods from a German port through two German ships, Barenfels and Kybels on 15th July 1914 and 25th July 1914 respectively. The bill of exchange for the first shipment and other shipping documents were presented to defendants and accepted by them on 31st July 1914. The bill of exchange for the second shipment was presented to and accepted by defendants on 10th November 1914. Both bills were not honoured at maturity. War having broken out between England and Germany the Barenfels was seized as a prize during voyage, but was allowed later to continue her voyage and the goods were delivered to defendants at Madras on payment of the first bill. The cargo by the Kybels was never delivered to defendants. Plaintiffs sue for interest on the first bill from the date of maturity to date of payment and for the amount due on the second bill with interest:

Held, (1) that defendants were liable on the first bill for the overdue interest after maturity; [p. 647, col. 1.]

(2) that as the bill of lading for the second shipment had become a void contract before it was tendered to the defendants, defendants were not liable for the amount of the bill or interest. [p. 654, col. 2.]

Mr. Binning, (with him Mr. Strangman), for the Plaintiffs.

Messrs. Wadia, Desai and Tarapore, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, Messrs. Marshall & Co. of Glasgow, sue the defendants, Naginchand Fulchand, a firm, upon accepted bills of exchange drawn by the plaintiffs upon the defendants in respect of two cargoes shipped on the Hansa Line "Barenfels" and Hansa Line "Kybfels"—terms C. I. F. C. I., goods aluminium circles—Date of shipment on "Barenfels" 15th July 1914—date of shipment on "Kybfels", 25th July 1914. The plaintiffs' general allegation for the purposes of this suit is that they were never principals but merely defendants' agents for the purpose of these goods. That was not the form in which they originally brought the suit, and there cannot be the least doubt that they have had recourse to this line of attack as the result of a judgment recently delivered by the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court. In my opinion, after hearing Mr. Binning's argument upon this point, the alternative case is entirely without foundation. I cannot discern any feature of agency or in the least resembling agency in the transactions between the plaintiffs and the defendants revealed by the evidence in the present case. The only agent in the matter was Abdul Kader and he was the plaintiffs', not the defendants', agent. Colour may always be given to forlorn hopes of this kind by the inclusion in the Indian indent forms of C. I., in addition to the C. I. F. universally used and understood throughout the commercial world. It is only necessary to look at the original plaint, the evidence of Abdul Kader and the invoice for the goods per SS. "Kybfels" to see how unsubstantial the plaintiffs' contention is that they were, by some process altogether unexplained and inexplicable, as far as I can see, converted into defendants' agent. In truth both the transactions are ordinary commercial dealings between principal and principal on C. I. F. terms and the additional C. I., I presume, is intended for the benefit of Abdul Kader. Whether it be or whether it be not, would not affect my conclusion in the slightest degree that neither were the plaintiffs ever in fact defendants' agents nor ever thought themselves to be so until they were probably advised that their position as principals in a litigation of this kind was insecure. It is plain enough that, up to the 17th September 1914, the plaintiffs had a truer idea of their own rights and liabilities in these transactions than the legal advisers whom they then consulted. This change of front appears to have occurred between the 17th September and 9th October, upon which date they resolved to send on the somewhat belated shipping documents relating to the "Kybfels" shipment of aluminium circles and get the defendants' acceptance of the bill drawn against those goods. The points raised in the argument are points of very great interest and subtlety.

MARSHALL & CO. v. NAGINCHAND PHULCHAND.

But before disposing of them it is necessary to clear the ground by dealing with, and laying out of the case, the claim in respect of the shipment per SS. "Barenfels" of the 16th July 1914. As to that, the position now appears to me to be simple and clear both in law and fact. The goods were duly shipped by the German steamer "Barenfels" which put to sea before the outbreak of war. The shipping documents, that is to say, the invoice, insurance policy and bill of lading were duly presented to the defendants, Naginchand Fulchand, in Bombay along with the bill of exchange for acceptance on the 31st July 1914. The terms agreed upon by the parties to these dealings were clearly D/A or acceptance against documents. The defendants duly accepted against these documents, which were at that time in good order and all quite legal and valid. That being so, the property in the goods thereon passed to the defendants and the plaintiffs disappear from the transaction. That is to say they would have disappeared but for the happening of an untoward event and the subsequent refusal by the defendants to pay the bill on maturity. The "Barenfels" appears to have been captured in the Mediterranean and taken as prize into Alexandria. Eventually she was sent on her voyage to Madras, her original port of destination, and the defendants obtained possession of their goods. But they refused to pay the plaintiffs' interest between the date of maturity and the date of the taking of the goods as well as the small sum of Rs. 10, notarial charges. Having regard to the true nature of C. I. F. contracts about which I entertain no doubt, it appears to me that upon these minor heads the defendants have no case. They obtained all that they were entitled to obtain under the C. I. F. contract when the bill was presented to them for acceptance, that is to say, good shipping documents. They accepted against them and thereafter the risk was entirely their own and they were not entitled to refuse payment on maturity, and having refused payment on maturity they are clearly liable for overdue interest after that date. And that, I think, sufficiently disposes of the claim in this suit in respect of the first cargo.

The case is much more complicated with regard to the "Kybfels". There appears to be no doubt but that the shipping documents were duly obtained on the 25th and 31st July; that is to say, a German bill of lading on the 25th and an English policy of insurance on the 31st. Strictly speaking, that is all that the plaintiffs were required to do, in the ordinary course of dealings under a C. I. F. contract, provided, of course, that they forthwith forward such shipping documents to their purchasers along with their bill to be accepted by the latter. The terms may be $\frac{1}{A}$ or $\frac{D}{P}$. But in the present case there is no doubt that the understanding of the parties was that acceptance was to be against documents. Unfortunately long before these shipping documents could have reached the defendants in Bombay, a state of war had broken out between His Britannic Majesty and the Empire of Germany. And the question then arises: What are the resultant legal rights and liabilities of parties under C. I. F. contracts, situated as the plaintiffs and defendants were here? Speaking generally we may adopt the judgment of Kennedy, L. J., in the case of Biddell Brothers v. Clemens Horst Company (1), unqualifiedly approved in the House of Lords as finally and satisfactorily determining what is the course of business and what are the rights and obligations of parties to and under such C. I. F. contracts. The more delicate questions which have been argued here with considerable skill on behalf of the plaintiffs do not, however, arise under normal conditions but are dependent upon variations introduced by the existence of a state of war.

(1) (1911) 1 K. B. 934 at p. 954; 16 Com. Cas. 197; 80 L. J. K. B. 584.

Taking it as settled law that in the ordinary course of business a seller on C. I. F. terms is entitled to be prepaid by his buyer on presentation to the latter of valid and legal shipping documents, the question to be answered here is: How is that course of business affected by, and in the eye of the Courts by what rule should it be governed under war conditions? In the first place what is to be examined is the effect of war upon contracts made between the subjects of belligerent states before war was declared. As a general legal proposition the Courts appear to have accepted this, that contracts entered into between subjects of countries, which were at peace when the contracts were made, are not necessarily abrogated by the breaking out of hostilities between those countries. The general rule appears to be that unless the contracts are of a very special kind, the effect of war is not to avoid them totally but merely to suspend the remedies of one or other of the parties to them. Such contracts would doubtless remain in abeyance during the continuance of hostilities, but upon their ceasing no good reason can be shown why the rights still enforceable should not be duly enforced, the Governments of the parties to such contracts having now re-established all peaceful and normal relations. But there are exceptions to be engrafted upon these general rules. Some of those depend upon the very special features of the contracts under consideration, and a better illustration perhaps could not be found than in the case, recently decided by Rowlatt, J., of Distington Hematite Iron Company, Limited v. Possehl & Co. (2). The ratio decidendi in all cases of that kind is a rule of common sense rather than law and is referable to this dominating consideration that if the contract is of a kind requiring continuous performance of mutual duties by the parties to it and such duties cannot be so mutually performed during the continuance of a war and further suspension of such mutual rights and obligations for an indefinite period going much beyond merely placing the contract in abeyance, the result in the eye of the law would be that the original contract is void inasmuch as taking it up upon cessation of hostilities would be something more than renewing it, would, in fact, be substituting for it an entirely new contract. A like rule would doubtless be applied to the case of partnerships between subjects of belligerent states and many other special cases might be given. The particular contracts, however, with which I am here concerned seem to have been excepted in the earlier judgments of the Courts almost as matters of course and without reference to any special considerations of this kind. In his judgment in the case of Esposito v. Bowden (3), Willes, J., lays it down as an accepted principle of the maritime law that all contracts of affreightment are put an end to by the outbreak of hostilities between the Governments of the shipper and the ship-master. In all such cases, he adds that it is the duty of the shipper to unload his goods and of the master to find a new employment for his ship. Obviously, however, that would be quite impossible in a great number of cases under conditions such as those which subsisted at the time when the "Kybfels" took her cargo on board. Nor is it easy to say why a contract of affreightment should necessarily be put an end to by the outbreak of hostilities between the Government of the ship-master and the Government of the port of its destination. Doubtless no captain could be expected in such circumstances to carry out a voyage at once and so far as his liability for freight money paid to him extends he would have the ordinary excuse excepted in almost every bill of lading that the fault was not his but referable to restraint of Princes. As far then as the mere obligation of a shipper, who has received freight to make the voyage, extends, this may be a case which, in the eye of the law, becomes impossible of fulfilment, and time being of its essence, the result is not merely to suspend but entirely to avoid the contract. It may, however, be doubted whether the holder of the bills of lading, as evidence of such contract of affreightment, would not still retain some valuable rights against the ship-master upon the cessation of hostilities, and it can hardly be said that looking upon the bill of lading rather as a receipt for goods than as imposing any continuous obligation upon the captain of a ship to carry them to a distant port that document would still not retain some commercial value. Willes, J., indicated a doubt whether the same sweeping legal proposition would be applicable to cases such as the case of the "Barenfels" in which the voyage had been commenced before the outbreak of hostilities. In principle I confess I can see no distinction between the two classes of cases though the practical results might be different. In point of fact the whole of the "Barenfels" cargo was duly received at the port of destination, so far as this consignee was concerned, after her capture as prize by the British authorities. But left to herself there can be no question that the "Barenfels" would not have continued her voyage or taken the risk of capture by the enemy. So that, viewed merely from the theoretico-legal standpoint, I cannot myself say that any valid distinction can be drawn between cases in which the voyage had, and cases in which it had not, begun. Indeed in the latter case the remedy suggested by the learned Judge must, where the ship is still lying in a hostile port, be entirely beyond the reach of the shipper. Taking it, however, to be settled law that contracts of affreightment, entered into in time of peace between the subjects of countries which go to war while part at least of that contract is executory, are thereby immediately and finally avoided, it is to be seen how that rule would operate upon parties to c. i. f. contracts one of whom is obliged to supply the other with shipping documents before that other can be compelled to repay him his outlay. It is not uncommonly said that in cases of this kind, which are partly no doubt cases under the general law of contract, but partly, and I think I may say in a much larger degree, governed by special war Proclamations prohibiting trade with the enemy, viewed in the first light the rights of parties fall to be regulated under sections 32 and 43 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. I think, however, that those sections, so far from exhausting, do not really touch the point of difficulty with which I am dealing. The consideration for the acceptance of the bill of exchange under C.I.F. contract D/A, according to all mercantile usage and as is now established and well-understood law, is no more than the production of good shipping documents, and if those documents are good shipping documents and valid at the time they are proffered to the buyer, then the fact that they become invalidated and void by the subsequent outbreak of war, so making the case appear to fall under section 43 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, would have, as far as I can see, neither logical nor legal bearing upon the already established rights and liabilities of the parties to C.I.F. contracts. For it is clear that eliminating all war conditions, once the buyer has accepted the bill of lading and the insurance policy and has paid against them, his only remedy is under the one or the other of these contracts and he has no right to recover against the vendor, should the terms of either of them be infringed either by the ship-master or the Insurance Company. It is only, I suppose, when, upon arrival, the goods themselves should be found to be of an entirely different or inferior quality from the goods ordered, or not be the goods ordered, or in extreme cases of that kind, that a case for damages against the C.I.F. seller might be made out. I am not, however, concerned with circumstances of that kind. What I wish to emphasize is that the insurance, freight and invoice papers, all at the time in due order, legal and valid, having been tendered to the buyer and the buyer having accepted the seller's bill against them, the matter is, so far as the C.I.F. contract may be taken to run its normal course, finally concluded between the seller and buyer. This hardly needs illustration, as, for example, in the not uncommon case of the ship having actually become a total loss before the shipping documents reached the buyer. Nevertheless no one shall say that he is thereby absolved from his liability to the seller on C.I.F. terms, nor has any such contention, I think, ever been raised. But one would have thought that so common and staring a feature of contracts of this kind would have led to a little more careful and searching analysis of the extent to which the same principle governs or is modified by the sudden introduction of an entirely new element such as the outbreak of war and the terms of war Proclamations against trading with the enemy. We have no greater authority on this branch of the law than Scrutton, L. J., who, as Scrutton, J., decided the very interesting and instructive case, referred to him by arbitrators, of Arnhol Kurberg & Co. v. Blythe, Green, Jourdain & Co. Theodor Schneider & Co. v. Burgett & Newsam (4). There Scrutton, L. J., lays it down that the key to many of the difficulties arising in C.I.F. contracts is, in his opinion, to hold firmly before the mind this point, that in law what is contracted to be sold and paid for is not the goods but the shipping documents. And he goes on to say that it is not essential that if the goods do not arrive, the buyer should have a good claim on one of the contracts, but it is essential, in his opinion, that before the buyer can be asked to accept the bills drawn against such shipping documents, the contracts, he is thus asked to take over substituting himself thereunder for his seller, should be good legal contracts such as he may lawfully enter into. Upon the first point, the Court of Appeal consisting of Swinfen Eady, L. J., Bankes, L. J., and Warrington, L. J., dissented from Scrutton, J., while, upon the second point, they unanimously agreed with him. This has caused me the greater difficulty because while upon analysis I should have thought that there was little doubt that the first dictum for all practical purposes was correct, I think there was as little doubt that the second was at least arguable. But in all cases of this kind, which are cases of contracts governed by the Royal Proclamation, there can be very little doubt that, what would have been comparatively easy perhaps to analyse and understand, had become somewhat confused by the literal adhesion of Courts to every word of that somewhat loosely phrased and sweeping Proclamation. For example, in such a case as that of Duncan Fox & Co. v. Schrempf & Bouke (5) there can be no doubt but that the decision was mainly influenced by the consideration that the bills of lading were for a voyage terminating at a German port, and, therefore, the Judges had no hesitation whatever in finding that as between the plaintiff and defendant in the suit before them, compelling the defendant to accept against such shipping documents would be the same thing as compelling him to trade with the enemy. The goods were clearly, in the opinion of the Court, in course of transmission to an enemy port. Doubtless, if they had got there and had been of service, use and comfort to the enemy, any mercantile transaction which could have contributed to that result would have been within the spirit as well as the letter of the Proclamation. But when we come to analyse what has really occurred in all dealings of this kind notwithstanding the ease with which the result is brought within the actual language of the Proclamation, it may, I think, be fairly debateable whether that Proclamation has in law any decisive bearing upon the rights established between the seller and buyer, situated as were the seller and buyer in Duncan Fox & Co. v. Schrempft & Bonke (5). For in all cases of that kind there is really a double contract, the latter part of which may or may not be trading with the enemy but has really nothing to do with the contract originally entered into between the parties before the war broke out. Thus, before the outbreak of hostilities, let us say A buys from B certain goods to be consigned to a destined port. B procures the goods at his own cost, puts them on a vessel, obtains the shipping documents and sends his bill to A for the price C. I. F. and along with his bill he sends the shipping documents. Now, here is a complete contract between A and B, and certainly B, the seller, can have no intention of trading with the enemy or trading with anybody but A. A may have had it in his mind to trade with the enemy or anybody else, but what concern is that of B's? B is out of his money for the goods purchased on C. I. F. terms in the course of business for A and by his order. Unfortunately, war breaks out and the destination of the ship happens to be an enemy port and A desires to avoid the contract (although he might, in the particular case before the Court, very easily have deflected the course of the voyage or unloaded his goods), relying upon the language of the King's Proclamation, and seeks to be released from his lawful obligation to B, upon the ground that he had the unlawful intention himself of trading with the enemy, which he cannot now carry out. So in a recent Bombay case, that of Nissin Isaac Bekhor v. Sultanalli Shustary (6), where the goods were apparently to be shipped from Germany, although the point which Macleod, J., discussed in the greater part of his judgment was entirely different, he appears to have entertained no doubt that the presentation of such shipping documents was no consideration for the acceptance of the seller's bill. He dismisses the subject in a sentence, merely saying that he cannot understand how such operations could be said not to violate the provisions of the Proclamation. The matter has here to be very much more minutely considered and it does not appear to me to admit of such easy and, if I may say without offence, summary treatment. It is quite true that having regard to the current of authorities in England, the words of the Proclamation have been enforced with rigorous exactness to the letter, which in such cases as Rex v. Oppenheimer (7), certainly seems to go very much beyond the spirit. That was the case of one prosecuted criminally under the Proclamation for obtaining goods, wares and merchandise from the enemy's country; and it was found as a fact that the goods he obtained were his own although he doubtless obtained them from the enemy's country. That was held to be no justification in law. He was convicted at the Assizes and the Court of Appeal felt no doubt in confirming the conviction. Yet one would have thought that looking to the spirit and intention of the Proclamation the words relied upon by the Trial Judge Atkin, J., for his ruling of law, which was approved upon the same phrase in the Court of Appeal, would, in their natural context, mean obtaining goods, wares or merchandise of and from the enemy's country. For it could hardly be contended that, if the thing could be done, obtaining one's absolute property, which had happened to be left at the outbreak of war in the enemy's country, from that country, could, either in theory or practice, in letter or spirit, be a violation of the King's Proclamation. That Proclamation has been extended in every direction to matters which are not, strictly speaking, within the ordinary meaning of trade and commercial relations, so as to prohibit every kind of intercourse between the King's subjects and the enemy. But all those extensions have been upon a very definite principle which is entirely different from the rigorous application of the words in the manner and sense in which they were enforced in Oppenheimer's case (7). And if we look at the scheme of the Proclamation as a whole particularly with reference to the preamble, we find that it rests mainly upon the old common law, and after reciting the dates upon which war broke out, or a state of war existed between His Britannic Majesty's Dominions and those of the German Empire and the Dual Monarchy, respectively, it goes on to say that it is contrary to law for any person, etc., to trade with or have commercial transactions with, etc., Then follow many specific prohibitions, of which those contained in the seventh clause are by far the widest and cover almost every conceivable case of illegitimate trading or having commercial relations with the enemy. Still, speaking generally and having regard to the object of the Proclamation, I should suppose that it was intended to prohibit actual trading or the institution or maintenance of commercial relations with the enemy, on and after the date of the existence of a state of war. It is true that special reference is made to certain continuing contractual relations, particularly those under life insurance policies and the like. But I should doubt whether merely taking over a suspended contract, the completion of which, if it ever could be completed, could not by any means augment the enemy's wealth or increase his efficiency, would be any contravention of the principle, at any rate, of this Proclamation. It would be otherwise if in order to effect the completion of such a contract it were necessary to do anything to the detriment or diminution of His Britannic Majesty's resources and the corresponding increase of those of the enemy. And if that be the true scope and intention of the Proclamation, then it would be a question of some nicety whether in the case of contracts made between an Englishman and a German before the outbreak of the war, the taking over by another Englishman, from the original contracting Englishman of that contract, would in itself constitute disobedience to the King's orders, that is to say, if the party so taking over were content to await the termination of the war on the chance of then obtaining his rights, and particularly where the contract was of such a character that only the executory part must of necessity advantage the King's subject and correspondingly diminish the resources of the enemy.

Referring now to the second dictum of Scrutton, J., in the trial of Arnhold Karberg and Company's case (4) the learned Judge has laid it down that in c. i. f. dealings, while it is not essential that the buyer should have a good claim on the contracts sent him by the seller, it is essential that those contracts should be of a kind into which he could lawfully enter. In this and all cognate cases the logical infirmity of the conclusion never appears to have given the English Courts any trouble, even assuming that it was present to the minds of the Judges. For, in all cases of the kind the contracts of which Scrutton, J., was speaking are contracts not between the c. i. f. seller and buyer, but really between the c. i. f. buyer and third parties, that is to say, the ship master and the insurance company; and those contracts at the time they are made are made by the seller in pursuance of the ordinary course of business, not for himself, but for his buyer with the intention of passing them on to him as soon as they can be carried. In a very large number of cases, bills of lading are made out in the name of the buyer directly, and in all such cases the contract between himself and the shipmaster is concluded on the day of the execution. It appears to me in theory to make not the least difference, though their transmission may be delayed by days or weeks or according to distances even by months. Is it then a case of compelling buyers to enter into contractual relations with the enemy subjects in contravention of the King's Proclamation? This appears to me to be the real ground of the leading English decisions on the point. Quite apart from any consideration of policy, quite apart from any consideration whether or not what remains to be done under the contract, assuming that it can possibly be done, would be to the advantage of the enemy country, the Courts appear to have gone upon what looks like rather a sentimental reason, namely, that in this peculiar form of dealing, the buyer is not to be forced into contractual relations with an enemy, before his contract with his seller is completed. But upon the line of reasoning I am following, there need be no such renewal or substitution of such contractual relations, where the bill of lading and the insurance policy are in the first place taken out in the name of the buyer, even for a moment. With the taking out and execution of them, all the contractual relations which ever will exist between buyer, the ship-master and the insurance company, are already in existence. And the mere forwarding of the documents makes no substantial alteration in what has already passed. Doubtless there would be a difference if after the outbreak of hostilities the seller had taken out an insurance policy with the enemy or received a bill of lading from the master of an enemy ship. Both these contracts would have been in their inception illegal, and not such contracts as could be proffered by way of consideration for the payment of the price of the merchandise. When Scrutton, J., says that contracts entered into by the seller, on behalf of the buyer, meaning, of course, the ordinary shipping documents, must be contracts which the latter could lawfully enter into, it appears to me that it is only in the case I have suggested that that dictum could invariably be applied. For, even where the bill of lading is not taken out in the name of the buyer but in that of the seller, according to the decision of Kennedy, L. J., in Biddell's case (1) the property in the goods still passes from the moment of shipment, and the only effect of the seller getting the shipping documents in his own name is that he retains a jus disponendi until he has endorsed them over to the buyer. But this jus disponendi is something different from what the law means by property in the goods, and there can be no question, I think, but that even where the seller has so obtained the shipping documents in his own name, as soon as he afterwards hands them over to the buyer, the property in the goods in law must be taken to have passed from the moment of shipment. The transfer of the documents by endorsement, either direct to the buyer or in blank and so conveyed to the buyer, merely eliminates the jus disponendi which up to that moment the seller had retained. And I am now to examine whether in such a case there is any real renewal of a contract between the buyer and him who, in the first instance, executed the shipping documents to the seller. I have already shown that this need not necessarily be so. Is it in fact ever so within the meaning of the Proclamation? I confess I entertain grave doubts. It is not for himself that the seller has made these contracts. He is to take no benefit under them. He merely acts pursuant to the ordinary course of business in this matter, for and on behalf of the buyer, and the substitution of the real for the apparent relation seems to me to leave the matter exactly where it was at the time the shipping documents were obtained.

This brings me to my last criticism and clear statement of what I conceive to be the logical infirmity underlying all these cases. It turns upon an exact view of the importance of the time element. If I am correct in the first part of my judgment, and I have no doubt I am, in holding that a tender of shipping documents which at the time are so tendered are in all respects good and in order, finally completes the contractual relations up till then existing between the seller and the buyer, so far, that is to say, as any obligation of performance still rests on the seller, it is obvious that where war is imminent according to the decisions of the English Courts everything depends upon the precise moment of time at which the shipping documents passed into the hands of the buyer. If they come into his possession as good contracts before the declaration of hostilities, then the decision in such cases as Arnhold Karbergs & Company's case (4) certainly could not apply to them and the fact that war broke out almost immediately afterwards would not, in my opinion, absolve the buyer from his obligation to pay the bill which he had accepted against these shipping documents. But if that be so, then it is clear that in effect, from the first, no logical ground could be assigned for drawing a distinction in the rights and obligations of the parties to each other in C. I. F. dealings according as the shipping documents, all good legal contracts at the time, either were or may happen to come into the hands of the buyer before or after some wholly unexpected supervening condition has rendered them void. In a case, for example, such as that with which I am dealing, suppose the parties had been within three days' post of each other, the plaintiffs might have sent the shipping documents relating to the cargo aboard the "Kybfels" to the defendants just one day before the outbreak of the war. In every other respect the relative position of the parties would have been exactly the same. Every fact would have remained unaltered. And if the defendants had accepted against these documents on the 3rd August, I do not see how they could have been heard to say afterwards that they were not obliged to pay on maturity. It is clear, therefore, that so far as the first and by far the most important stage of these transactions is concerned, there was nothing wrong with the documents which the plaintiffs obtained, nor would their transmission to, and acceptance by, the defendants at any point of time before the 4th August 1914 have enabled them to say that by substituting the real and intended contractual relations between themselves and the shipping-master, for those which nominally appeared in the first instance on the papers between the plaintiffs and the shipping master, they were entering into contractual relations with the enemy or in any other sense contravening the words or intention of the King's Proclamation. Now, see how finely these two conflicting results can be brought together in point of time. What would have been in all respects perfectly good consideration on Wednesday, let us say, may be a very bad consideration, according to the decisions of the English Courts, on Thursday; and between these two days we may still further narrow the line of distinction. I confess that when the subject is approached in this way the substantial ground upon which most of the English cases rest seems to me to become extremely infirm and insecure. In the first place because, as I have said, it is not really a case of a person entering into new contractual relations with an enemy, as is always assumed in the judgments of the English Courts. Rightly analysed they were, and were intended to be, his contractual relations and nobody else's from the moment that the papers of the contract were duly executed, and, secondly, because I do not think that if that be really so, it can be a case of the kind contemplated by section 56 of the Indian Contract Act. It is not according to my understanding, as between the seller and the buyer on C. I. F. terms, the case of a contract good at its inception becoming void by the supervening of new condition; for as between the seller and the buyer with whom alone I am concerned, the particular contracts under examination do not exist and never have existed, and I have already shown that this must be so, the commonest cases which may occur often introducing no special difficulties due to the outbreak of war. In no C. I. F. contract that I have heard of, once the shipping documents had been obtained in good order and made over to the buyer, has the seller any further concern with them whatever. But it is said that he must tender, as consideration for the buyer accepting his bill, valid, legal and existing contracts. I really do not see that that consists with the theory of C. I. F. dealings. Certainly they must have been at the time they were made legal and valid contracts. Else, doubtless, they would form no consideration whatever for the buyer parting with his money before the receipt of the goods, but once they fulfil those conditions they are in themselves the consideration for which the buyer pays his money; and the fact that owing to the length of time required for their transmission and the supervening of altogether unexpected and paramount conditions, they have unfortunately become void before they reached the buyer, appears to me on a strict analysis to be a question as much between him and the other parties to those contracts, and one from which the seller is entirely excluded as though the supervening of those conditions had been postponed till, say, one minute after the shipping documents had come into the buyer's hands. If the true view of the law be that the seller has completed all that he was bound to do under a C. I. F. contract by procuring for the buyer valid and legal bills of lading and a valid and legal insurance, then it may be argued, as it has been argued here, and I think that the weight of logic and reason is in favour of that argument, that he has done all that he was required to do under the contract and is entitled to claim immediate payment. He cannot have immediate payment owing to intervening conditions of space and time which prevent the documents being instantly transferred to the buyer; but for the sake of theoretical exactness I should have thought that that consideration might have been ignored and the result regarded as being wholly unaffected by it. Such, however, does not appear to have been the view of the Courts in England. They appear to have thought that the contract between the shipper and the insurance company and the buyer was in the first instance a contract between the shipper and the insurance company and the seller, and that if it should unfortunately become void before it could reach the buyer, the resultant loss was to be the seller's and not the buyer's. But that presupposes that which is not in fact true, namely, that these contracts are really in the first instance contracts made for the benefit and advantage of the seller and that there is a real transference and in substance the making of a new real contract between the buyer and those who in the first instance contracted with his seller. It is there, I think, the fallacy underlying all these decisions can be exposed.

I have endeavoured to lay this matter out in some detail because I wish in the first instance to disentangle the decision of cases of this kind from considerations drawn from section 43 of the Negotiable Instruments Act and section 56 of the Indian Contract Act. Next, because I do not think that the cardinal principle upon which all these cases have to be decided is really affected in the slightest degree by the prohibition of the King's Proclamation. And lastly, because in certain of the more recent cases there seems to me to have been considerable confusion of principles, some drawn from the common law and some from the King's Proclamation, to which Courts have referred as the ground of their decisions. That has made the subject difficult and complicated. But it does appear to me to have been too hastily assumed that in every case of the kind buyers are at liberty to resile from their contracts when loss is inevitable, merely because the shipping documents, perfectly good at the time they were made, have become void as between those who are the true parties to them, and in this manner to shift what ought to be the buyer's loss to the seller.

Such are my own views at present and expressed with the greatest deference to English authority upon this somewhat vexed question. Nevertheless I should hesitate to give effect to them in a case of this kind which is exactly covered by a decision of the English Court of Appeal. There is in fact no point which I can discover upon which it would have been differentiated upon principle from the decision in Arnhold Karberg & Company's case (4). That case was decided by the most eminent authority in England upon this particular branch of law. His opinion was confirmed by three eminent Judges of appeal; and it would seem to be merely inviting appeal and further expense if I were to set up my own opinion against such high authority. Considering the case undistinguishable in all essentials from Arnhold Karberg & Company's case (4), I think it would really be to the interest of all parties to hold myself bound by that decision, and, therefore, to say that inasmuch as the bill of lading had become a void contract before it was tendered to the defendants on the 10th November 1914, there was at the time a failure of consideration for the acceptance of the bill of exchange and they were, therefore, not bound to pay at maturity. It has been contended that their acceptance was unconditional and, therefore, in any event they were bound to pay. That cannot be. The plaintiffs have never denied that they were bound to supply the ordinary shipping documents according to the custom of C. I. F. dealings. They cannot contend that the defendants would have been equally bound to pay at maturity if they had not supplied them with any shipping documents at all. That would have been a case of making a negotiable instrument without any consideration whatever. So it is clear, and that is the footing upon which the case has been mainly argued, that the plaintiffs were bound to supply the defendants with good, legal contracts under the heads I. and F.

I think I have sufficiently indicated my own opinion, had the matter been res integra, that the plaintiffs had completely met their obligations and would have been entitled to immediate payment on maturity. But in view of the great authority the other way, I shall not give effect to what I have tentatively expressed in the form of a reasoned criticism of the matter but shall abide by the current of decisions in the English Courts. I must, therefore, hold that in respect of the shipments of aluminium circles per SS. 'Kybfels' the defendants were justified in refusing to pay at maturity and that the plaintiffs in respect of so much of their claim have no case, and the suit must, therefore, be dismissed with all costs, save and except such costs as may on taxation be held to have been incurred over so much of the claim, viz., Rs. 201, as in the first part of this judgment I have decreed to the plaintiffs. Those costs the plaintiffs will have from the defendants.

The amount deposited by the defendants in Court, viz., Rs. 4,001, the defendants to have liberty to withdraw.

Suit dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—This is a suit for damages for wrongful dismissal. The plaintiff was appointed co-editor of the Madras Times in January 1912 for a period of ten years. He was dismissed from service on the 21st of February 1914. The learned Judge held that the dismissal was right. The appeal raises questions relating to the validity of the plaintiff's appointment and the competency of the Directors to dismiss him. It is not necessary to deal with these questions. The appeal can be disposed of on a shorter ground.

Mr. C. P. Ramasami Aiyar, examined for the plaintiff, deposed thus:

By THE COURT.—You said that the plaintiff has not, to your knowledge, been employed elsewhere since leaving the Times?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Could he have obtained employment?

A.—I do not think so at all.

Q.—Why?

A.—He cannot be a co-editor or manager of a paper elsewhere from my knowledge of him. He has not the qualifications for it.

The plaintiff has not gone into the witness-box to swear to the contrary. We must, therefore, take it as established that the plaintiff should not have been appointed as co-editor as he had no qualifications for the appointment. On this conclusion of fact, it is obvious that the plaintiff cannot recover damages from the defendant.

In Smith's "Master and Servant," it is pointed out, quoting Chitty on Pleadings, that a servant suing for wrongful dismissal will have to plead that he was and is competent to discharge his duties, but that he was wrongfully dismissed. Willes, J., says in Harmer v. Cornelius (1) that "when a skilled labourer, artizan or artist is employed, there is on his part an implied warranty that he is of skill reasonably competent to the task he undertakes." The further question is where a person is employed who has not the required competency for the office, is his dismissal wrongful, because he has been turned out before the time fixed in the agreement. Mr. Rozario is right in his contention that there is nothing in the records of this case to warrant the suggestion of the learned Trial Judge that the plaintiff "obtained his position under the Company in a manner which is unexplained and extremely suspicious." It must be assumed for the sake of argument that both the parties acted honestly and that the plaintiff practised no deception. Even then, on the finding, as to want of capacity the dismissal must be upheld. Mr. Justice Willes in the case already quoted states that "the failure to afford the requisite skill which had been expressly or impliedly promised is a breach of legal duty and, therefore, misconduct." On this fiction of law it has been held that the dismissal of a servant would be right. Jervis, C. J., in Jenkins v. Betham (2) upheld the dismissal of an arbitrator for "ignorance of the subject and incompetency to act in the business." Lord Ellenborough in Shain v. Arnott (3) held that "there is no material difference between a servant who will not and a servant who cannot perform the duty for which he was hired."

Applying the above principles, it is clear that the dismissal of the plaintiff by the company was justified. The learned Judge has, however, directed that the plaintiff to pay "costs in the higher scale." The case does not present any difficulties and no reasons are given why the plaintiff who was employed for a fixed period should be regarded as having abused the process of the Court in suing for damages for wrongful dismissal. The appeal must be dismissed with costs, but the decree of the learned Judge must be modified by directing that the ordinary costs of a single Counsel be paid by the plaintiff for the original trial.

ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

party. The hundi was endorsed by the payee to the plaintiffs on 11th May 1914. The plaintiffs endorsed it to Khub Chand-Saligram, who endorsed it to Kanhaya Lal-Brij Lal. The hundi was never presented to the drawers for acceptance, but some time on the 10th July 1914, it was presented by the holder for payment. In the meantime the firm of the drawers failed somewhere about the 8th to 10th July 1914. The drawees refused to pay the amount. The last holder, therefore, demanded repayment from his endorser and obtained it. In the same way the plaintiffs in their turn had to pay to their endorsee, and in their turn they now claim payment from the defendants of the first set (their endorsers) as well as the drawers. The Courts below have given a decree against the drawers, but have dismissed the suit against the payees. The decree against drawers is perhaps of but little value as their business has failed. The plaintiffs, therefore, have appealed to this Court with the object of obtaining a decree against their endorsers. The hundi was never presented for acceptance by any one, and payment was refused when it was presented for payment on 10th July 1914. The question in the case is, whether the payees who endorsed over the hundi to the plaintiffs are responsible for the amount claimed.

Under section 35 of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881) in the absence of a contract to the contrary, whoever endorses and delivers a negotiable instrument before maturity, without in such endorsement excluding or making conditional his own liability, is bound thereby to every subsequent holder, in case of dishonour by the drawee, acceptor, or maker, to compensate such holder for any loss or damage caused to him by such dishonour, provided due notice of the dishonour has been given to or received by such endorser as hereinafter provided.

Again under section 37, "the drawer of a bill of exchange until acceptance, and the acceptor are, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, respectively liable thereon as principal debtors, and the other parties thereto are liable thereon as sureties for..... the drawer or acceptor, as the case may be." Section 38, however, lays down that "as between the parties so liable as sureties, each prior party is, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, also liable thereon as a principal debtor in respect of each subsequent party."

Under these sections the defendants-payees are liable to the plaintiff, provided notice of the dishonour has been given to, or received by, them as provided by the Act. In paragraph No. 5 of the plaint, the plaintiff alleges the giving of such notice, which is not denied in Hira Lal's written statement. The grounds on which the defendants or respondents seek to repudiate their liability are:—

(1) That the hundi was not presented at proper time for acceptance.

(2) That the last purchaser of the hundi did not give notice of non-acceptance to the contesting defendant at the proper time.

(3) That Khub Chand and Kalian Das, after purchasing the hundi, took discount two months in advance from the drawers and gave them two months' further time to pay the hundi and did not send it for acceptance to the drawee.

In the case of a hundi like this, payable sixty-one days after date, the payee or endorsee is not bound to present it for acceptance at once, though it would be prudent for him to do so. Non-presentation for acceptance, therefore, does not relieve the defendants from responsibility. The defendants themselves might have presented it for acceptance before endorsing it over to the plaintiffs. They, however, did not do so, nor did they make it a condition of their liability that presentment for acceptance should be made within a specified time. I come now to the second point raised by the defence. Every bill of exchange, which is not expressed to be payable on demand, at sight, or on presentment, is at maturity on the third day after the day on which it is expressed to be payable (vide section 22 of the Act). A bill of exchange payable at a specified period after date must be presented for payment at maturity (section 66 of the Act). The period of sixty-one days expired on 7th July 1914, and the bill was at maturity on 10th July 1914. The presentment for payment on 10th July was, therefore, correctly made. It is said that the business of the drawers failed on some date between 8th and 10th July 1914. The lower Appellate Court has not found the exact date on which the business of the drawers failed but the endorseees were, however, not bound to present it for payment before 10th July 1914. The delay in presentment for payment does not relieve the defendants respondents from liability. Section 94 lays down that notice of dishonour must be given within a reasonable time, and the party receiving such notice in order to make a prior party liable should give notice of such dishonour within a reasonable time (section 95). The learned Judge has recorded no finding on the point. The view of the law taken by him is entirely erroneous. Neither Court has recorded any finding on the third point. We cannot at this stage determine the case finally. The learned Subordinate Judge has, on an erroneous view of law, held that the respondents are not liable, and has disposed of the case on a preliminary point. We would allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case under rule 23 of Order XLI to the lower Appellate Court, with directions to restore the appeal to the file of pending appeals and hear and dispose of the same according to law. Costs here and hitherto incurred will abide the result.

JUDGMENT.

ROE, J.—In this case the appellant is a cultivator of the District of Manbhum, who, prior to the passing of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, was an under-raiyat in an occupancy holding from which the occupancy raiyat had been evicted for failure to pay rent. He retained possession after the decree against the occupancy raiyat and also after the execution of that decree by delivery of possession to the decree-holder. That decree was obtained on the 6th April 1908, and possession was delivered on the 8th June 1908 and the present suit instituted on the 3rd July 1911. The Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act was extended to the locality in which this holding is situate in the year 1909. The proceedings before us, therefore, prior to the present suit, were under the Rent Act X of 1859, and the present suit itself is to be considered in the light of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act.

The plaintiff claims to evict the defendant as a trespasser. To be on the safe side he also issued a notice upon him to quit, but as he states in his plaint he is confident that any such notice was unnecessary. The defendant puts up three defences.

First, that he is a tenant and that, therefore, under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act he is not liable to eviction by any Civil Court save that of the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum. Secondly, that he is an under-raiyat and that the interest of an under-raiyat is an incumbrance upon the holding not void but only voidable and that his under-tenancy has never been avoided in the manner contemplated by the Rent Act; and thirdly, if he is to be regarded as a trespasser he has a right to enter into a contest upon the validity of the decree made against the occupancy raiyat for ejectment for failure to pay rent. Practically, therefore, we have to consider only one question in this case and that is whether the defendant was a trespasser or a tenant. If his interest was an incumbrance obviously he was a tenant; if he was a tenant no suit against him would lie; if he is a trespasser action may be taken against him in the ordinary Civil Court.

The lower Courts have concurred in finding that he is a trespasser. After full consideration of this question we feel that we must agree with the conclusions arrived at by the lower Courts. We have searched the Weekly Reporter for any expression of opinion in respect to the status of an under-raiyyat in the case of an occupancy holding from which a raiyyat has been evicted for non-payment of rent. There is ample justification for the proposition that where a holding of an occupancy raiyyat is sold, the interest of an under-raiyyat is not void but voidable. But there is no case of an under-raiyyat's status being recognised in a case in which the occupancy holding is entirely destroyed under the old Rent Law. Section 82 seems to us to completely decide the question by its direction that when a decree is for eviction, the decree-holder shall be put in actual physical possession of the land. There is a clear distinction between proceedings in regard to a tenure-holder and proceedings in regard to a raiyyat. Where the proceeding has been with regard to a tenure-holder or under-tenant the decree is to take the form of an order to all raiyyats to pay rent to the decree-holder, and it seems to us that it is impossible to say that the decree-holder can be put into actual physical possession of the land, unless indeed it be conceded that the under-raiyyat is completely ignored and treated as having no locus standi.

The remaining point for decision is whether the under-raiyyat can, in the proceedings now before us, contest the validity of the decree against his lessor. His lessor was Rajendra Chowdhury and he obtained the holding by a sale for arrears of rent. It is clearly set out in Act X of 1859 that a sale for arrears of rent can only take place in the case of an interest which is transferable. It is clearly laid down that a decree for ejectment can only be made in a case in which the holding is not transferable.

Therefore, Mr. Naresh Chandra Sinha argues that the two decrees are contradictory in terms; one or other of them must be wrong, and he contends that it was open to his client to come forward and contest the second decree. Here again it is clear that the under-raiyyat could not contest the validity of that decree in this suit as defendant, unless he had a locus standi to contest the validity thereof in a separate suit in which he would have been the plaintiff. We can find nothing whatever in any part of Act X of 1859 which could give an under-raiyyat a locus standi to institute such a suit or proceeding as plaintiff. He might perhaps have maintained a suit for a declaration that the decree was fraudulently obtained and, therefore, a nullity. But he had no locus standi to have it declared that it was contrary to law. Therefore, he cannot put forward the illegality of that decree as a defence to a suit in which it is sought to declare him a trespasser.

In these circumstances we feel the decision of the lower Court is correct and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

and offers to make some other suitable arrangement for the junior members who are in possession of the land. [p. 660, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Palghat at Calicut, in Appeal Suit No. 272 of 1914, preferred against that of the District Munsif, Alatur, in Original Suit No. 82 of 1913.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Appu Nair, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The 1st plaintiff obtained a lease from the 2nd plaintiff, the present karnavan of the tarwad to which the defendants belong. It is found that the 1st plaintiff, as a matter of fact, did not pay the Rs. 600 towards the consideration of the lease and the Munsif has also found that the lease was not a bona fide one. But it is contended by Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar that the question of consideration is not relevant, so far as his client's right to recover possession from the defendants is concerned. The 2nd plaintiff, on the decree being made dismissing the suit, did not appeal against the decree. It is the 1st plaintiff that appealed to the lower Court. Therefore, so far as the 2nd plaintiff is concerned, the decree against him is binding and is conclusive of his rights. So far as the 1st plaintiff's rights are concerned, even supposing that the 1st plaintiff had a bona fide lease, we do not think that he is entitled to oust the defendants from the possession. The defendants are in possession as junior members of the tarwad under an arrangement made sometimes ago, by which they were given possession of this land in lieu of maintenance to which they were entitled.

It has been held in Ekknath Eachara Unni Valia Kaimal v. Manakkat Vasunni Elaya Kaimal (1) that where there has been a bona fide arrangement of this character, that arrangement is binding on the succeeding karnavans and cannot be set aside unless for good cause. No such cause is alleged in this case. Further it was ruled in Second Appeal No. 563 of 1905 that a suit for recovery of possession of land which has been granted in lieu of maintenance, cannot be maintained unless the succeeding karnavan seeks to set aside the arrangement and offers to make some other suitable arrangement for the maintenance of the junior members who are in possession of the land.

It is urged by Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar that Ayling and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ., in Second Appeal No. 78 of 1915 have dissented from that view. Apparently the judgment in Second Appeal No. 563 was brought to their notice, but the learned Judges do not discuss the question and do not say that they did not agree in the view of law laid down in Second Appeal No. 563 of 1905. They only say that the offer of maintenance is not a condition precedent to the maintainability of a suit of this character. We think that the law as laid down in Second Appeal No. 563 of 1905, which is in accordance with the view expressed in Ekknath Eachara Unni Valia Kaimal v. Manakkat Vasunni Elaya Kaimal (1), is reasonable and correct.

The third point argued by Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar is that the 1st plaintiff should at least have been given a decree for arrears of rent. But his main case was that the defendants were not entitled to possession and it was he that was entitled to possession under the lease. No doubt under clause 6 of the lease (Exhibit A) the 1st plaintiff is entitled to recover the arrears of rent from the defendants for the year 1087 in lieu of interest on Rs. 500, which is said to have been paid by him. It has been found, however, by both the Courts that he did not pay any such amount. That being the finding, we see no force in this contention of Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar.

The result is, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent against the order of Mr. Justice Walsh, dated the 27th March 1916.

FACTS.—The facts material for this report are as follows:—

One Niadar, a Maha Brahmin now deceased, mortgaged his birt jajmani right to the plaintiff, another Maha Brahmin, by a usufructuary mortgage-deed, dated 19th June 1906, for Rs. 300. The stipulation was that the mortgagee would officiate as priest at Hindu funeral ceremonies in place of the mortgagor and appropriate the profits for the first six days in every alternate month in the town of Sarsawa and the appurtenant villages in lieu of interest. The plaintiff alleged that he enjoyed this right till August 1912, when he was dispossessed by the defendant, the successor of the mortgagor. He came into Court claiming Rs. 350 as damages suffered on account of dispossession and seeking to bring to sale the birt jajmani right to raise the above amount.

The defence, inter alia, was that the birt jajmani right of a Maha Brahmin was not immoveable property and by its nature was not capable of being mortgaged.

The Court of first instance, the Munsif of Shaharanpur, accepted the defendant's plea and dismissed the suit. On appeal the District Judge set aside the decree of the Munsif and held that such a right was immoveable property and could be validly mortgaged. The defendant then appealed to the High Court and that Court confirmed the decree of the District Judge. Thereupon the defendant filed a Letters Patent Appeal.

Mr. A. Haider, for the Appellant.—Maha Brahmin's birt jajmani right is not immoveable property as understood in the Transfer of Property Act, and if such a right is not immoveable property it cannot be the subject of a mortgage (section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act). Then such a right from its very nature is uncertain. There is a mere chance or possibility of getting something. The gift to a Maha Brahmin is voluntary and one may choose his priest. Such a property, if it be called a property, cannot be transferred (section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act).

[RICHARDS, C. J.—Is there anything illegal in pledging whatever right one has?]

Mr. A. Haider.—No, but in this case the right is so uncertain.

[BANERJI, J.—If there be an agreement between Maha Brahmins to take offerings in turn is it enforceable?]

Mr. A. Haider.—Yes, but it is not immoveable property and is not a specific something.

Referred to Jhummun Pandey v. Dinoonath Pandey (1) and Puncha Thakur v. Bindesri Thakur (2). The principle of the last ruling applies in this case and is in my favour.

[RICHARDS, C. J.—The reasoning in the last case is self-contradictory. If no property passed by sale how could the sons be given possession?]

Mr. A. Haider.—There is a ruling of this Court in which it has been held that such a right cannot be mortgaged; vide Gopi Nath v. Jhandu (3). There is no doubt that in this case birt jajmani bahies were mortgaged but really it was a right to take offerings from the persons whose names were entered in the bahies.

SUKH LAL C. BISHAMBHAR.

Mr. A. Haider.—Yes, but a Maha Brahmin's right is altogether different. It is intangible. It is res extra commercium also. Gour's Transfer of Property Act, Volume I. The present is like the case of pujaries.

[RICHARDS, C. J.—In the case of pujaries it is a purely voluntary offering. In the case of Maha Brahmins offerings are always made but there may be a choice.]

Mr. A. Haider.—In the case of pujaries also one may choose his pujari.

There is no estoppel if the mortgagor comes into Court and says that there can be no mortgage of a right like this.

There is necessity of the property being specific; vide Gour's Transfer of Property Act, Volume II, page 799.

[BANERJI, J.—It is specified as the offering of the six days?]

Mr. A. Haider.—No one may come on those six days.

[BANERJI, J.—He takes his chance.]

[RICHARDS, C. J.—Suppose there is a right of fishing on particular days. There is no certainty of one's catching fish on those particular days. Can such a right be transferred?]

Mr. A. Haider.—It can be transferred for the fish is there.

[RICHARDS, C. J.—I only give the illustration to show that the uncertainty of getting the thing is not the test.]

Mr. A. Haider.—Then the Court should not pass a decree which cannot be executed. Vide Durga Prasad v. Genda (4). It is in the nature of a personal service and cannot be attached or sold in execution of the decree.

Mr. Binode Bihari, for the Respondent.—This kind of right is of great value to the possessor and there is a custom of transferring such right. Such a right is peculiar to Hindu Law and has always been treated as immoveable property. Vide Krishnabhat v. Kapabhat (5), Balwantrav v. Purshotam Sedheshwar (6), *Baghoo Pandey v. JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought on foot of an alleged mortgage. The mortgagor and the mortgagee were both Maha Brahmins. This is a sect which performs certain ceremonies and duties at funerals of Hindus. They generally carry out their duties at some place frequented for the purpose of cremations and other funeral ceremonies. It frequently happens that the Maha Brahmins between themselves arrive at some arrangement by which certain Maha Brahmins are allowed the exclusive right of taking offerings and remunerations on particular days. The mortgage in the present case took the form of a mortgage of the right to the dues and offerings on six days every two months. The defendants are the collateral heirs of the deceased mortgagors; but they themselves claim to have succeeded to the very rights (such as they were) which belonged to Niadar, the mortgagor. The Court of first instance dismissed the claim. The lower Appellate Court decreed the plaintiff's claim in part. The learned Judge of this Court confirmed the lower Appellate Court. The contention at both hearings in this Court, and apparently also in the lower Appellate Court, on behalf of the defendants, is that the mortgage itself is absolutely null and void, that it did not operate to transfer any right nor had Niadar any right which he was capable of transferring by mortgage or otherwise. It has been fairly and properly admitted here that our decision in the present appeal ought to be exactly the same as if the suit was one between the original mortgagee and the original mortgagor. Section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act has been quoted to us, and it is said that this so-called right of Niadar was at best a "mere possibility" within the meaning of clause (a) of that section and that the "mere possibility" was incapable of being transferred. It cannot be disputed that certain offices are performed by Maha Brahmins at the funerals of Hindus, nor can it be disputed that Maha Brahmins receive for those duties certain remunerations. The amount largely depends upon the surrounding circumstances, the generosity of the relatives carrying out the funeral and very probably, the wealth and position of the deceased. The offerings in this sense are not purely voluntary. No doubt there is no obligation upon any person to employ any particular Maha Brahmin. No Maha Brahmin could bring a suit to compel any person carrying out a funeral to employ him and it is probable that in the absence of a special agreement a Maha Brahmin could not bring a suit against another Maha Brahmin for fees received. That the right to receive the dues at funerals is looked upon by the Maha Brahmins themselves as an existing right is to some extent illustrated by this very case. The mortgage was made as far back as the year 1906, and the defendants themselves consider that they have succeeded to the rights of Niadar as his heirs. A very similar question arose in the case of Raghoo Pandey v. Kassy Parey (7). That was a suit to redeem a mortgage of these very rights. There the plaintiff was seeking to pay back money in order that he might be restored to rights which had been transferred by way of mortgage. The defendants were actually resisting redemption, considering that they had acquired rights which they would rather keep than receive the plaintiff's money. This case was decided in the year 1858, and we refer to it at the present moment as showing to what an extent these rights have been recognised by the Maha Brahmins themselves. We have already pointed out that they consider the rights of so substantial a nature that they frequently enter into arrangements between themselves specifying particular periods when different Maha Brahmins may be present at cremation grounds to perform the offices and receive dues. We have been referred to several cases, amongst others the case of Puncha Thakur v. Bindeari Thakur (2). There the plaintiffs, the sons of a deceased priest, brought a suit to be restored to a 3-anna share in the offerings at a certain temple. Their father had made a mortgage of the 3-anna share. The Court of first instance had given the plaintiffs a decree for possession and this decree was affirmed by the Calcutta High Court. The learned Judges considered that the offerings at the temple were not a class of property which could be transferred by way of mortgage and that accordingly the mortgage was null and void. We may remark that the offerings at a temple do not stand on the same basis as remuneration which Maha Brahmins receive for the services they perform at Hindu funerals. Furthermore, in that case whilst the learned Judges held that neither the mortgage nor sale conveyed any rights, nevertheless the plaintiff appears to have been successful in getting a decree for possession of these very rights. On the whole we see no reason to disagree with the decision of the lower Appellate Court and the learned Judge of this Court. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Insolvency—Infant, whether can be adjudged insolvent.

The law does not contemplate that an infant should be adjudged an insolvent, under any circumstances even in respect of judgment-debts or necessities. [p. 664, col. 1.]

Mr. S. K. Chakravarti, for the Official Assignee.

Mr. Zorab, for the Secured Creditors.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application on behalf of Gouri Sunker and the other partners in the firm of Kedarnath and Juggernath, who were adjudicated insolvents on the 29th January 1912, Gouri Sunker having been adjudicated on the 22nd November 1911. These two insolvency proceedings have been consolidated. The application now before me is to set aside the order of adjudication so far as these three persons are concerned, on the ground that they were infants at the date when the orders of adjudication made against them respectively were passed. It appears that an order was passed in the Court of the District Judge of Ghazipore under section 7 of Act VIII of 1890 (The Guardians and Wards Act) on the 11th December 1909. These three persons were minors on that date and Gouri Sunker attained his majority in the year 1916 and the other two infants will attain their majority in the years 1925 and 1928 respectively, and by virtue of the order of the District Judge of Ghazipore the age of majority of the infants will be 21. The application is opposed by certain secured creditors, who have obtained an order for sale for the purpose of realising their securities under section 2, clause 18, of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and I was referred to two sections of the Contract Act, viz., section 68, which provides that if a person incapable of entering into a contract is supplied with necessaries the person supplying the necessaries is entitled to be re-imbursed from the property of the person incapable of so contracting, and also to section 247 of the Contract Act, which provides that a person who is under the age of majority may be admitted to the benefits of partnership but cannot be made personally liable for any obligation of the firm; and the argument addressed to me founded upon these two sections was that the infants, who are rendered liable under these sections, must be debtors, or otherwise there would be no right against their property under those sections. I think that argument is not well founded. I do not think that the sections presuppose that they are debtors. In the case of infants who are under a disability, the law in this country to prevent hardships arising in the case of supply of necessaries, or in the case of a family partnership, has provided special remedies against their property, but I do not think for a moment that they are debtors, and so the distinction that Counsel who appeared for the secured creditors sought to make with regard to the English case of In re Jones, Ex parte Jones (1), the passage to which he referred being at page 119, does not seem to me well founded. I do not think that the law contemplates that an infant should be adjudged an insolvent, although there is a passage in Williams on Bankruptcy, 11th Edition, page 4, in which it is suggested that in respect of judgment debts or necessities an infant may be so adjudicated, but there is no decision which so lays down, and I do not propose to so decide in the absence of any authority for the proposition. My own view is that an infant cannot be adjudged an insolvent under any circumstances, and so I grant the application and set aside the orders of adjudication made against Gouri Sunker and the other applicants Kedarnath and Juggernath. So far as the costs of the secured creditors are concerned, they can add their costs, of their appearing here, to their securities, and I make no order against Raghbir or against the infants themselves. The Official Assignee will take his costs out of the assets in his hands.

Application granted.

Mr. K. P. Ramakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. Govinda Maron, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The melkanomdar has redeemed the prior kanom and in so doing has had to pay for improvements made by the kanomdar and he seeks to recover the same from the jenmi.

His plea that when the melcharth was executed the jenmi misrepresented that he had carried out the repairs and that there was nothing more than Rs. 600 due to the kanomdar, has been found against. The plaintiff did not seek to avoid his own melkanom in consequence of having had to pay for improvements, and in this view, the lower Courts rightly found that his suit was premature.

It is now sought to make a cause of action out of a personal covenant in the kanom deed (Exhibit B) by the jenmi to pay for repairs, the melkanomdar having succeeded to all the rights of the kanomdar, when he redeemed his mortgage under section 74 of the Transfer of Property Act. But as we read Exhibit B, the jenmi has not undertaken to pay these sums until he pays the mortgage money, and it cannot be contended that he has been called upon to do this yet.

It was next sought to base a cause of action on section 69 of the Indian Contract Act, on the ground that the jenmi was bound by law to make the payment. But the melkanomdar in this case was bound to pay for improvements when he redeemed the kanom and the jenmi was not bound by law to pay for improvements till he himself redeemed the property.

The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Rule against a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Manbhum, dated the 17th September, 1915.

Mr. Sishar Kumar Mitra, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Abani Bhusan Mukerji, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case briefly are, that the applicants before us were mortgagees, and the opposite party, mortgagors, under a deed securing the sum of Rs. 200 to the applicants. In Bysack 1321 a contract was entered into, whereby in consideration of the making of an endorsement on the back of the mortgage-deed crediting Rs. 215 to the mortgagors' account under that deed, a number of cattle, bullocks and buffaloes should be handed over to the mortgagees. The mortgagors having failed to carry out their part of the contract, the mortgagees instituted a suit in the Court of Small Causes praying in the alternative for delivery to them of the cattle, or for damages to the extent of Rs. 215 and interest for their non-delivery. The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the suit was in essence a suit for recovery of money due on the mortgage-debt; he, therefore, dismissed the plaintiffs' suit, and ordered the defendants to pay the plaintiffs' costs.

The matter now comes before us under section 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act at the instance of the mortgagee plaintiffs. It seems to us that the position throughout has been misconceived. The suit is in effect a suit upon a contract. The consideration on one side was the writing of certain words upon a piece of paper. That part of the contract has been performed by the plaintiffs. It is, therefore, necessary that the defendants should perform their part of the contract, or pay damages for its breach. Unless there is something remarkable about the bullocks and buffaloes, it is obvious that adequate compensation for the breach of the contract can be given in money. Therefore under the Specific Relief Act, section 12, no suit for specific performance would lie. But the plaintiffs have asked for that specific performance, and under section 15, Second Schedule

MANILAL BRIJLAL SHAH v. GORDON SPINNING AND MANUFACTURING CO. LTD.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, clause 15, a suit for specific performance is not cognizable by a Small Cause Court. The question before us is, the plaintiffs having asked for two reliefs in the alternative in the Small Cause Court, and one of these reliefs not being cognizable by that Court but on the face of it a relief which cannot be given in law, what action the Small Cause Court should have taken with regard to the plaint. We are of opinion that in the exercise of the discretion vested in us under section 25, substantial justice will be done if we direct that the plaint be amended by the striking out of the clause or clauses demanding specific performance of the contract. The suit will then be dealt with solely as a suit for damages occasioned by a breach of the contract. Let the learned Subordinate Judge be directed to assess those damages and to make a decree accordingly. In view of the mismanagement of this case by the plaintiffs' legal advisers we think it fair that they should pay the costs of the hearing of this Rule, hearing-fee one gold mohur. The costs of the Small Cause Court will, of course, follow the result of the action.

Rule made absolute.

JUDGMENT.

BATCHELOR, A. C. J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the learned District Judge of Ahmedabad upon an application made under section 38 of the Indian Companies Act (VII of 1913). The only facts which it is necessary to state are these. The five shares in controversy were originally owned by one Dosabhai. A decree against him was obtained by one Balmukund, and in execution of that decree these five shares were sold by the Court. They were purchased by the present applicant. As the judgment-debtor Dosabhai was unwilling to execute the transfer deed in favour of the applicant, the deed was executed by the Court. In these circumstances the applicant claims that he is entitled as of right to have his name placed on the register. The Directors have refused to register the transfer, and the learned District Judge has decided against the applicant, who consequently brings the present appeal.

MANILAL BRIJLAL SHAH v. GORDON SPINNING AND MANUFACTURING CO. LTD.

The learned Advocate-General takes a preliminary point that under section 38 of the Act the appeal is not competent. The objection is put in two ways. First, it is said that the proviso, which occurs at the end of the section, must be confined to the third clause of the section. Mr. Jardine admits that upon this point we have nothing to guide us but the framing of the section and the setting in which the proviso is placed. It appears to me that these circumstances constitute too slight and uncertain a ground for the inference which is sought, and I am of opinion, following the decision in Amrita Lal Ghose v. Shrish Chunder Chowdhry (1), that the proviso should not be confined to the last clause of the section, but must be read as a general reservation imposed on all the clauses.

Secondly, it was contended that the appeal does not lie because the conditions under which alone an appeal is granted under this section are not in this case satisfied. Now the conditions precedent to the existence of an appeal are that the lower Court should have directed an issue to be tried in which some question of law was raised, and that that Court should have come to a decision on such issue. The Advocate-General contends that no such issue was in this case directed to be tried, and consequently, that there is no decision of the kind from which alone an appeal under the proviso is sanctioned. Speaking for myself, I think that there is great force in this argument, and I am very doubtful whether strictly, and as of right, this appeal is competent. I think that the appeal is certainly not rendered competent merely by reason of the circumstance that there occurs in the lower Court's judgment a passage in which the learned Judge sets out the nature of the question before him, and that it is possible to regard that question as a question of law. It is clear that in every application made to the Court there must be some question or other for the Court's decision and I cannot concede that when that question is capable of being regarded as a question of law, nothing more is needed for the admissibility of an appeal. On the contrary, I think that if an appeal is to be admitted, there must be a specific issue of law directed by the Court to be raised, and directed with some advertence to the terms of this proviso. That has not been done in this case, and if the matter rested there, I should be inclined to say that the appeal did not lie. But it has been conceded before us that in the past the practice in these matters has been to this extent lax that wherever an Appellate Court could seem to discern a question of law in the judgment of the lower Court, an appeal has always been allowed, even though no specific issue had been directed to the point. In this state of circumstances, rather than allow the present appellant to be prejudiced by the laxity of procedure in the past, I am prepared to admit the appeal and consider it on its merits.

Now on the merits the simple question involved is whether the appellant is entitled to claim that the Directors shall register his transfer, and is so entitled by reason of the fact that he is a purchaser at a Court-sale and not a private purchaser. For admittedly, if he were a private purchaser, he would not be entitled to throw any such obligation upon the Directors. It is urged that his position in this respect is substantially improved because he is a Court-purchaser. But after all the argument which we have heard from Mr. Thakor, I am unable to see in what respect his position is materially altered or improved by the circumstance that he purchased at a Court-sale. It may be that when the Directors refuse to approve a transfer after a Court-sale in execution, there may ensue inconveniences in practice. But similar inconveniences will also ensue when a private purchaser's transfer is refused to be accepted by the Directors acting within the limits of their discretion. For the purposes of this argument, we must, of course, assume that the Directors would be within their powers in refusing to register the present appellant if he were a private purchaser, and not a Court-purchaser. Upon that assumption, I can see no reason why the Directors' powers should be curtailed merely because the appellant purchased at a Court sale. For whether the sale is made by a private individual or by a Court, it seems to me clear that the thing sold and transferred from the seller to the buyer is merely the property in the share plus a limited, not an absolute, right to have the transfer registered. But the appellant here contends, and must contend, that when he purchased from the Court, he purchased, over and above the share, the absolute right of forcing the Directors to register his name. But that is a right which ex hypothesi the Court never had to sell: I infer that the appellant never bought it. This conclusion seems to me to be reinforced by the consideration to which the learned Judge has referred, the consideration, namely, that upon the case for the appellant nothing would be easier than to override that part of the memorandum of association which invests the Directors with a discretion to refuse to admit undesirable candidates. For if the appellant is right, then a person whose professed object might be to wreck or damage the Company could nevertheless oust the Directors' discretion, and compel them to register him, by the simple process of purchasing through the Court after a collusive decree. On these grounds, I am of opinion that notwithstanding that the appellant's purchase was made through the Court, the Directors' powers, under the memorandum of association, of refusing to accept the appellant as a share-holder, are unaffected. Upon this point the learned District Judge has held that the Directors were justified in their refusal, and all that is necessary now to say upon this part of the case is that on the facts found no question arises which could properly be urged under section 100 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is clear from those facts that the Directors would be justified in thinking, as they did think, that the appellant's object in obtruding himself upon this company was to impede and hamper and embarrass the business of the company, not to promote it. I think, therefore, that the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

SHAH, J.—I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

The preliminary objection raised by the learned Advocate-General on behalf of the respondent that no appeal lies in this case is based on two grounds: first, that the proviso to section 38 of the Indian Companies Act (VII of 1913) applies only to sub-section (3) and not to the whole section generally; and, secondly, that the lower Court having omitted to direct an issue to be tried there can be no appeal.

As to the first ground, I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the proviso applies to the section generally and not only to the last sub-section. The corresponding proviso to section 53 of the Indian Companies Act of 1882 has been held to be applicable to the whole section in Amrita Lal Ghose v. Shrish Chunder Chowdhry (1); and it seems to me that the position of the proviso with reference to the sub-sections in the new Act is all the more favourable to this construction. Besides, I am unable to appreciate the significance of this contention in this particular case, as under sub-section (3) the Court "generally may, decide any question necessary or expedient, to be decided for the rectification of the register." It is not possible to suggest that the question decided by the lower Court was not necessary for the rectification of the register.

The second ground is based upon the suggestion that in this case the Court has not directed any issue to be tried. It is apparently true that there is no such express direction. Having regard, however, to the procedure which is usually followed in applications under this section, it seems to me that though there was no express direction for the trial of the issue arising in this application, it was necessarily involved in the consideration of the application; and under the circumstances it is not unreasonable to hold that there was substantially a direction to try an issue raising the question set forth by the learned District Judge in his judgment, and that an appeal on the issue is competent. At the same time having regard to the fact that under the proviso as framed in the Indian Companies Act of 1913 the appeal is allowed from the decision of an issue directed to be tried, it is necessary and desirable that there should be a clear direction as to the trial of an issue, so that there may be no obscurity on the point, and no room for the argument that there was no issue directed to be tried and consequently no right of appeal. At the same time it is clear from the terms of the proviso that an appeal can lie from the decision of an issue directed to be tried on the grounds mentioned in section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The issue in this case raises two questions, one of law, and the other of fact. The question of law is whether the purchaser of certain shares of a limited company at a Court-sale in execution of a decree against the share-holder is entitled as of right to have the shares transferred by the company to his name. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the company has no discretion in the matter, and has no power to refuse to transfer the shares to the name of the auction-purchaser. It is common ground that a private purchaser from a share-holder must submit his application for transfer to the company and the application is liable to be dealt with by the Directors as provided by Articles 22 and 23 of the articles of association of the company in question. But it is argued that the auction-purchaser in virtue of his purchase at a Court-sale has a much higher right in this respect than a private purchaser. On principle I am quite unable to see how the purchaser at a Court-sale can have any higher right. He purchases the property subject to the same limitations to which the original owner could sell privately. The intervention of the Court, and the compulsory character of the sale, cannot prejudice the rights of the company and cannot alter the position of the purchaser in any way on this point. There is nothing in the provisions of the Indian Companies Act and the Code of Civil Procedure to support the argument that the company is deprived of its usual powers, and relieved of its corresponding obligations, to deal with a transfer application, when the transfer is sought in virtue of a Court-sale. Mr. Thakor has relied upon rule 79 of Order XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure in support of his argument. Under that rule, after the Court-sale both the judgment-debtor and the company are prevented from transferring the shares and from receiving any dividend from, or paying it to, any person except the purchaser; and it is urged that if the company can be prevented from transferring the shares or paying the dividend to anybody except the purchaser, it must involve the result that the purchaser should be accepted as the transferee or else the company would be able to keep the benefit of the shares to itself. I do not think that the provisions of the rule involve any such result. Even though under the rule a company may be prevented from transferring the shares or paying the dividend to any person except the purchaser, it does not follow that the purchaser at a Court-sale is in any worse position than a private purchaser from a share-holder, whom the Directors have refused to accept as a proper transferee in the exercise of their powers under the articles of association. In considering this question we are not concerned with the inconveniences which would result to a particular individual from the Directors' exercising their discretion against him. It is enough for the purposes of this appeal to point out that in this respect the position of a purchaser at a Court-sale is not worse than that of a private purchaser under the rule, and that it cannot be made any better in virtue of the rule.

Mr. Thakor has relied upon Reg. v. East Indian Railway Company (2) in support of his argument. But as I read that case the decision turns upon the facts and circumstances of that case: it cannot be properly accepted as an authority for the broad proposition of law for which Mr. Thakor contends in this appeal.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the purchaser at a Court-sale is not entitled as of right to have his name entered in the register of the company as a share-holder. He is subject to the same rules on this point as a private purchaser undoubtedly is.

The second question raised in the issue is a question of fact, viz., whether on the facts stated the Directors have exercised their discretion properly in refusing to accept the present appellant as a transferee of the original share-holder. The learned District Judge has come to the conclusion that under the circumstances of this case the discretion of the Directors was "wisely" exercised. It is not necessary for me to express any opinion on this point; and I say nothing as to the merits or justice of the refusal by the Directors to transfer the shares to the present appellant. It is clear that the ground upon which the appeal is based is not covered by the grounds mentioned in section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

(2) 1 Ind. Jur. (N. S.) 258; Boulike O. C. 395.

SAFAIT HOSSAIN v. WAIZUDDIN.

Appeal dismissed.

A mafi from the total rent allowed by the landlord to a jeth raiyat in consideration of services to be performed by the latter is not rent, inasmuch as the amount is payable by the landlord to the tenant and, therefore, a decision ascertaining the amount of such mafi is not a decision as to the amount of rent annually payable by a tenant, within the meaning of section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Muzaffarpore, dated the 31st July 1915, reversing the decree of the Munsif, 1st Court, Muzaffarpore, dated the 26th April 1915.

Mr. Baidyanath Narayan Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. Atul Krishna Ray, for the Respondents.
JUDGMENT.

SHARFUDDIN, J.—A preliminary objection has been made by the respondent in this appeal, namely, that under section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act no appeal lies inasmuch as the amount claimed in the suit is within Rs. 100, and that the decree appealed against is a decree passed by a District Judge and there has been no decision arrived at as to the amount of rent annually payable by a tenant. On behalf of the appellant, by way of reply, it was contended that the order amounts to one that would naturally go to affect the amount of rent payable by the tenant. The facts of the case are, that a rent suit was instituted by the landlord against the defendant-respondent. A question arose in that suit how much was mafi in favour of the defendant of that suit, who was a jeth raiyat. The first Court gave a decree and in appeal to the District Judge that learned officer held that the mafi was Rs. 3-5-0 on the whole rent. The plaintiff has now appealed to this Court. We are of opinion that Rs. 3-5-0 or any sum that may have been mentioned in the khatian as mafi was not rent. The defendant who is a respondent in the present appeal was a jeth raiyat, and jeth raiyats have to perform certain duties under the landlord, as for example, calling tenants for the collection of rent and such similar duties, and for that they are allowed by the landlord, by way of wages and instead of payment in cash, a mafi from the total rent. This mafi is not rent because it is a sum of money payable by the landlord to the tenant. Rent is money which is payable by the tenant to the landlord, and the mafi is a set-off against the rent. It is also important to note that in the suit itself there was no dispute as to the annual rent payable by the tenant. The dispute was as to whether a tenant is or is not entitled to claim this mafi as a set-off, and for the above reasons we hold that under section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act no appeal lies to this Court.

The appeal, therefore, must be dismissed with costs.

ROE, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Landlord and tenant—Suit for rent by co-sharer landlord, or in the alternative for refund of excess collected by other sharers, maintainability of—Necessity of distinct averments in plaint—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 31.

A suit is maintainable by one of several joint landlords for recovery of the balance of rent due from a tenant and in the alternative, for recovery of sums which may have been collected by his co-sharers in excess of their legitimate share. [p. 671, col. 2.]

The ground for this alternative claim should be specifically set forth in the plaint and should not be made to rest on the general, superfluous prayer asking for such reliefs as to the Court may seem fit, as such general prayer does not cover a relief arising from a different cause of action. JUDGMENT.—In this Rule the question for consideration is, whether the Small Cause Court Judge properly made a decree against the petitioner. The plaintiff instituted this suit for recovery of arrears of rent from the 1st defendant, who was described in the plaint as the principal defendant. Three other persons were joined as pro forma defendants. The allegations in the plaint do not establish any cause of action against these persons, indeed, the only prayer was that a decree for Rs. 12 might be made in favour of the plaintiff against the defendant, that is, the principal defendant. At the trial, it transpired that the 2nd defendant (who was alleged by the plaintiff to be his co-sharer) had realised from the tenant defendant the amount claimed. The Court thereupon proceeded to dismiss the suit as against the tenant and make a decree against the 2nd defendant. The second defendant, who is the petitioner in this Court, contends that the decree should be set aside on two grounds; first, that as the plaint does not disclose a cause of action against him, he could not be justly made liable; and secondly, that even if the plaintiff were allowed to put forward a claim against him, such claim would be excluded from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court by the second portion of Article 31 of the Second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. In our opinion these contentions are well founded.

As regards the first ground, it is not disputed that there was no prayer for relief as against the 2nd defendant and the facts set out in the plaint do not disclose a cause of action against him. It is argued, however, that the Court was competent to make a decree against him on the basis of the general prayer in the plaint. There is clearly no force in this contention. No doubt, a suit is maintainable by one of several joint landlords for recovery of balance of rent due from a tenant; and in the alternative, for recovery of sums which may have been collected by his co-sharers in excess of this legitimate share, Ahamudin v. Grish Chunder Shamunt(1), Sham Singh v. Kishun Sahai(2), Srinivasa Raghava Ayyangar v. Pichakaran(3), Yerkola v. Mudiya Kamudu(4). But, if relief is sought in the alternative in this manner, foundation for the claim must be laid in the allegations. Assume that the Court possesses considerable latitude of judicial discretion to afford suitable relief to a plaintiff on the basis of the general prayer, which, it may be observed, is superfluous under Order VII, rule 7; Civil Procedure Code, yet it is plain that though a general prayer may well cover any other relief arising out of the same cause of action, it does not cover a relief arising from a different cause of action: Mohummud Zahoor Ali-Khan v. Musammat Thakoranee Rutta Koer (5), Sital Das Babaji v. Tertap Chunder Sarma (6), Basawan Kurni v. Nakchhedi Pande (7), Gopi Narain Khana v. Bansidhar (8), Debi Doyal Sahoo v. Bhan Pertap Singh (9). The relief granted must be consistent with and be founded on the allegations in the plaint; no decree can be properly made against a defendant, who, on the face of the plaint, is not called upon to meet any claim. From this point of view alone, the decree cannot be sustained.

As regards the second ground, it is clear that the claim against the 2nd defendant as now put forward, is in substance a claim for recovery of profits of immoveable property wrongfully received by him; it is not a suit for money had and received, as in Narayan Bhaskar Khot v. Balaji Bapuji Khot (10), Damodar Gopal Dikshit v. Chintaman Balkrishna Karve (11), Vasudeo v. Damodar (12), Girjabai v. Raghunath (13), Anrudh Singh v. Amardat Singh (14), Subbu Reddi v. Veera Reddi (15). Consequently, on the special facts of this case the suit as against the 2nd defendant would not be cognizable by a Court of Small Causes.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute and the decree of the Small Cause Court Judge set aside. The petitioner is entitled to his costs in this Court. We assess the hearing-fee at one gold mohur.

Mr. Cowasjee, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued the defendant appellant for redemption. The case was compromised by consent. The terms were that on payment of Rs. 200 on or before first lazok of Tubodwe, 1277 B. E. by the plaintiffs to the defendants, the defendants were to make over possession of the disputed land to the plaintiffs. Failing payment as above, the plaintiff will lose all rights to the land. The plaintiff failed to make payment by the due date, but on the 1st of March 1916, that is, 11 days out of time, the plaintiff paid the money to the bailiff of the Court and applied to the Sub-Divisional Judge to allow the money to be paid in and extend the time for that purpose. His application was refused. He appealed to the Divisional Court and the Divisional Judge, out of sympathy for the plaintiffs who were agriculturists, thought that the time should have been extended by the Court and set aside the order of the Sub-Divisional Judge. The defendants now appeal. The Divisional Judge, I think, overlooked the fact that it was an order by consent. The Court has no jurisdiction to vary that order. See judgment in First Civil Appeal No. 138 of 1912 dated 4th March 1914, also Australasian Automatic Weighing Machine Co. v. Walter (1). *Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 102,
115—Small Cause decree—Execution proceedings—
Claim by exonerated defendant, allowed by first Court, but dismissed on appeal—Appeal or revision to High Court, whether lies.*

A defendant who is exonerated from liability to the plaintiff under a Small Cause decree, does not cease to be a party to the suit unless his name is actually removed.

Gadicherla China Seetayya v. Gadicherla Seetayya, 21 M. 45; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 388; Ramaswami Sastrulu v. Kameswaramma, 23 M. 361; 10 M. L. J. 126; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 653, referred to.

An enquiry, therefore, into a claim presented by a defendant, thus exonerated, to property attached in execution against a co-defendant, against whom the suit was decreed, is a proceeding under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and an appeal lies against the order passed therein. There is no further appeal to the High Court under section 102, Civil Procedure Code, against the order of the Appellate Court, nor does a petition lie in revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as the Appellate Court does not act without jurisdiction in entertaining the appeal.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, and appeal against the decree of the said Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 580 of 1914, preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Negapatam, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 598 of 1914, in Small Cause Suit No. 831 of 1912, on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Negapatam, and under execution in the District Munsif's Court of Negapatam.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Rangachariar (with him Mr. N. M. Malim Sahib), for the Appellant.

Mr. R. Kuppuswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The second defendant was a party to the Small Cause suit in which the decree under execution was passed; and the lower Court's judgments were given, the District Munsif's allowing and the Subordinate Judge's dismissing his claim to the attached property.

The first question is whether this appeal to this Court lies. We must hold that it does not with reference to section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Vide Aithala v. Subbana (1). The second appeal (Appeal against Appellate Order), therefore, must be dismissed.

Next he has also filed a revision petition and we have to consider whether the conditions postulated by section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure are fulfilled. We have been pressed only by one argument, which calls for notice, that the second defendant was not a party throughout the suit in which the decree under execution was passed and that, therefore, the enquiry into his claim was not held under section 47 and no appeal lay. If the lower Appellate Court heard an appeal which did not lie, it would no doubt have acted without jurisdiction and interference under section 115 would be justified. We, however, are not satisfied that the second defendant was not a party throughout. The second defendant, as the decree states, was exonerated by the plaintiff. But there is nothing before us to show that this exonerated resulted in anything except the dismissal of the suit against him or that there was any such removal of his name from the suit as appears to have taken place in Gadicherla China Seetayya v. Gadicherla Seetayya (2). Vide also Ramaswami Sastrulu v. Kameswaramma (3). In these circumstances the 2nd defendant did not cease to be a party to the suit. The subsequent proceedings between him and the plaintiff were, therefore, under section 47 and the order in them was appealable. There is, therefore, no ground for interfering with the Subordinate Judge's order in revision. The civil revision petition is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

TAJ BEGAM v. SARVI BEGAM.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.
EXECUTION FIRST APPEAL No. 98 OF 1915.
June 30, 1916.

Present:—Mr. Justice Walsh and Mr. Justice Sundar Lal.

TAJ BEGAM—OBJECTOR—APPELLANT

versus

SARVI BEGAM—DECREE-HOLDER—

RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, O. XX, rr. 5, 6, 7—Decree, construction of, principles applicable to—Order contingent on certain information called for, whether final—Review of order, dismissal of, effect of. Appeal, dismissal of, as premature—Enunciation of principles obiter—Appeal, subsequent, against final order—Res judicata—Compromise decree disallowing interest—Execution—Interest, claim for, legality of.

Where a compromise decree for mesne profits, which reserved the determination of the amount in execution, expressly disallowed interest thereon, an order passed in execution on the application of the decree-holder allowing interest, on the ground that under the Code of Civil Procedure the term 'mesne profits' includes interest on mesne profits, is illegal. [p. 680, col. 2.]

Where a decree is ambiguous or not clear it should be read in the light of the judgment, as the decree states only the final relief granted or other determination of the suit and does not afford any information as to the matters which were in issue or have been decided. [p. 679, col. 1.]

An order passed by a Court contingent on certain information which the parties are directed to furnish is not a final decision, and the dismissal of an appeal against such order on the ground of its being premature, is not an affirmance of that order so as to operate as res judicata in a subsequent appeal against the final order passed after the information was furnished in respect of the matters in controversy. The decision in the earlier appeal is only an affirmance of the order directing the parties to furnish further information, and the discussion of some principles of law by the Appellate Court which were intended to help the parties and the Court below to arrive at the final order and to save the necessity of a further appeal, is only to be understood as obiter dicta and is not res judicata in an appeal against the final order. When no appeal lies, the Appellate Court has no jurisdiction to affirm, reverse or modify the decree or order of the Court below. [p. 679, cols. 1 & 2.]

The rejection of an application for review of a preliminary order does not give it any finality or make it res judicata in a subsequent proceeding. [p. 680, col. 2.]

Per Walsh, J.—No Court should construe a decree without looking at the issues and ascertaining what was really determined with the help of the judgment. Similarly, no satisfactory conclusion can be arrived at as to what was determined by an appellate decree without looking at the grounds raised in appeal and in some way or another ascertaining what issues were actually discussed and decided. An executing Court cannot go behind a decree in the sense that it cannot alter, modify or amend its terms. But it can go behind it to ascertain what the decree operates upon. [p. 680, col. 2; p. 681, col. 1.]

A compromise decree was passed in favour of S. for possession of certain property and mesne profits, the amount of the latter being left to be determined in execution. The decree specifically disallowed interest on the mesne profits. The mesne profits having been determined, S. applied for execution and claimed interest on the amount. The Subordinate Judge considered that, though the decree was silent as to interest, the same was legally awardable and he concluded his order by saying that S. was entitled to recover from T and others "Rs. 7,460-4-0 mesne profits up to date of plaint. This set of defendants are liable to pay the amount of mesne profits with interest and proportionate costs." No final orders were, however, passed but the decree-holders were required to state what amounts were due by each party of judgment-debtors and what sum was realized from T's share and what amount T. was liable to pay. The defendants applied for a review of this order, which was rejected. Without furnishing the information and awaiting final decision, the defendants appealed to the High Court against the said order which was dismissed as premature. The High Court proceeded, however, to discuss some principles of law. The final order having been passed allowing interest on the mesne profits, the defendants again appealed against it. It was contended for the plaintiffs that the dismissal of the earlier appeal operated as res judicata.

Held, (1) that the first order of the lower Court was not a final order; [p. 677, col. 1.]

(2) that the rejection of the application for its review did not place it on a better footing; [p. 680, col. 2.]

(3) that the dismissal of the appeal preferred against that order did not operate as res judicata in the present appeal; [p. 679, col. 2.]

(3) that it was competent to the High Court to construe the decree unaffected by its earlier order in appeal and to regard the matter as now open to appeal for the first time; [p. 679, col. 2.]

(4) that, on the construction of the decree, interest could not be awarded on the mesne profits. [p. 680, col. 2.]

Execution first appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Meerut.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru (with him Mr. Sham Nath Mushran), for the Appellant.

TAJ BEGAM v. SARVI BEGAM.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji for the Respondent.
JUDGMENT.

SUNDAR LAL, J.—This is an appeal arising out of the execution of a decree made on 31st March 1905, in a suit brought by Musammât Sarvi Begam for her share in the estate of her father Mir Khan Sardar Bahadur. The sons of Mir Khan Sardar Bahadur, his daughters and other heirs were made defendants to the suit. The plaintiff also claimed mesne profits for a period of three years preceding the suit and also future mesne profits. The claim for possession of the property was decreed by compromise, and so also the claim for mesne profits. It was, however, expressly stated in the compromise that the amount of mesne profits would not carry interest. The amount of the mesne profits was to be determined in the execution department. The decree passed in the case embodies the terms of the compromise.

An application for the determination of the amount of mesne profits was made to the Court below and Mr. David, the then Subordinate Judge, determined the amount of mesne profits by his order dated 28th August 1905. It appears that the other daughters (among whom was Taj Begam) of Mir Khan Sardar Bahadur had also brought their suits for their share of their father's estate and mesne profits and had obtained their respective decrees for possession and mesne profits. Taj Begam got her decree for mesne profits with interest thereon at 12 per cent. per annum. One of the points which Mr. David had to determine in the enquiry was whether the daughters were liable to pay future mesne profits. He held that as the daughters were out of possession, they were not liable for future mesne profits. Musammât Taj Begam was held responsible only for profits for the three years immediately preceding the suit. Mr. David notes on his judgment the fact that in the case of Sarvi Begam the decree for mesne profits in her favour did not carry interest, but that in the case of the decree obtained by Taj Begam interest on mesne profits was allowed at 12 per cent. per annum. A decree for the amount of mesne profits passed by Mr. David was drawn up in accordance with his order. It seems from Mr. David's order that he held an inquiry about the mesne profits due to the other daughters of Mir Khan Sardar Bahadur as well. He gives in his order a full history of the litigation. The amount of mesne profits found due to Sarvi Begam was fixed at Rs. 17,064-10-9.

On 28th February 1912, an application for the execution of the decree passed in favour of Sarvi Begam was made by the decree-holder against the several judgment-debtors, among whom was Musammât Taj Begam, who is the appellant in this appeal. Execution was sought to recover a sum of Rs. 10,904-8 by the sale of the property of the judgment-debtors.

The amount of Rs. 10,910-4-8 is stated to have been thus made up:—

	Rs.	a.	p.
1. On account of the amount shown as due on the previous application for execution which was struck off on 15th January 1912	6,514	6	6
2. An item of costs	135	8	2
3. On account of decree for proportionate amount— Taj Begam, decree-holder v. Sarvi Begam , No. 295 of 1909 of the Court of the Additional Judge of Meerut, realized out of the sale proceeds of the sale of the property of the judgment-debtors amounting to Rs. 10,325 by Taj Begam , the second decree-holder in execution Case No. 7 of 1906	4,159	6	4
4. Costs	101	0	0
TOTAL	10,900	4	6

I have already noted that the amount of mesne profits found due to Sarvi Begam was Rs. 17,064-10-9. In execution of that decree a sum of Rs. 10,325 was realized by sale of some of the property. The money so realized was taken by Musammât Sarvi Begam alone but Taj Begam had applied for a rateable distribution on account of her decree for mesne profits. The application was disallowed. She thereupon brought a regular suit for her share of the money. She obtained a decree for her proportionate part of the mesne profits out of this sum of Rs. 10,325, realized by Sarvi Begam. This is the suit referred to as Suit No. 295 of 1909. The amount decreed to Taj Begam with interest at 12 per cent. per annum (which was the rate of interest awarded to her by the decree obtained by her for mesne profits) came up to Rs. 4,159-6-4.

Musammât Sarvi Begam had, however, on the realization of Rs. 10,325 credited the whole of that amount against the mesne profits awarded to her (i.e., Rs. 17,064-10-9) and with that credit the decree was left outstanding for Rs. 6,514-6-9. This explains item No. 1 of the details given above, showing how the amount claimed in the application of 28th February 1912 was made up. Items Nos. 2 and 4 of the said detail require no explanation. When Taj Begam obtained a decree for her proportionate share of the mesne profits (which with interest awarded to Taj Begam by her decree amounted to Rs. 4,159-6-4), Musammât Sarvi Begam had to refund that amount, which she, therefore, became entitled to add to the sum of Rs. 6,514-6-6 mentioned under the first item, as still due. At the hearing of the appeal Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, on behalf of the appellant, stated that on the application for execution of 28th February 1912, no interest had been claimed by Sarvi Begam on the amount of mesne profits in accordance with the terms of the compromise decree and Mr. David's decree. Mr. Peary Lal Banerji was unable to make any statement on this point on that date. We, therefore, adjourned the case to enable him to examine the execution record and make his statement on the point. We have also examined the execution file. When the case came up again for hearing some weeks afterwards, Mr. Peary Lal Banerji was unable to point out from the record that any interest was actually claimed on the mesne profits. He asked us, however, for leave to file an affidavit on behalf of his client's agent to prove that interest was claimed as a matter of fact. The point under enquiry was one to be ascertained from an examination of the record itself. The record certainly does not show that interest was claimed on mesne profits. We cannot admit the version of the application for execution given in the form of an affidavit by the client's agent. It is the gloss put by him on the application for execution. This is a matter for the Court to determine for itself on an examination of the application for execution and we held that the affidavit was irrelevant upon this point. The agent's reading of the application as put in the form of the affidavit could not be put in as evidence and we, therefore, refused to give leave to file the belated affidavit. Mr. Peary Lal Banerji then attempted to show that the application of 28th February 1912 did in fact claim interest on mesne profits. The details showing how the claim was made up certainly do not show that any claim for interest on mesne profits was made. It is true that in the third item of the detail, viz., Rs. 4,159-6-4 due to Taj Begam for her share on rateable distribution on account of her decree as explained above, included interest awarded by her decree to her at 12 per cent. per annum. This was the amount awarded to Taj Begam on her decree and this was her share out of Rs. 10,325 realized by execution. The balance left was all that was payable to Sarvi Begam. A refund of the rateable share of mesne profits to Taj Begam with interest awarded to her by her decree does not imply a claim by Sarvi Begam for interest on the mesne profits awarded to her. It is clear from the account that no interest, as a matter of fact, was claimed in the application for execution of 28th February 1912. Under a misapprehension, however, of the application Taj Begam among other objections urged that no interest should have been claimed on mesne profits. I will now state what happened under this erroneous impression.

Objections were filed to the execution of the said decree on 20th June 1912. We are not concerned with any objection other than the 9th objection in that case, which ran in the following terms, viz:—

"(9). No interest was awarded in the decree sought to be executed, but the decree-holder has executed it having charged interest thereon."

The decree-holder filed a reply to this objection on 20th January 1912, the 7th paragraph of which runs as follows:—

"(7). The word mesne profits includes interest also, which should be awarded according to law and justice."

Rai Bahadur Pandit Mohan Lal Hukku who heard the objections held that though no express order about the payment of interest on mesne profits was made in the decree, yet under the Code of Civil Procedure the term mesne profits includes interest on mesne profits. He concludes his judgment by holding that Sarvi Begam was entitled to recover from Taj Begam and others a sum of "Rs. 7,450-4-0 mesne profits up to the date of plaint. This set of defendants are liable to pay the amount of mesne profits with interest and proportionate costs."

TAJ BEGAM v. SARVI BEGAM.

He, however, passed no final orders but directed the decree-holders to furnish certain information. The formal order prepared in this order runs as follows:—

"It is ordered that Sarvi Begam, decree-holder, applicant, do state what amount or amounts are due by each party of judgment-debtors and show what sum has already been realized from Taj Begam's share in Baraut and other property and what amount Taj Begam is now liable to pay."

I have examined the execution records. I find that in the earlier stages of execution several applications are filed in which it is stated that the decree for mesne profits did not carry any interest, but by this time the old Pleaders who had appeared in the original suit had all died or retired. New men unacquainted with the history of the execution and the terms of the decree had taken their place, and a new officer was now presiding over the Court. I am not, therefore, surprised at the terms of the decree being overlooked both by the Pleaders and by Rai Bahadur Pandit Mohan Lal Hukku who decided the objection. They also overlooked the fact that in the application of 28th February 1912, no interest had in fact been claimed on the mesne profits. This order, however, was not a final order on the objection. The learned Subordinate Judge required the plaintiff to state what amount Musammam Taj Begam was liable for on the application. He further required the decree-holder to state what amount or amounts were due by each party of judgment-debtors, and what sum had already been realized by the sale of Baraut and other properties of Taj Begam.

A final order on this objection could only be made when the figures were supplied to, and examined by, the Judge. What happened is analogous to what is often done, viz., recording a judgment on some of the issues in the case, the final judgment being passed later on when the remaining issues were decided. Although there was no final order in execution yet made to afford ground for an appeal under section 47 of the Code, Taj Begam preferred an appeal against the decision of some of the issues to this Court. No appeal lay at that stage, and it was clearly premature for her to file the appeal. The order of Pandit Mohan Lal Hukku (if it be pleaded as an authority under which alone the interest is claimable) did not mention the rate of interest awarded, nor the period of time for which interest was payable. He would have probably recorded orders dealing with all these points as soon as the decree-holder had furnished the figures.

Before however this was or could be done, Taj Begam preferred an appeal to this Court from the expression of views recorded by the Court below, on some of the points in issue, for this is all that was in effect done by this time, and the further stage necessary to give a right of appeal had not arrived yet.

This was First Appeal No. 94 of 1913. The appeal came up before a Bench of this Court presided over by the Hon'ble Sir Pramada Charan Banerji and the Hon'ble Mr Justice Ryves on 24th July 1913.

The judgment of their Lordships opens by saying that the appeal was premature. They observe that certain objections were made by the judgment-debtor in the Court below which the Court below had disposed of, but they pointed out that "that Court, however, has not made any final order in the matter, and it consequently seems to us that this appeal is premature."

After coming to that conclusion their Lordships, proceed to consider certain points of principle decided by the Court below and dismiss the appeal. The decree prepared in this Court on the appeal confirms the decree of the Court below and dismisses the appeal. One of the questions in this appeal is, whether it precludes the appellant from raising the question of interest on mesne profits which was raised in the Court below. Before, however, dealing with the points arising in the appeal, I will refer to two other matters which have some bearing on the appeal. An application for review of the judgment was made by Musammam Taj Begam. It was rejected on the 24th July 1913. On 27th May 1914, Musammam Taj Begam applied to Babu Bans Gopal, Subordinate Judge of Meerut, to amend the decree made by Mr. David on 28th August 1905, by adding words to the effect that the decree-holder will not be entitled to future interest on mesne profits. The application was made under sections 152 and 153 of the Code. It was rejected on 28th August 1914.

The application of 28th February 1912 is still pending. The decree-holder has now claimed interest on mesne profits. The judgment-debtor objected to the claim for interest on 31st August 1914. The Court below disallowed the objections on 22nd September 1914. It has supplied the deficiencies in the order of Pandit Mohan Lal Hukku and has directed that interest prior to the date of the determination of the mesne profits should be calculated at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, and thereafter at six per cent. per annum. It is against this order that the present appeal has been lodged.

On the facts I have stated, which are evident on the examination of the decree of 3rd March 1910 and Mr. David's order of 28th August 1905, it is clear that no interest was payable on the mesne profits. The decree expressly says so, and so does Mr. David's order. He has not calculated and awarded any such interest for the period prior to the date of the determination of mesne profits. The order itself is conclusive on the point. Pandit Mohan Lal Hukku did not, in his order of 2nd September 1912, hold that interest for that period was payable. The order of Babu Bans Gopal awarding interest at 12 cent. per annum for the said period is erroneous, and contrary to the terms of the original decree and the decree or order by which the amount of mesne profits was determined. There is also no order in the decree or in Mr. David's order for the payment of future interest. Looking, therefore, to the merits of the claim, it is entirely untenable and is in the teeth of the compromise decree. The question before us, however, is whether by reason of any subsequent order the judgment-debtor is precluded from setting up the true state of things.

The first contention urged on behalf of Sarvi Begam, respondent, is that Pandit Mohan Lal Hukku's order of 2nd September 1912 has put a construction on the decree of 31st March 1900, which is binding upon the parties. Pandit Mohan Lal Hukku never looked at that decree, nor attempted to construe it. He only considered a hypothetical case, where the decree was silent upon the point (but this decree is not silent upon the point, and expressly states that no interest will run on the mesne profits). There was no claim made by Sarvi Begam for interest, and the discussion was purely academical. The adjudication was also defective and incomplete in that it did not state the rate of interest, nor the period of time for which it was payable, and lastly no final order was made on the application. All that was done was to call for certain particulars which were to be supplied as a necessary preliminary to the passing of final orders on the application. There was nothing to preclude Pandit Mohan Lal Hukku, on the true state of facts being brought to his notice at any time before he made his final order, from correcting his previous orders on the issues provisionally decided by him. What has happened in this case is analogous to what sometimes happens in a Court of Appeal. A Judge hears an appeal and remits certain issues for trial by the Court below. Before the receipt of the findings the Judge who made the order is transferred. His successor may disregard the order remitting issues and re-hear and decide the whole case. Mubarak Husain v. Bihari (1), per Edge, C. J., and Burkitt, J., affirming Aikman, J., in appeal under Letters Patent; Lachman Prasad v. Jamna Prasad (2); Ganendra Nath Roy Chowdhury v. Surja Kanta Roy Chowdhury (3).

In the last mentioned case, even the Judge who had pronounced his views in an earlier stage of the appeal was not held bound to adhere to his views, if later on, before he had decided the appeal he saw reason to change them. What Pandit Mohan Lal Hukku did on 2nd September 1912, does not stand on a higher footing.

The next question which arises is, what effect has the decree of this Court in appeal against the order of Pandit Mohan Lal Hukku? The moment his judgment was appealed against, it ceased to be res judicata by reason of the pendency of the appeal. It has been argued that the decree of this Court affirmed the decree of the Court below. This is so. The decree of the Court below directs the decree-holder to supply certain information and that is all that is confirmed by the decree of this Court. If no other papers are to be referred to to ascertain what was decided and the question is to be decided on a perusal of the decrees alone, there is nothing in them to show that the question of interest payable on mesne profits was decided. It is, however, not enough to look at the decree alone. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Kali Krishna Tagore v. Secretary of State (4), "In order to see what was in issue in a suit, or what has been heard and decided, the judgment must be looked at. The decree, according to the Code of Procedure, is only to state the relief granted, or other determination of the suit. The determination may be on various grounds, but the decree does not show on what ground, and does not afford any information as to the matters which were in issue or have been decided." In a later case, Amriteswari Devi v. Secretary of State (5), their Lordships again observed: "And they cannot avoid the observation that in the Court below sufficient attention has not been paid to the rule that, in cases where a final decree is couched in general terms, the extent to which it ought to be regarded as res judicata can only be determined by ascertaining what were the real matters of controversy in the cause." The question in this case is of course not one of res judicata. We have merely to determine whether the question now before the Court has really been finally decided by a previous order made in the same execution proceeding. The same principles apply to a case like this, when it is necessary to ascertain what has been really finally decided on the previous occasion.

Looking to the judgment of this Court and reading the decree in the light of that judgment, it is clear that the appeal was dismissed on the ground that it was premature. It is true that the judgment of this Court proceeds to discuss a few other matters which had been placed before it by the parties. But if the appeal was premature, any discussion of those matters was no less premature and any pronouncement made upon them, though entitled to the highest weight and respect, is really not upon the same footing as matters disposed of which rightly arose and were decided in an appeal which this Court had jurisdiction to entertain. The observations were made more to help the parties and the Court below to arrive at the final decree and to save the necessity of a further appeal to obtain an expression of the view of this Court upon those points. The Court was, however, not invited to express any views on the question of interest on mesne profits (though it was the subject of a plea in the appeal). If an appeal lay to this Court, the failure to press that plea would have perhaps amounted to an implied adjudication of the point and affirmation of the views of the Court below. But where no appeal lies at all at that stage, the failure to invite this Court to express its views upon that point also does not stand upon the same footing. There was no legal obligation upon the appellant to invoke the decision of any point by a Court of Appeal, when no appeal lay to it. He may, as he was entitled to do, reserve it for decision when it arose in a proper appeal, and when the matter had become ripe for appeal later on. Even if there was an appeal to this Court at this stage, and the Court had decided all these points, according to the view taken in this Court in the case of Shib Charan Lal v. Raghu Nath (6), the decision of the Court upon the point first arising in order will be taken to be one upon which the decree is based. It is not necessary for us to go so far in this case; when no appeal lay to this Court, it had no jurisdiction to affirm, reverse or modify the decree or order of the Court below.

The decree of this Court cannot, therefore, be taken to be an affirmance of the views of the Court below on the question of interest, and upon this ground alone I would prefer to base my judgment. I think that the case had not reached a stage at which Pandit Mohan Lal Hukku could or did pass a final order. When the particulars required were furnished later on to his successor he was in a position to pass a final order in the case. This event has only happened now, and the present appeal has been preferred from that decision.

In the course of his able argument, Mr. Peary Lal Banerji relied upon the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (7). In that case the plaintiff had claimed possession of certain property with mesne profits. The Court of first instance had made a decree in plaintiff's favour as claimed. That decree was affirmed by the Court of Sadar Diwani Adalat. On 20th December 1867 a question arose as to whether the decree awarded mesne profits, and the District Judge (Mr. Probyn) held that it did. No appeal was preferred against the said order. The parties had apparently accepted the order and execution proceedings had gone on for eleven years on foot of that order. It was then sought to re-open the question. Their Lordships of course refused to permit this being done. In that case Mr. Probyn, the District Judge, had made a final order which was open to appeal, but it had not been appealed against. In this case Mr. Mohan Lal Hukku had made no such order. He had reserved the making of a final order to a later date when the particulars required were supplied. In that case the judgment-debtor accepted the order. In this case the judgment-debtor did not do so but even preferred an infructuous appeal before the matter had become ripe for appeal. She has ever since been contesting it, and now that the matter has been finally decided by the Court below, she has preferred this appeal. We are, therefore, entitled to consider the question of the interpretation of this decree unaffected by the order of this Court and to regard the matter as now open to appeal for the first time.

There remain two other matters for consideration. The first is the effect of the order rejecting the application for review of the order of Pandit Mohan Lal Hukku. There was no final order open to review, and in any case a refusal to entertain an application for review leaves the order sought to be reviewed standing on its own legs. It does not give it a firmer or better footing. The other order is the one passed on an application to amend the decree of Mr. David, dated 28th August 1905, determining the amount of mesne profits. The application was rightly rejected. Mr. David's order did not award any interest either for the past or in future, and the addition of the words proposed to be added was not required. The order as it stands does not award any interest on mesne profits, and it could not do so contrary to the terms of the decree on which it is based. The proceedings to determine mesne profits reserved for decision by the decree in the suit are proceedings in continuation of and supplementary to the proceedings in the original suit. The decree in the suit is supplemented by the order and the two must be read together. The refusal to amend the decree does not place the appellant in a worse footing.

We think that the decree under execution does not award any interest on mesne profits, either before or after decree. The order of the Court below, therefore, in so far as it awards such interest must be set aside. I would allow the appeal and set aside the order of the Court below awarding interest on mesne profits either before or after decree. The appellant will get his costs in this appeal.

WALSH, J.—I do not desire to add anything to what Mr. Justice Sundar Lal has so fully said in this case, except to draw attention to the state of the authorities with regard to the construction of decrees. I think it desirable to reiterate what appears to me to have been laid down as the law for a very long time by the highest authority, and also by this Court. It is well established that you cannot construe a decree in a suit without looking at the issues and ascertaining what was really determined, and it may be that you cannot arrive at a satisfactory conclusion without looking at the judgment as well. In the same way you cannot arrive at a satisfactory conclusion as to what was determined by an appellate decree without looking at the grounds raised in appeal, and in some way or another ascertaining what issues were actually discussed and decided. It is sometimes said that an execution Court cannot go behind a decree. That is perfectly true in the sense that it cannot alter, modify or amend its terms. But it is untrue in the sense that it cannot go behind it to ascertain what the decree operates upon. The matter could not be more clearly stated than in the passage from the judgment of the Privy Council which my brother has just read.

BY THE COURT.—We allow the appeal and set aside the order of the Court below awarding interest on mesne profits either before or after decree. The appellant will get his costs in this appeal.

Appeal decreed.

Per Krishnan, J.—The expression "cause of action," in section 20, Civil Procedure Code, must be read with reference to the suit instituted by the plaintiff;

it means plaintiff's cause of action, and not the cause of action on the documents, sued on irrespective of the rights of the plaintiff under it, in other words, the cause of action as it existed when the right to sue on the note arose for the first time. [p. 683, col. 1.]

Appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent against the order of Mr. Justice Napier, dated the 28th September 1915, in Civil Revision Petition No. 1005 of 1914, preferred against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kistna, at Ellore in Miscellaneous Appeal Suit No. 23 of 1913, in Original Suit No. 125 of 1911, Tanuku District Munsif's Court.

The following is the judgment of Napier, J., which was appealed against:—

"Following Read v. Brown (1) which construed the words 'part of cause of action' and held that an assignment is part of a cause of action, I dismiss this petition with costs."

Mr. M. Patanjali Sastri for Mr. B. Somayya, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The question in this case is whether the assignee of a promissory note can sue in the Court having jurisdiction where his assignment was made. The learned Judge has decided in the affirmative applying Read v. Brown (1).

If the matter was res integra, I should be inclined to dissent from his decision, because its consequence in India would be inconvenient in the extreme and I should be unwilling to adopt an interpretation of section 20 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure which would authorise evasions of the restrictions imposed by the section by means of an easy device. But the general definition of cause of action contained in Read v. Brown (1) has been accepted in numerous cases in this country, Arunachalam Chetty v. Meyyappa Chetty (2), Ittappan v. Manavikrama (3) Dobson and Barlow Ltd. v. Bengal Spinning and Weaving Company (4), Murti

MANEPALLI MANGAMMA v. MANEPALLI SATHIRAJU.

v. Bhola Ram (5), Sheo Prasad v. Lalit Kuar (6), Dau Dial v. Munna Lal (7), and in Roghoonath Misser v. Gobindnarrain (8) it was expressly held that execution of an assignment within the jurisdiction would enable the Calcutta High Court to entertain the suit with reference to clause 12 of its charter, the terms of which are not for the present purpose distinguishable from those of section 20 (c). In these circumstances I am constrained to concur in the decision of the learned Judge and I would, therefore, dismiss the letters patent appeal with costs.

KRISHNAN, J.—The question for our decision is, whether the assignment of a promissory note by the payee to the plaintiff is a part of the cause of action within the meaning of section 20, clause (c), Civil Procedure Code, so as to give jurisdiction to the Court within whose local limits it took place. The learned Judge who heard the revision petition and against whose judgment the present appeal is filed, answered the question in the affirmative following Read v. Brown (1). After careful consideration I am inclined to agree with him.

The case quoted was one of an assignment of a debt and arose under the Mayor's Court Procedure Act, 20 and 21 Vict. C. 157, and the expression to be construed was "cause of action arising wholly or in part within the City of London or the liberties thereof." The Master of the Rolls Lord Esher, and Fry and Lopes, L. JJ., defined "cause of action" as "including every fact necessary to be proved, if traversed, in order to enable plaintiff to sustain his action and which if not proved will give the defendant an immediate right to judgment;" and held that the assignment alleged was part of the cause of action. That case is very similar to the present case and the words construed are the same as in clause (c), section 20. It followed a previous decision in Cooke v. Gill (9) and was itself subsequently affirmed in Coburn v.

Colledge (10): it has been accepted in England as settling the meaning of the expression "cause of action."

The definition given in it is no doubt a very comprehensive one. All the High Courts in India have accepted and acted upon it in numerous decisions under various sections of the Code and section 12 of the Letters Patent; see for example It'appa v. Manavikrama (3) and Murti v. Bhola Ram (5), under section 43 of the old Code; Arumachalam Chetty v. Meyyappa Chetty (2), as res judicata; Salima Bibi v. Sheikh Muhammad (11) and Rajic Kuar v. Debi Dial (12), under sections 31 and 45 of the old Code; and Deep Narain Singh v. Dietert (13) and Dobson and Barlow Ltd. v. Bengal Spinning and Weaving Co. (4), under section 12 of the Letters Patent. In Dau Dial v. Munna Lal (7) the definition was adopted in a case under clause (c) of section 20 itself. In Roghoonath Misser v. Gobindnarrain (8) the indorsement of a hundi was held to be a part of the cause of action under section 12 of the Letters Patent though Read v. Brown (1), was not referred to. The only case cited where that definition was not accepted is Haramoni Dassi v. Harichurn Chowdhry (14); that was a case under section 31 of the old Code and is in conflict with the Allahabad ruling above noted. In a case under section 103 of the Code of 1877 (Act X) the Privy Council held that the "cause of action" meant "the grounds set forth in the plaint as cause of action or in other words the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour"; see Chand Kour v. Partab Singh (15). Thus there is a strong current of authority in India for accepting the definition of cause of action in Read v. Brown (1) and I have no doubt we must follow it.

If the words "cause of action" mean the cause of action set out by the plaintiff in his plaint, as held by the Privy Council in Chand Kour v. Partab Singh (15) above cited, (10) 1897 1 Q. B. 702 at p. 707; 66 L. J. Q. B. 462; 76 L. T. 608; 45 W. R. 488.

we must necessarily hold that the assignment in plaintiff's favour is an essential part of his cause of action, for without it he could not have sued on the note as he has done. There is nothing in the language of section 20, Civil Procedure Code, itself to show that a restricted meaning should be placed upon the expression "cause of action." It was suggested that the term may be taken to mean the cause of action on the document sued on, irrespective of the rights of the plaintiff under it; or in other words, the cause of action as it existed when the right to sue on the note arose for the first time, in which case plaintiff's assignment will not be part of it. I think this suggestion cannot be accepted. The term has to be read with reference to the suit instituted by the plaintiff, dealt with under section 20; it must then mean plaintiff's cause of action.

It may be that the adoption of a wide meaning for the term "cause of action" will lead to inconvenience to defendants in particular cases; but that fact cannot, it seems to me, be used to control our interpretation of the section. A similar argument was raised in Read v. Brown (1) but was overruled. See judgment of Manisty, J. If any undesirable results will follow it will be for the Legislature to set the matter right. I may observe that both under the Letters Patent and the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, where a suit is allowed to be filed if a part of the cause of action arose within jurisdiction, the Legislature has made it conditional on leave being previously obtained from the Court; for some reason not apparent perhaps because of section 22, Civil Procedure Code, no such condition is imposed under section 20, clause (c).

The ruling in Salig Ram v. Chubu Mal (6) is, it seems to me, not in point, as it dealt with a case of principal and agent whereas the present case is one on a promissory note. On the finding that no part of the cause of action arose in Hathras, as not only the making of the contract, the performance of it, and the payment of the money under it were to be in Karachi but the negligence or misconduct of the agent was also in Karachi, the learned Judges held that the Hathras Court had no jurisdiction. That ruling, if I may say so with respect, is clearly correct. But with all respect I am not prepared to agree with the observation that clause (c) of section 20, Civil Procedure Code, must be taken to mean exactly what section 17, clause (a), with Explanation III of the repealed Code meant in all cases of contract. The words of the present Code are similar to those in the Letters Patent and seem to be manifestly wider in scope.

For the above reasons I agree with the judgment of Napier, J., and will dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (VI B. C. of 1908), s. 231—Execution—Sale Judgment-debtor, application by, to set aside sale—Limitation.

Respondent obtained a decree on a mortgage-bond executed by the appellant, and in execution of that decree the latter's holding was sold and purchased by the former. Appellant applied to set aside the sale more than one year after its date.

Held, that under the provisions of section 231 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, the application should have been made within one year of the date of the sale, and that, consequently, it was barred by limitation. [p. 684, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

SHARFUDDIN, J.—This miscellaneous appeal has been preferred by the decree-holder, (16) 11 Ind. Cas. 712; 34 A. 49; 8 A. L. J. 1160.

MUHAMMAD HABIBULLAH v. MUSHTAQ HUSAIN.

It appears that the decree-holder obtained a decree on a mortgage-bond executed by the present petitioner and in execution of that decree the holding in question was sold and purchased by the mortgagee decree-holder. The sale took place on the 21st December 1912 and was confirmed on the 15th February 1913. The application to set aside the sale was made by the judgment-debtor on the 28th August 1914. The learned Munsif held that Article 166 of the Limitation Act applied to the application and hence it was barred by limitation, because the judgment-debtor had put in the application to set aside the sale more than thirty days after the date of the sale. On this there was an appeal to the District Judge by the judgment-debtor, who allowed the appeal and directed the sale to be set aside. But that learned officer also held that it was Article 166 that applied to the application. Thereupon the decree-holder preferred the present appeal.

It seems to us that the application of the judgment-debtor to set aside the sale is barred by limitation. In the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act there is a special provision for limitation as regards suits and applications, and section 231 of that Act clearly provides that if there is no provision of limitation in that Act for any suit or application, the limitation provided is one year and under the provisions of this special provision of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act the judgment-debtor should have applied to have the sale set aside within one year from the date of the sale. His application is after a year and some months from the date of the sale. On behalf of the judgment-debtor it was contended that the holding which was sold in execution of the mortgage-decree was a raiyati holding and under section 47 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act such a holding could not be sold in execution of a decree, and hence it is contended that the sale was null and void. In this connection we have been referred to the case reported as Samandan Karkat Edathil Rayarappan Nambiar v. Malikandi Aketh Mayan (1), wherein we find in the head-notes mentioned that when the sale is a nullity section 166 has no application. The head-notes of that ruling are misleading. We do not find in that report any such proposition of law. Even if section 166 has no application in the case of a sale which is a nullity, the special provision of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act has laid down that section 231 may be applicable. As already observed even under that section the judgment-debtor's application to set aside the sale is barred by limitation, and we do not propose to discuss the question as to whether by reason of section 47 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act the sale was null and void. The appeal is, therefore, decreed.

ROE, J.—I agree. The application to set aside the sale was clearly barred by limitation, and the District Court had no jurisdiction to set aside the sale of its own motion.

Appeal allowed.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 36, proceedings under—Transfer by insolvent, questions for determination in—Burden of proof—Dower debt, transfer in discharge of, whether made "before and in consideration of marriage"—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53.

A transfer of his property by an insolvent to his wife, in lieu of dower settled upon her at the marriage, long after the marriage, is not a transfer made "before and in consideration of marriage" within the meaning of section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. [p. 686, col. 2.]

A dower debt is like an ordinary debt and a transfer to a wife in discharge of dower payable to her may be for valuable consideration. But when such a debt is impugned as fraudulent and the Court holds an enquiry under section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the following matters are relevant, (1) the amount of the debt, (2) the delay in its discharge, (3) the nature of the debt, (4) the genuineness of the transfer and good faith on the part of the parties, (5) the value of the property transferred. Section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is wider in its scope than section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. The intent to defeat or delay creditors which is required to be proved under section 53 of the latter Act is not necessary in proceedings under section 36 of the former Act. Under section 36 all that is required is that the transfer must be made within two years of the adjudication of the insolvency of the debtor. [p. 686, col. 2.]

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Allahabad.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, Dr. Surendra Nath Sen and Mr. Benode Behari, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru (with him Messrs. Yusuf Hason, Satya Narain and Muhammad Matin), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of proceedings instituted under Act III of 1907. One Mushtaq Ahmad, who is a resident of Mauza Kara in the district of Allahabad, used to carry on business as a contractor and dealer in timber. He entered into a contract for the supply of a certain number of sleepers to one Habibullah, a merchant of Agra. He was not able to perform his part of the contract and Habibullah consequently brought a suit against him on the 15th of April 1913, for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 2,468 for the breach of the contract. The exact date on which the suit was filed is not noted on the copy of the plaint on the record, but the copy shows that it was verified by the plaintiff on the 15th of April 1913, which we take to be the date of the institution of the suit. Soon after the institution of the suit the plaintiff Habibullah applied for the attachment of a deposit held by a Bank, which is described as Jamal Ahmad Bank at Kara. The Court granted the application on the 15th of April 1913, and directed the issue of an injunction to Mushtaq Ahmad restraining him from drawing the deposit as also an order to the Bank restraining it from paying it off to Mushtaq Ahmad. Both these orders were handed over in a cover to one Ali Muhammad, who was a servant of Habibullah, to expedite the delivery to the Civil Court at Allahabad for service on the persons concerned. It, however, appears that Mushtaq Ahmad was not found at his house in Kara and the injunction issued to him was affixed to his house and the Bank returned an answer that it had paid away the money before service of the injunction. A decree for the amount claimed was passed by the Agra Court in due course and transferred for execution to Bilaspur in the Central Provinces, where Mushtaq Ahmad had a stack of sleepers owned by him. The proceedings were taken to attach and bring to sale the sleepers at Bilaspur. Mushtaq Ahmad thereupon applied on 23rd December 1914 to the District Judge of Allahabad to be adjudicated an insolvent under Act III of 1907. In the schedule of creditors attached to the application the name of Habibullah stands first as a creditor for Rs. 2,500 under a decree in Suit No. 93 of 1913. This is the Agra suit to which reference has already been made. The next creditor set out is one Safdar Ali of Allahabad, who had a decree for Rs. 450 of the Court of Small Causes at Allahabad. The third creditor is Ashiq Husain, son of the insolvent, but who is described as son of Nabir-un-nissa, the first wife of the insolvent. The amount of the debt is said to be Rs. 4,100 due on a ruqqa on account of dower debt, which the insolvent had executed in the name of his son. The last creditor is one Saiyed-un-nissa, who is said to be the wife of a brother of the insolvent or some other near relative. The amount of debt is Rs. 300 under a ruqqa. It may be noted that Ashiq Husain, the son of the insolvent, is quite a young man who has attained majority. The insolvent in this case has admitted that his son has taken the theke of a jungle in the Central Provinces, and that he, Mushtaq Ahmad, is working on his behalf under a power-of-attorney executed by his son. The creditor Habibullah complains that this is a mere blind to defraud the creditors, the real theke being Mushtaq Ahmad himself who has used his son's name to protect the property. He also alleges that the debt alleged under the fourth item is also a bogus debt. In the schedule of property owned by the insolvent the stack of sleepers is mentioned as also a few trumpery articles of very little value. No zamin-dari or house property which is said to belong to the debtor is set out. The learned

MUHAMMAD HABIBULLAH v. MUSHTAQ HUSAIN.

Judge on the 6th of March 1915 examined the insolvent. He was asked about the two transfers which he had made on the 23rd of May 1913 and the 30th of May 1913.

By the first of these transfers he had disposed of a valuable house and other property to his son, Ashiq Husain, and two other minor children he had by his first wife, for a sum of Rs. 900. He also disposed of another item of property said to be worth Rs 100 in favour of his second wife. The transfer is said to have been made to satisfy the claim for dower which the heirs of the first wife had against him as also the claim for the dower which the second wife had on the husband. The second document is for Rs. 400, which is said to be the balance of the dower debt due to the second wife. By these two documents he disposed of practically all his property and if these documents are upheld, the claims of the creditors will be defeated for all practical purposes. The learned Judge, therefore, in his order of 6th March 1915, directed that the sum of Rs. 4,100 said to be due to the insolvent's son, Ashiq Husain, should not be entered in the schedule without his special order, and he also further directed as follows: "April 16th will be fixed for the parties to adduce their evidence under section 36 of the Act as to whether the transfers in favour of the applicant's sons and wife should be set aside, and in case these transfers are found to be fraudulent to show cause why he should not be punished under section 43 of the Act." It is under this order that the proceedings from which this appeal has arisen were initiated.

Notice of these proceedings does not seem to have been given to the transferees but the matter is of no importance, as Babu Datti Lal appeared on their behalf on the 2nd of July 1915 and he was also present (as would appear from the order sheet) on the 24th of July 1915, the date on which the order appealed against was made. The learned Judge by his order of that date held that one of the transfers, namely that of the 30th of May 1913, was fraudulent, and he set it aside. But he held that the other transfer of the 23rd of April 1913 must be upheld. Habibullah, the creditor, has appealed to this Court against so much of the order as dismisses the claim in respect of the earlier transfer of the 23rd of April 1913. Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru on behalf of the transferees has preferred objections under rule 22 of Order XLI against so much of the order of the Court below as has set aside the second transfer of the 30th May 1913. Dr. Sen on behalf of the appellant has urged that the transfer was bad under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. The proceedings in the Court below were taken under section 36 of Act III of 1907. Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru in reply has argued that the Court below had no jurisdiction to entertain the proceedings for setting aside the transfers except on grounds mentioned in sections 36 and 37 of the Act.

Provisions analogous to those contained in section 36 of the Act are to be found in section 47 of the English Bankruptcy Act of 1883 and Statute 13 Elizabeth Ch. V and 27 Elizabeth Ch. IV. The language of each of these Statutes is slightly different. Each case, therefore, must be considered in the language of the Statute concerned. In our opinion section 36 of Act III of 1907 is wider in its scope than section 53 of Act IV of 1882. Under the latter section transfers made with the intent to defeat or delay creditors or subsequent transferees are made voidable at the instance of the creditors so defrauded, or defeated, and it is also declared that where such transfers have the effect of defeating or delaying creditors they would be presumed to have been made with that intent, if they are made gratuitously or for grossly inadequate consideration. Under section 36 of the Act no such intent is necessary. All that is required is that it must be made within two years of the adjudication of the insolvency of the debtor. Under both these sections transferees in good faith and for valuable consideration are protected. Section 36 also protects transfers "made before and in consideration of marriage." We think it is, therefore, not necessary for Dr. Sen to avail himself of the provisions of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Neither of these transfers are transfers "made before and in consideration of marriage" within the meaning of these words as used in the section. No doubt in both these cases, as a part of the marriage contract, some dower is made payable to the wife, but the dower stands on the same footing as any ordinary debt. The transfers in these cases were made long after the marriage and not before or in consideration of the marriage. They were made to satisfy the dower debt long after the marriage had taken place. Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru has again argued that the dower debt is like an ordinary debt and that such a debt is valuable consideration; and a transfer made to the wife to satisfy the claim for dower is a transfer for valuable consideration. He relied upon the case of Suba Biñi v. Balgobind Das (1). To enable us, however, to decide the point, it is necessary to ascertain the exact amount of the dower due to each lady. The first wife is said to have died in 1909. A suit for recovery of a dower debt must be filed within the time prescribed by Articles 103 and 104 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act. For the purpose of considering the application of these Articles the nature of the dower debt would be an important element for consideration. The application of section 7 of the said Act would also have to be considered as some of the heirs are still minors. In all these cases it is a matter for careful consideration whether a real transfer was intended by the transferor or whether it was merely fictitious and no transfer was intended. Another point for consideration would be whether the transfers were made in good faith. It is not, however, necessary to prove the absence of good faith in both the transfers on the part of the transferee. Mackintosh v. Pogose (2). The value of the property transferred would be another point for consideration. In this case it seems that the existing buildings have been altered by some party or other and it might be a question as to who has made these alterations, whether the transferee or transferor, and who has been realising the rents and profits of the property. All these and a number of other considerations will have a material bearing upon the question. The onus of proving the good faith of the transferee is upon him: Nilmoni Chowdhuri v. Basanta Kumar Banerjee (3). The Court below has not determined some of these points at all. There are no sufficient materials on the record to enable us to dispose of these points satisfactorily. We have, therefore, no option but to remand the following issues for determination to the Court below under rule 25 of Order XLI of the Code. The issues for determination are:

(1). Are the two transfers impugned real and genuine transfers or are they fictitious transfers made to protect the property from the creditors?

(2). Was there any, and if so, what dower debt legally due to the heirs of the first wife and to the second wife respectively on the dates of the two transfers?

(3). What was the market value of the property conveyed in each case on the dates of the transfers?

(4). Were the transfers impugned made in good faith and for valuable consideration?

(5). If not, was there want of good faith on the part of the transferee?

We have, in our judgment, indicated generally the matters which the Court below should take into consideration in determining these issues. We have set them forth at some length, as we find that in many cases enquiries made under the Act are conducted rather summarily in the Courts below. It is scarcely necessary to say that enquiries under this section are no less important than enquiries in regular suits and should be made as thoroughly and fully as in those cases.

The parties will be permitted to adduce additional evidence. The findings together with the evidence taken will be returned to this Court and the usual ten days will be allowed for objections.

Issues remitted.

Sub-clause (2) of section 92, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), is intended to set at rest the doubts that were entertained in the construction of the old Code of 1882, whether a trustee could be removed and whether persons who had any special interest in the trust of a public charity could institute suits and ask for the reliefs specified in the section without sanction or whether persons interested in charities could bring representative suits under section 30 of the old Code in the ordinary Courts. [p. 690, col. 1.]

Giyana Sambandha Pandara Sannadhi v. Kandasami Tumbiran, 10 M. 375 at p. 505; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1015; Rangasami Naickan v. Varadappa Naickan, 17 M. 462; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 321; Ganapati Ayyan v. Savithri Ammal, 21 M. 10; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 364; and Budree Das Mukim v. Chooni Lal Johurry, 33 C. 789; 10 C. W. N. 581, referred to.

Sub-clause (2) of section 92 is added to make it clear that the terms of the section are mandatory and that no suit could be brought for any of the reliefs specified in the section except under the conditions laid down therein; at the same time the special jurisdiction of the District Courts under the Religious Endowments Act was saved, so that a person desirous of suing for the removal of a trustee or for such other specific relief as can be given to him under that Act is at liberty to do so, and is not bound to comply with the provisions of section 92, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 690, cols. 1 & 2.]

No sanction, therefore, is required under section 14 of the Religious Endowments Act for the institution of a suit to remove a trustee or for any other relief comprised under section 92, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 690, col. 2.]

Ajapa Natesa Pandara Sannadhi v. Ramalingam Pillai, 20 Ind. Cas. 767, 24 M. L. J. 658; and Nelatoom Venkatarangacharyulu v. Nedathur Krishnamacharyulu, 20 Ind. Cas. 515; 37 M. 184; 24 M. L. J. 697; 14 M. L. T. 44, followed.

The joinder of alienees from the trustees of a temple in a suit to remove the latter from office under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, will not entail the dismissal of the whole suit because, in the suit as framed, no relief could be given against the alienees. The jurisdiction of a Court does not depend on its decision whether it can or will allow some of the reliefs asked for. [p. 691, col. 1.]

In a suit under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, the Courts cannot decide the question whether alienations by the trustee sought to be removed are binding on the institution and give appropriate reliefs against the alienees. [p. 692, col. 1.]

Asam Raghawalu Setty v. Pellati Sitamma, 25 Ind. Cas. 794, 27 M. L. J. 266, 16 M. L. T. 178, (1914) M. W. N. 692; Rangayya Naidu v. Chinmasamy Iyer, 28 Ind. Cas. 898; 28 M. L. J. 326, 17 M. L. T. 191, followed.

A decree, however, declaring the temple, whose trustee it is sought to remove, to be a public one is binding on the alienees, who will not be permitted to agitate that question in future proceedings where the binding nature of the alienations on the institution may be in question. The decree should make it clear that this declaration is binding on them also. [p. 692, col. 1.]

The onus of proving that a temple is a public one, in respect of which the reliefs are claimable under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, is on the plaintiffs. The fact that a predecessor of the trustee defendant made a statement that it was a public temple is not enough to shift the burden on to the defendant. [p. 691, col. 1.]

Where a temple is proved to be an ancient one with hereditary offices and emoluments fixed for services therein and the utsavams and ubayams are performed by public subscriptions and oaths are taken there under the Oaths Act and the public have a right to worship the temple deity, the temple must be regarded as a public one. JUDGMENT.

APPEALS NOS. 385, 339 AND 406 OF 1914.

These are appeals from the decree of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Palghat at Calicut, by which he ordered the removal of defendants Nos. 1, 2, 4 to 7 and 25 from the trusteeship of the Parakkat Baghavathi Devaswam and directed a scheme to be framed for the management of the Devaswam. The suit was instituted by the President of the Dharma Rakshana Sabha and another under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure after obtaining the sanction of the Advocate-General. Their case is that the Devaswam is an ancient public religious institution, that defendants Nos. 1 to 7, who were in management of the temple and its properties at the time of the institution of the suit and their predecessors, were guilty of gross breaches of trust—they are specified in paragraph No. 8 of the plaint, and they concluded their plaint with prayers for reliefs specified in section 92 of the Code. Defendants Nos. 8 to 11 are members of the trustee family and claimed a share in the management of the Devaswam with defendants Nos. 1 to 7, which claim however the latter denied. Defendants Nos. 12 to 25 have obtained mortgages of the Devaswam properties from the trustee defendants in the years 1904, 1905, 1906 and 1903. These transactions are challenged as fraudulent by the plaintiffs, who say they are not binding on the Devaswam and pray for a declaration to that effect.

The main defence of all the defendants was that the plaint Devaswam was not a public temple at all but was a private temple belonging to the trustee family; the alienee defendants also pleaded that no relief could be given against them in a suit under section 92 and that they should be struck out of the record.

The Trial Judge, having held that the burden of proving that the Devaswam was a private one was on the defendants in consequence of a statement made by the predecessor of the trustee defendants as to the origin of the temple, came to the conclusion that they had not discharged that burden and therefore held that the temple was a public religious institution. He also held that defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 to 7—the 3rd defendant had died before the trial—were guilty of gross mismanagement, and removed them from the trusteeship and directed a scheme. He dismissed the suit against the alienee defendants on the ground that the suit was bad as against them for misjoinder of parties. The several parties have preferred appeals against the portions of the decree which are against them.

The main appeal (Appeal No. 389 of 1914) is that of the trustee defendants. Besides challenging the decree on the main ground that the suit temple was a private endowment, the learned Pleader raised two other points. First, he contended that the suit was incompetent as no sanction was obtained under the Religious Endowments Act for the removal of trustees and without such a sanction removal of trustees could not be ordered even though it is one of the reliefs which plaintiffs can ask under section 92 after obtaining the requisite sanction under that section. We think the language of sub-clause 2 of section 92 is quite clear and is against this contention. Under section 539 of the Old Code of Civil Procedure, corresponding to section 92 of the new, there was a difference of opinion as to whether a trustee could be removed, and whether persons who had any special interest in the trusts of a public charity could institute suits and ask for the reliefs specified in the section without sanction, or whether persons interested in charities could bring representative suits under section 30 of the old Code in the ordinary Courts. See Giyana Sambandha Pandara Sannadhi v. Kandasami Lambiran (1), Rangasami Naickan v. Varadappa Naickan (2), Ganapati Ayyan v. Savithri Ammal (3) and Budree Das Mukim v. Chooni Lal Johurry (4). The new section 92 was introduced to set at rest these doubts and sub-clause 2 was added in order to make it clear that the provisions of the section are mandatory and that no suit could be brought for any of the reliefs specified in the section except under the conditions laid down in the section; at the same time the special jurisdiction of the District Courts under the Religious Endowments Act was saved, so that a person desirous of suing for the removal of a trustee, or for such other specific relief as can be given him under that Act is at liberty to do so, and is not bound to comply with the provisions of section 92. It is to be observed that a suit under section 92 may be instituted in the Court of a Subordinate Judge, while a suit under the Religious Endowments Act can only be instituted in the District Court. Under the old Code when suits under section 539 could only be instituted in the District Court it was usual for plaintiffs, who wanted the removal of trustees and also a scheme, to obtain sanction under section 14 of the Religious Endowments Act and from the Advocate-General or the Collector. It is obvious that this was a cumbrous and inconvenient procedure, more especially as the powers of the Court in dealing with a suit under the Religious Endowments Act were in some respects larger than in an ordinary suit; for example there can be compulsory arbitration in a suit under Act XX of 1863. Now under the new Code Subordinate Judges' Courts can be invested with jurisdiction under section 92. If the contention of Mr. Rangachariar is accepted, it would mean that in spite of the fact that the removal of a trustee is one of the reliefs specifically mentioned as one which can be granted under section 92, plaintiffs, who require such a relief along with others specified under section 92, must file two different suits one in the District Court under Act XX of 1863; and another under section 92—it may be in a different Court. This, we think, is an unreasonable construction of sub-clause 2 of section 92. In two cases in this Court [Ajapa Natesa Pandara Sannadhi v. Ramalingam Pillai (5), Nelatooru Venkatarangacharyulu v. Nedathur Kristnamacharyulu (6)], the view which we have taken was adopted and except for the strenuous arguments of Mr. Rangachariar, we would have rested content with simply following these cases.

The next point is this. The sanction of the Advocate-General was to the plaint as framed now, including reliefs against alienees.

SUBRAMANIA AIYAR V. VENKATACHALA VADHYAR.

Inasmuch as no relief could be given against the alienees declaring the alienations void, it is said the suit must be dismissed as the sanction was given on a misapprehension of the powers of the Court under section 92. We think there is nothing in the contention. The jurisdiction of the Court could not depend on the decision of the Court as to whether it can or will allow some of the reliefs asked for. There can be no doubt that the substantial reliefs asked for were those specified in the section. The cases cited by the learned Pleader for the appellants were those in which the action as brought was substantially different from that which was sanctioned.

Coming then to the substantial question in the appeal, viz., whether the suit temple was a private or a public religious institution, we have come to the conclusion that the temple is a public temple. It is no doubt true that the burden was on the plaintiffs to show that the temple is a public temple; and we are unable to agree with the learned Judge in the Court below that the statement F, in which a predecessor of the trustee defendants stated that the temple was founded by Parasurama, the mythical founder of Kerala, in any way shifted the burden; nor are we able to attach any importance to a statement of that kind as affording any evidence of the origin of the temple. This mistake of the Judge and the nature of his finding on this issue has necessitated an examination of the evidence in the case on this question.

It is admitted that the temple is a very ancient temple and its origin or foundation is unknown. There are hereditary offices in the temple and the office-holders have a right to perform certain services and to receive the emoluments fixed therefor—defence 10th witness and Exhibit W. There is a flag-staff and a special Pooram festival is performed. Ubayams and Utsavams are performed by the public with subscriptions collected from the public—defence 2nd witness. Oaths are taken in the temple under the Oaths Act without any objection by the trustees—Exhibit K. A tank dug out of the temple funds was held to be a public tank—see Exhibits F, LXXIII, and LXXIII A. The Palghat Rajahs who were the sovereigns of the country at one time asserted Melkoima rights over the suit temple and the predecessors of the trustee defendants have allowed that Melkoima rights in the temple did exist—Exhibits C and XXXIX. It is in evidence that the general public have a right to worship. It is not a single deity which is worshipped, but it appears that there are two temples attached to the main temple, one dedicated to Siva and the other to Vishnu. Even outcastes are allowed to worship from a distance near the idol of Kshettrapala or the guardian of the temple. The temple is admittedly outside the compound of the residence of the trustee defendants and of the ancient Nair family whose rights the Pattar family acquired by adverse possession. These facts clearly show that the temple is a public temple. As against this the appellants are able to rely only on general statements, that some of the indicia above set out are to be found in other institutions which are said to be private institutions or that there are no public temples in Malabar. We do not think that is sufficient. We, therefore, confirm the finding of the lower Court that the temple is a public religious institution.

The learned Pleader for the trustee appellants scarcely contended that if the institution was a public charitable trust, the order for their removal was wrong. There is enough in the admitted facts of the case to show that the present trustees are not persons with whom the management could safely be left. But the learned Judge in the Court below has also ordered the removal of the 25th defendant, the son of the 3rd defendant, who was introduced into the suit after the death of the 3rd defendant. There were no charges against him and he was not in fact in management. We must reverse the order of the lower Court in so far as it directs his removal.

Only one other question was argued in these appeals and that was in the appeal by the plaintiffs. The learned Judge by his decree, after having made a declaration that the properties in schedules A and B to the plaint were trust properties, ordered the dismissal of the action against the alienee defendants Nos. 12 to 23. The appellants contend that the decree is liable to be misunderstood, and construed as enabling the alienee defendants in any future proceedings to contend that the properties are not trust properties. The learned Pleaders for the alienees agree that the decree may be so amended as to make it clear that this declaration was binding on them also. Mr. Ganapathi Aiyar on behalf of the plaintiffs also contended that the Court was bound to decide whether the alienations were binding on the institution and give appropriate reliefs against the alienees in this suit. The decisions of this Court in Asam Raghavulu Setty v. Pellali Sitamma (7) and Rangayya Naidu v. Chinnasamy Iyer (8) are against this contention and we are bound by them. We must, therefore, confirm the decree of the lower Court in so far as it declined to grant relief against defendants Nos. 12 to 23. The question whether the alienations are or are not binding on the institution and whether the right of the institution to challenge them is now barred by limitation, as pleaded by some of the alienees, can be tried in a suit by the trustee or trustees who may come in under the scheme.

APPEAL No. 46 of 1915.

Defendants Nos. 10 and 11 (in Original Suit No. 12 of 1912 on the file of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Palghat at Calicut) instituted a suit against defendants Nos. 1 to 7 claiming a share in the management. They also said that the institution was a private endowment. Their suit was dismissed on the ground that as the institution is now found to be a public trust, their claim to a share on the footing that it was a private endowment was not maintainable. They appeal in Appeal Suit No. 46 of 1915. As they are parties to the suit under section 92 and as we agree that a scheme should be framed for the management of the trust in which the claims, if any, of the members of the family of the trustees may be recognized if it is possible to do so without prejudice to the interests of the institution, which of course is the primary thing to be considered, we dismiss the appeal.

As the decree in Original Suit No. 12 of 1912 on the file of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Palghat at Calicut is not as clear as it might be, and in view of the alterations suggested by us, we substitute the following decree:—

1. Declare that the Parakkat Baghavathi Devaswam is a public religious institution and that the properties described in schedules A and B attached to this decree are the properties of the Devaswam;

2. that defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 to 7 be and are hereby removed from the management of the Parakkat Baghavathi Devaswam and its properties;

3. that the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Palghat at Calicut do frame a scheme for the management of the Devaswam and its properties with due regard to the claims, if any, of the members of the family of defendants Nos. 1 to 7 and 8 to 11 other than the 'dismissed trustees';

4. that the plaintiffs' suit in other respects be dismissed.

[The judgment then makes provision for the costs of the appeal.—Ed.]

Decreed varied.

A compromise of a suit by the karnavan of a tarwad to set aside an alienation by his predecessor of the properties of a private Devaswam attached to the tarwad is not binding on the Devaswam, unless the compromise was entered into in good faith and for necessity and after due enquiries by the alienee. The decision as to good faith and necessity must be reached on a comprehensive survey of all the circumstances. It cannot be assumed that, because one party withdraws a large proportion of his original claim, the result is advantageous to the other, unless the prospects of the contest regarding the balance are considered and found unfavourable. The good faith and necessity for a compromise can, however, be upheld, though proof may be wanting that its terms represent those which would have been secured, had the matter been litigated fully. [p. 694, col. 2; p. 695, col. 1.]

The burden of proof regarding the propriety of the compromise is on the alienee.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—Though the Indian Trusts Act does not apply to any public or private religious endowments, the principles embodied in section 43 apply to a trustee or trustees acting on behalf of a private religious trust. The powers of a trustee embodied in that section are enunciated primarily to protect him when acting bona fide against suits for damages by the cestui que trust for loss caused by the exercise of such powers. But the question whether property alienated to a third party by the trustee through an alleged breach of trust can be pursued successfully by the cestui que trust depends on very similar considerations, viz., whether the third party acted bona fide without notice of the breach and whether he was an alienee for valuable consideration. [p. 698, col. 2.]

The analogy between the case of a Hindu widow representing her husband's estate and the case of a trustee of a religious institution is rather remote. [p. 699, col. 1.]

It is necessary for Courts in India to scrutinise alienations by compromise and awards out of Court made in reference to properties relating to religious and charitable trusts with very great care before they are accepted as valid against the trust. [p. 699, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Palghat, in Appeal Suit No. 571 of 1912, preferred against that of the District Munsif, Chowghat, in Original Suit No. 731 of 1910.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Respondents.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 27th and 28th July 1916, and having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—This suit was brought by the plaintiffs-appellants, to recover property on behalf of a Devaswam alleged to be the property or to be under the management of themselves and defendants Nos. 9 to 11; and the main defence was that the property is held by the 1st defendant on a valid mortgage, which is still outstanding.

The facts are that the property was first mortgaged by the predecessor of the 9th defendant, the present karnavan of the Kovilagam, in 1905 under Exhibit I; and that 9th defendant compromised a suit, which he brought in 1903 to set Exhibit I aside on obtaining modifications of certain of its terms, which are embodied in Exhibit L. The first contention before us is that Exhibit L superseded the original mortgage Exhibit I, but created no fresh mortgage relation and that the property, thus freed, should, therefore, be restored to plaintiffs.

Exhibit L is executed only by the 1st defendant, the mortgagee; and, if it purported to supersede Exhibit I and were relied on as constituting the mortgage relation between the parties, section 59 of the

RAVI VARMA RAJAH v. RAMASUBRAMANIA PATTAR.

Transfer of Property Act would no doubt negative the possibility of its doing so. But its terms preclude that argument. For they do not provide explicitly or implicitly for the supersession of Exhibit I, either entirely or by modification of any of its essential conditions.

First as to total supersession, some attempt has been made to show that the plaintiffs themselves assumed in their pleadings that Exhibit L was the only document, by which the suit property was bound. But this is unsustainable in view of the references to Exhibit I as well as Exhibit L in plaint paragraphs 5, 11 and 16. The arguments from the actual terms of Exhibit L rest on the verbatim translation of its recital that "the 1st defendant is now holding the mortgage properties, which he was holding under Exhibit I," the implication suggested being that he has ceased to hold them under it. But there is no direct reference to his holding in future under any new document or under Exhibit L. On the contrary Exhibit L is hardly intelligible except on the assumption that some earlier document is still in force; and it refers expressly to Exhibit I in connection with an acknowledgment regarding the extent of the mortgage period, which has yet to run. The terms moreover of the compromise petition, Exhibit IV, filed contemporaneously with the execution of Exhibit L, included nothing regarding the cancellation of Exhibit I and provided for the dismissal of the suit for that relief. All this indicates that, consistently with the evident intention of the parties, the portion of Exhibit L quoted above really provides for the 1st defendant still holding the properties, which he was holding under Exhibit I, and involves no suggestion that he has begun to hold under any other document.

Then as to the particular terms modified, the plaintiffs' argument fails, because the modifications do not amount to changes in the obligations of the mortgagor, to which his consent would be necessary, but only to an agreement by the mortgagee not to insist on his original rights in their entirety, the case being one of remission under section 63 not of novation under section 62 of the Indian Contract

Act. The modifications consist in (1) a reduction of the principal amount secured as repayable to the 1st defendant, (2) a reduction in the share of the annual produce, which he is entitled to retain, the michavaram payable to the mortgagor being enhanced, (3) the release of one item of the mortgaged property. The effect is, therefore, that the mortgagee foregoes rights for the mortgagor's benefit, not that the latter cancels an old or makes a new mortgage. Plaintiffs, therefore, must fail on this contention.

Their next argument is that the lower Appellate Court erred in dealing with their objections to the mortgage based on the absence of proved necessity for it and of good faith on the part of the 9th defendant and his predecessor or due enquiry by the 1st defendant, because it considered only the circumstances immediately connected with Exhibit L and not those connected with Exhibit I and the validity of the objections to it, which under the compromise were withdrawn. The circumstances in question certainly bulked largely in the judgment of the District Munsif; and the lower Appellate Court conceded that the compromise would bind the Deva-swam only, if it was made bona fide, and, finding that it was, did not deal with the question of the 1st defendant's enquiries. Its finding, however, was based on (1) the absence of evidence to prove the allegation of collusion and corruption, and (2) the terms of Exhibit L. It referred to the validity of Exhibit I in two connections only, with reference to (1) the giving up by the 1st defendant of a large sum due under Exhibit I, and (2) his failure to produce the original accounts, which would have supported the claim, in satisfaction of which Exhibit I is alleged to have been given.

This investigation of the good faith of and necessity for the compromise must be held inadequate. For it cannot be assumed that, because one party withdraws a large proportion of his original claim, the result is advantageous to the other, unless the prospects of the contest regarding the balance are considered and found unfavourable: and the reference to the 1st defendant's surrender of his accounts overlooked the facts that the burden of proof regarding the propriety of the compromise was on him and that the copies he produced as secondary evidence were subjected to severe criticism. Certainly the good faith of and necessity for a compromise can be upheld, although proof may be wanting that its terms represent those which would have been secured, had the matter been litigated fully. But the decision as to good faith and necessity must be reached, as it was the parties' duty to reach it, on a comprehensive survey of the circumstances. Such a survey the lower Appellate Court failed to make, since it attempted no conclusion as to the foundation of the whole dispute, the validity of Exhibit I or as to the 1st defendant's prudence in abandoning his claim for its cancellation in toto.

The foregoing disposes of the defendants' contention regarding the lower Appellate Court's decision as to the good faith of the compromise. They have further argued that the decision was unnecessary, because the 9th defendant and his predecessor were under no special obligation and the compromise must be upheld in the absence of proof of any of the reasons, for which contracts are ordinarily set aside. There is a question, to be dealt with later, as to the character in which the 9th defendant and his predecessor carried out these transactions, whether they did so as Uraller Trustees of the Devaswam, a public temple, or merely as karnavans of the Kovilagam, of which the temple was the private property. But it is unnecessary to decide at present in which capacity they acted, since the authorities show that a karnavan's transactions can be upheld in the absence of the consent of other members of the tarwad, only if they were effected in good faith and for necessity; and it is unnecessary to cite cases to show that as much must be proved, if trust property is in question. It is true that in Eravanni Revivarmam v. Ittappu Revivarmam (1) and in Varanakot Narayanan Namburi v. Varanakot Narayanan Namburi (2), the Court refused to describe the karnavan as a trustee; but it fully recognised his special responsibility to other members of the tarwad, in the one case comparing him with the father of a Hindu family and in the other reiterating his obligation to act in good faith. Vide also Elayachaniduthil Kombi Achen v. Kenatumkora Lakshmi Amma (3) and Ramunni v. Kerala Varma Valia Raja (4). Authority accordingly justifies the lower Appellate Court's opinion that proof of good faith and necessity on the part of the 9th defendant and his predecessor is necessary. It follows that in its absence the 1st defendant must prove that he made due enquiries. The case must, therefore, go back to the lower Appellate Court for re-hearing on this point.

Lastly the defendants support the lower Appellate Court's decision on the ground that the plaintiffs had no right to sue, because, the trust being of a public temple, they are not the Urallars; and they rely on Appu Pattar v. Kurumba Bhagwati (5) and Ettisheril Edathil v. Pothera Kalloor (6). The plaintiffs in reply allege that they never pleaded and do not admit the public character of the Devaswam. The facts are that in the plaint the establishment was described as a Devaswam without further qualification; and it might be a question whether that description is compatible with private ownership. Though, however, the 1st and the 9th defendants in paragraphs 14 and 3 of their respective written statements raised the objection now under consideration, no issue was framed and no argument on it was attempted in either of the lower Courts. The lower Appellate Court in fact made the first reference to the 9th defendant and his predecessor as Urallars in its judgment. In the circumstances, there is no reason for allowing defendants to rely for the first time at this stage on an objection, to substantiate which fresh evidence would be necessary.

The result is that the lower Appellate Court's decision must be set aside and it must be directed to re-hear the appeal in the light of the foregoing. It will in particular deal with the question whether the compromise between the 9th defendant and the 1st defendant can be sustained with reference, not only to Exhibit L and its immediate circumstances, but also to the validity of Exhibit I and the 9th defendant's prospects of success in his suit for its cancellation. If it finds that the 9th defendant and his predecessor acted in bad faith it will further decide whether the 1st defendant acted in good faith and after due enquiry in dealing with them.

Costs to date will abide the result of the further hearing and will be provided for in the decree to be passed.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—Twelve out of the fifteen plaintiffs are the appellants before us. It is necessary to set out the following facts to understand the points for decision.

The plaintiffs' tarwad owns a private family temple called Thichukavu Ayyappan Devaswam. The karnavan of the family was as usual the trustee of this private religious trust.

Eleven items of land belonging to this trust were mortgaged in September 1905 by the then karnavan to the 1st defendant under Exhibit I for Rs. 360 for a term of 24 years, it being mentioned in the document that Rs. 300 out of the consideration of Rs. 360 was the amount found due to the 1st defendant on a settlement of the account of the sums spent by the 1st defendant in managing the temple affairs as manager under the karnavan.

Soon after the death of that karnavan, the 9th defendant became the karnavan of the plaintiff's tarwad and the trustee of the temple. As such, he brought Original Suit No. 253 of 1908 to set aside the mortgage of 1905 as not binding on the Devaswam. But the 9th defendant and the 1st defendant compromised that suit of 1908 and filed a joint petition, Exhibit IV, in the District Munsif's Court to the following effect: "The plaintiff" (the present 9th defendant) "having now been convinced that the amount due under the suit mortgage-deed" (of 1905) "is really due, the parties" (the present 9th defendant and the present 1st defendant) "have settled the matter on the following terms," viz.—

(1) the defendant released item No. 10 of the 11 mortgaged items from the mortgage;

(2) the 9th defendant was to recover the same with arrears of rent, Rs. 8-7-0, from the 1st defendant;

(3) the remaining items were to be charged with a mortgage debt of Rs. 288-7-0 only instead of Rs. 360;

(4) the defendant was to hold them for the period mentioned in Exhibit I, the document of 1905;

(5) the porappad-rent, paddy and cash, were to be slightly increased;

(6) the 1st defendant was to give up his alleged kuzhikanam right to nine cocoanut trees standing inside the walls in item No. 1;

(7) the 1st defendant was to pay the 9th defendant interest at 12 per. cent. per annum on the arrears of rent;

(8) the 1st defendant was not to claim the value of improvements in respect of eighteen cocoanut trees belonging to the 9th defendant in item No 9;

(9) the 1st defendant was to execute a kaichit to the 9th defendant on the terms set forth above; and

(10) the Suit No. 258 of 1908 was to be dismissed as the parties had thus compromised their disputes.

On this petition, that suit was accordingly dismissed. The 1st defendant in accordance with the terms mentioned in the above petition, Exhibit IV, executed a registered kaichit, Exhibit L, in favour of the 9th defendant on the 12th October 1908, in which the 1st defendant acknowledged that only Rs. 288-7-0 was due to him as mortgagee, that he had to pay the higher porappad mentioned in the compromise and that he had to enjoy the property for the 21 years still remaining under the document, Exhibit I of 1905 (which mentioned a term of 24 years).

The present suit (Original Suit No. 731 of 1910) out of which this second appeal has risen was brought to set aside both the mortgage of September 1905 (Exhibit I) and the kaichit, Exhibit L, of 1908, on the contention that they were not binding on the plaintiffs' tarwad. The District Munsif decreed the suit substantially in plaintiffs' favour on the following findings:—

RAVI VARMA RAJAH v. RAMASUBRAMANIA PATTAR.

(1) It is not proved that the Devaswam owed the 1st defendant Rs. 300 as mentioned in Exhibit I of 1905. Exhibit I is not a bona fide transaction, especially as the improvements belonging to the Devaswam on the date of Exhibit I are not specified in it.

(2) The compromise, Exhibit IV, and the kaichit, Exhibit L, are also not binding on the plaintiffs' Devaswam. (The District Munsif seems not to have kept the question of the binding nature of the first mortgage of 1905 and the question of the binding nature of the compromise and of the kaichit of 1908 distinct in his mind when he wrote his judgment. I also find that no separate issue was raised about the compromise and the kaichit. The first issue, viz., "Is the mortgage in question not binding on the plaintiffs" was evidently treated in the District Munsif's Court as covering that question also).

On the 1st defendant's appeal from the decision of the District Munsif, the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Palghat reversed the District Munsif's decision and dismissed the suit on the following conclusions:—

(1) The compromise under Exhibit IV of the Suit No. 258 of 1908 made by the 9th defendant who was the then karnavan, is binding on the Devaswam because the compromise was bona fide.

(2) The plaintiffs are not entitled to bring the suit, because they are the junior members of their tarwad and because the 9th defendant alone is the Urallan of the Devaswam.

I think that the Subordinate Judge's decision on the 2nd point, on which also he based the dismissal of the plaintiffs' suit, cannot be supported. So long ago as in September 1893, Sir. T. Muthuswami Aiyar, J., and Mr. Justice Best assumed, without question, that the junior members of a tarwad to which a private temple belonged could bring a suit to protect the Devaswam against an alienation made by the karnavan trustee. See Appu Pattar v. Kurumba Bhagwati (5). The decision in Ettisheril Edathil v. I'othera Kalloor (6) relied on by the 1st defendant related to a public temple and as regards such a temple, the junior members belonging to the tarwad of the trustee stand in no better position than any other member of the public and hence they cannot recover the properties on behalf of the public temple without bringing a suit under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure for removal of the trustee from his position as trustee and for the appointment of a new trustee, such new trustee so appointed being the proper person to be put in possession of the properties alienated by the previous trustee. That case, therefore, has no application to a private temple belonging to a particular tarwad or to particular tarwads alone.

As regards the first point, the learned Subordinate Judge held the compromise under Exhibit IV to be a bona fide one for the following reasons: (a) there was no evidence that the compromise was brought about by collusion between the defendants Nos. 1 and 9 or that the 9th defendant received any illegal gratification; (b) the porappad was increased; (c) a portion of the mortgage amount mentioned in the document of 1905 was given up by the 1st defendant; (d) the fact that the improvements belonging to the plaintiffs' tarwad are not specified in Exhibit L was not very material as it is not usual to insert all the improvements in such documents; (e) the fact that a new mortgage was not taken from all the adult male members and that the kaichit was executed by the 9th defendant alone is not against the bona fides of the compromise and the kaichit, because in the case of a Devaswam, the karnavan has the sole power and the Devaswam property was not tarwad property; (f) the defendants Nos. 10 and 11, the junior members of the tarwad who managed the Devaswam, have consented to and ratified the terms of Exhibit IV.

Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar for the Appellants (if I understood him aright) argued—

(1) That the compromise made by a trustee of a private Devaswam is not binding on the Devaswam even though the compromise was bona fide, unless it was also shown to be for the benefit of the trust.

(2) That the reasons given by the Subordinate Judge in support of the validity of the compromise are not legally sufficient;

(3) that the Subordinate Judge ought to have gone into the question whether the original mortgage of 1905 was binding upon the Devaswam, as a conclusion on that question was of cogent relevancy in arriving at a proper decision on the bona fides of the compromise, Exhibit IV.

Before considering these arguments, it would be convenient to dispose at once of another contention put forward by Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar, viz., that raised in the second ground of appeal, as follows:—“The plaint mortgage, not being in writing registered and attested as required under the law, is invalid and the mortgagee could acquire no right under it.” By “the plaint mortgage,” Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar stated that the kaichit of October 1908 was intended. He argued that that kaichit was a fresh mortgage superseding the earlier mortgage of 1905 and that as it was not executed by the mortgagor (the plaintiffs’ tarwad), no new mortgage was legally created. He relied upon section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, which says “that a mortgage can be effected only by a registered instrument signed by the mortgagor and attested by at least two witnesses.” I am at a loss to understand what benefit the appellants could hope to obtain even if this contention was upheld. If Exhibit L is invalid, then Exhibit I, the mortgage of 1905, which contains the more onerous conditions which were sought to be modified by Exhibit L, remains without any such modification. Further Exhibit L in my opinion is not a new mortgage at all. It is only a subsequent agreement by which the mortgagee, the 9th defendant, agreed to give up in favour of the mortgagors some of the benefits which he obtained under Exhibit I, leaving the terms of that mortgage in full force in other respects; in other words, the mortgage, Exhibit I, has not been cancelled by Exhibit L but only modified in favour of the mortgagor. A document effecting such a modification is not a new mortgage and hence section 59 does not apply.

Coming back then to the question of the bona fides of the compromise, Exhibit IV, and its validity against the tarwad, section 43 of the Trusts Act says that “Two or more trustees acting together may compromise, compound, abandon, submit to arbitration or otherwise settle any debt, account, claim or thing whatever relating to the trust” and that “The powers conferred by this section on two or more trustees acting together may be exercised by a sole acting trustee when by the instrument of trust, if any, a sole trustee is authorised to execute the trusts and powers thereof.” This section was evidently copied from section 30 of Lord Cranworth’s Act, which was re-enacted in the wider Statute 56 and 57 Victoria, Chapter 33 (see section 21). Though the Indian Trusts Act does not apply to public or private religious endowments (see section 1 of the Act), I think that the principles embodied in section 43 apply to a trustee or trustees acting on behalf of a private religious trust also. The powers of a trustee embodied in that section are enunciated primarily to protect him when acting bona fide against suits for damages by the cestui que trust for loss caused by the exercise of such powers. But the question whether property alienated to a third party by the trustee through an alleged breach of trust can be pursued successfully by the cestui que trust depends on very similar considerations, namely, whether the third party acted bona fide without notice of the breach and whether he was an alienee for valuable consideration. (See Lewin’s Law of Trusts, 12th Edition, page 1113.) Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar relied upon the case of Bhojaraju Venkatrama Jogiraju v. Adapalli Seshayya (7), decided by Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ, in support of his contention contra. The judgment in that case contains the following passages: “A decree passed against the holder of a woman’s estate on compromise between her and her creditor would be binding on the reversioners only in cases where the contract of compromise itself entered into by her would bind them. An adjudication against her by a Court, after a fair contest, with respect to a matter relating to the estate represented by her would no doubt be binding on the estate and all who succeed her as its owners: but a decree passed upon a compromise into which she enters can have no higher effect against her successors than a contract entered into by her; Timmaji Amma v. Subbaraju (8), Subbammal v. Avudaiyammal (9), Roy Radha Kissen v. Nruratan Lall (10), Appeal No. 193 of 1907 decided by this Bench." Speaking for myself, I think that the powers of a Hindu widow to compromise litigation launched against her as representative of her husband's estate so as to bind the contingent reversioners have been rather too narrowly enunciated in the above passages. Subbammal v. Avudaiyammal (9) was not the case of a compromise but was the case of a decree obtained against the widow without contest. I do not see how that case supports the view that a compromise decree is not valid against the reversioners or that there should be a fair contest by the widow before an adjudication against her is binding on the reversioners. I am inclined to hold that if the widow is sued as representative of the estate and if she bona fide enters into a compromise of that litigation, that compromise is binding on the reversioners. However, that decision does not directly govern the present case and the analogy between the case of a Hindu widow representing her husband's estate and the case of a trustee of a religious institution is rather remote.

In Tudor on Charities and Mortmain (4th Edition, page 378), it is laid down generally "A question relating to the interests of a charity may be compromised. Thus in several cases a compromise of the question whether a charitable gift is good.....has been confirmed by the Court." But it is said at page 379, ib.: "The Court will not act in accordance with an award in charity cases without the consent of the Attorney-General." In England, charitable trusts are mostly governed by the provisions of the numerous Charitable Trust Acts (enacted between 1853 and 1894) and the Attorney-General has large powers of advice and control and in the initiation of Court proceedings in the matter of charitable trusts. Similar provisions have not been enacted by the Indian Legislature and it is, therefore, necessary for Courts in India to scrutinise alienations by compromise and awards out of Court made in reference to properties relating to religious and charitable trusts with very great care, before they are accepted as valid against the trust. In the present case, the good faith of the 1st defendant and of the deceased trustee in the matter of the execution of Exhibit I and the good faith of the 1st and 9th defendants in entering into the compromise Exhibit IV are in question, and I agree with my learned brother that the case must go back to the lower Appellate Court for a fresh decision and I agree also in his order as to the costs incurred up-to-date.

Appeal allowed; Case sent back.

Dr. Pandalai, for the Attorneys' Association.

JUDGMENT.—When this case first came on for hearing the defendant was represented by Mr. M. K. Ramaswami Iyer, Attorney-at-Law, and the plaintiff by Mr. Venkatasubba Row, Vakil. Mr. M. K. Ramaswami Iyer applied for an adjournment and on this being opposed, he claimed the right, as an Attorney-at-Law, to conduct his client's case in the suit and to have a right of audience. Mr. Venkatasubba Row opposed this and maintained that an Attorney-at-Law has no right of audience in the trial of a suit on the Original Side. To this, Mr. M. K. Ramaswami Iyer replied that he was prepared to show not only that he himself as an Attorney-at-Law had a right of audience but that Mr. Venkatasubba Row, a Vakil, had none. I was informed that the question was one which had arisen in this Court before; but as the parties informed me that it was desired to make this a test case to go before the ultimate Tribunal and as I was quite ignorant of what had been said or decided when it was discussed before, I thought it better that notice should go to the Barristers', Attorneys' and Vakils' Associations respectively that I would hear their representatives if they desired to be heard as amici curiæ. Ultimately, the matter was argued on the 20th and 21st instant, when

Mr. Nugent Grant, Barrister-at-Law, appeared for the Barristers, Dr. Pandalai, Barrister-at-Law for the Attorneys and Mr. C. P. Ramaswami Iyer for the Vakils. Having heard these gentlemen as well as Mr. M. K. Ramaswami Iyer and Mr. Venkatasubba Row who originally raised the question, I reserved judgment.

The precise form which the matter takes is the question as to whether rule 533 of the Original Side Rules of the Madras High Court of 1902 is or is not intra vires. If it is, it is conceded that it disposes of the matter adversely to both of Mr. M. K. Ramaswami Iyer's contentions; for its terms are perfectly clear and it runs as follows:—

"An Advocate may appear and plead upon all proceedings in Court or in Chambers; provided that the taxing officer shall not, between party and party, allow any fee in respect of his attendance at Chambers or at the first hearing of a suit unless the Judge certifies that the case is a proper one for the attendance of an Advocate.

"An Attorney may appear, plead and act upon all proceedings; provided that he shall not be allowed to appear or plead upon a hearing in Court.

"A Vakil may appear, plead and act upon all proceedings, whether in Court or in Chambers."

I have come to the conclusion that the clearest way of dealing with the subject is the chronological one. In order to understand the bearing and effect of the various Statutes and rules and decisions, one must see what the position was, before the passing of 13 Geo. III, Ch. 63. Under the Company's rule, civil justice was administered in local Courts, known as Zillah Courts. These had existed throughout India for a period going back centuries beyond the existence of the Company. In them, the litigants were represented by a body of persons called Vakils, a Hindustani word meaning "Agents"; and from time immemorial, the Vakil was paid by a percentage of the amount in suit. The Court or the native administration concerned determined who should be allowed to appear as Vakils in a given Zillah Court. When the Company organised the system of justice within India, they preserved the Zillah Courts, retaining in their own hands the appointment of the Judges in those Courts and the licensing of Vakils to plead; and the appeal system having developed, there grew up, at large centres of population, Courts of Appeal known as Sadder or "Superior" Courts presided over by the Chief Judicial Officers of the Company. These Courts, in each presidency, had a complete appellate jurisdiction over all inferior Courts of the Presidency and Vakils appearing in them for the parties were remunerated on the traditional system of a percentage of the amount in suit. No special Tribunal existed either for the presidency towns or for any special class of the population outside the Company's system of Zillah and Sadder Courts. The Sadder Courts were divided into two great branches, the Dewany Adawlut trying revenue matters and civil cases and Sadder Nizamut Adawlut or Fowjdari Adawlut which dealt with criminal matters. In 1774, steps were taken to permit of the establishment, for the Presidency of Bengal, by Charter or Letters Patent, of a Supreme Court. The jurisdiction was to be over all British subjects in the Presidency subject to an appeal to His Majesty in Council. We need not further pursue the history of the matter in Bengal since in 1800, similar steps were taken with regard to the Madras Presidency, by the Charter Act of that year. Following on this came the Letters Patent of the 26th December 1800, establishing the Supreme Court of Fort St. George. The jurisdiction of that Court was over British subjects throughout the Presidency and over all persons within the Municipal limits of what would now be called the Presidency Town of Madras; and it was provided that the Court should have a jurisdiction similar to that of the Court of King's Bench in England. The Court was further "authorised and empowered to approve, admit and enrol such and so many of the persons, being bona fide practitioners of the Law in the said Court of Recorder of Madras (this was the Royal Court which preceded the Supreme Court established by Charter) or having been admitted Barristers in England or Ireland or having been admitted Attorneys or Solicitors in one of our Courts at Westminster or being otherwise capable according to such rules and qualifications as the said Court shall, for that purpose, make and declare, to act as well in the character of Advocates as of Attorneys in the said Court, which persons so approved, admitted and enrolled as aforesaid, shall be and are hereby authorised to appear and plead and act for the suitors in the said Court. And we do declare that no other persons whatsoever shall be allowed to appear and plead or act in the said Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras for and on behalf of such suitors or any of them." Another clause of the Charter of 1800 runs as follows: "We do hereby further authorise and empower the said Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras, to settle a table of fees, to be allowed to such Sheriff, Attorneys and all others, the clerks and other officers aforesaid, for all and every part of the business to be done by them respectively, which fees, when approved by the Governor of Fort St. George-in-Council (to whom we hereby give authority to review the same), the said Sheriff, Attorneys, clerks, and other officers, shall and may lawfully demand and receive." The clear effect of the first of these clauses was to confine the right of acting in the character of Advocates and Attorneys respectively in the Supreme Court to such persons as should be appointed and enrolled as such Advocates or Attorneys by the Court; and it is clear that under that Charter, the Court could have no jurisdiction to give the right of audience in the Supreme Court to any one who had not been enrolled as an Advocate or the right of acting for a party to any one who had not been enrolled as an Attorney. The Letters Patent of Bombay, some twenty years later, confined the right of appearing in the Supreme Court to Barristers and of acting to Solicitors and it was held by the Privy Council in Morgan v. Leech (1) that the Supreme Court had no power to admit as an Attorney any one who did not possess the qualifications indicated by the Letters Patent. Applying the principle of this decision, it is clear that under the Letters Patent of 1800, the Supreme Court at Madras could have no power to allow the right of audience or of acting in the Supreme Court to any person not duly enrolled as an Advocate or Attorney of that Court, as the case might be.

NAMBERUMAL CHETTY v. NARASIMHACHARI.

It is pointed out that under the Letters

Patent, the only legal practitioners for whom a table of fees is to be drawn up are Attorneys. A Barrister or an Advocate has no legal right to his fees which, in contemplation of law, are a mere gratuitous honorarium. In practice, of course, they are always charged at a more or less definite rate. But they are paid by the Solicitor or Attorney and figure in his bill delivered to his client and there is no contractual relation between the Barrister and the lay client. A Vakil, on the other hand, can sue for his fees and can recover them directly from the lay client, just as a Solicitor can sue for his professional costs. It is clear, therefore, that the only Advocates whose remuneration the Letters Patent of 1800 contemplated being provided for are the Barristers or Advocates retained and paid through Solicitors or Attorneys. There was no place in those Letters Patent for a Vakil. While the right of audience was thus restricted in the Supreme Court, Barristers, Advocates and Attorneys were admitted to practice in the Company's Courts; but, in so far as they did so, they appeared practically on the same footing as Vakils; their fees were taxed on the ad valorem scale in force in these Courts, and they were allowed to have direct relations with the lay client. In this state of things was passed the High Courts Act of 1861, 24 and 25 Vict., Ch. 104. The Act enabled Her Majesty by Letters Patent to establish High Courts at Calcutta, Bombay and Madras; and section 8 provides, with regard to Madras, that upon the establishment of such High Court in the Presidency of Madras, the Supreme Court and the Court of Sadar Adawlut and Fowjdari Adawlut in the same Presidency shall be abolished. Section 11 provides that upon the establishment of the High Court, all provisions, then in force in India, of Acts of Parliament or of any order of Her Majesty-in-Council or Charters or of any Acts of the Legislature of India applicable to the Supreme Courts shall be taken to be applicable to the High Courts so far as may be consistent with the provisions of this Act and the Letters Patent to be issued in pursuance thereof, subject to the Legislative powers of the Governor-General of India in Council. Section 15 provides that such High Court shall have superintendence over all Courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction and is to have power to settle tables of fees to be allowed to the Attorneys, no mention being made of fees allowable to Advocates on the one hand or Vakils on the other. Summing up the effect of the Statute as bearing upon the matters I have to decide, it seems to me that the following points emerge:— (1) The new High Court is a substitution for the Supreme Court and the Sadar Courts, and on its establishment, they cease, as such, to exist. Whatever historical analogies may exist, it is, I think, legally quite inaccurate to say that the Original Side of the High Court is the old Supreme Court or that the Appellate Side of the High Court is the old Sadar Court or Courts; (2) the existing provisions applicable to the Supreme Court are to apply to the High Court in so far as they are consistent with the Act and with the new Letters Patent to be framed thereunder; and (3) the only legal practitioners to whom tables of fees can be made applicable are Attorneys.

I now pass to the Letters Patent of the 26th June 1862. Clauses 7 to 10 deal with the powers of the High Court in admitting Advocates, Vakils and Attorneys to practice. These are their terms. Clause 7:—"We do hereby authorise and empower the said High Court of Judicature at Madras to approve, admit and enrol such and so many Advocates as to the said High Court shall seem meet, who shall be and are hereby authorised to appear and plead for the suitors of the said High Court, subject to the rules and directions of such Court."

Clause 8:—"We do, further, authorise and empower the said High Court of Judicature at Madras to approve, admit and enrol such and so many Vakils as to the said High Court shall seem meet, who shall be and are hereby authorised to appear, plead and act for the suitors of the said High Court subject to the rules and directions of such Court."

Clause 9:—"We do, further, authorise and empower the said High Court of Judicature at Madras to approve, admit and enrol such and so many Attorneys-at-Law as to the said

NUMBERUMAL CHETTY v. NARASIMHACHARI.

High Court shall seem meet, who shall be and are hereby authorised to appear and act for the suitors of the said High Court, subject to the rules and directions of such Court."

Clause 10:—"We do hereby ordain that the said High Court shall have power to make rules for the qualification and admission of proper persons, to be Advocates, Vakils and Attorneys-at-Law of the said High Court and shall be empowered to remove, on reasonable cause, the said Advocates, Vakils and Attorneys-at-Law and no person whatsoever but such Advocates or Vakils shall be allowed to plead for, or on behalf of any suitor in the said High Court; and no person or persons whatsoever but such Vakils or Attorneys-at-Law shall be allowed to act for any suitor in the said High Court."

Clauses 11 to 27 deal with the jurisdiction of the High Court and establish a distinction in civil and criminal matters respectively between the original and appellate jurisdiction of the High Court, though the expression "Original and Appellate Side" of the High Court is not used. By clause 44, it is enacted that so much of the Letters Patent of 1800 as is inconsistent with 24 and 25 Vict. Ch. 104, and the present Letters Patent shall cease and determine and be utterly void.

Under the authority of the Letters Patent of 1862, rules were passed by the High Court of Madras of which the material ones are as follows:—

By rule 4, Advocates and Attorneys of the Supreme Court who, at the time of its abolition, had been permitted to practise as Pleaders in the Sudder Court were empowered to apply to be enrolled as Vakils of the High Court; but as such Vakils, they were forbidden to appear, plead or act in matters of Extraordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction. By rules 7 and 8, Vakils were forbidden to appear, plead or act in any matter of Ordinary Original Jurisdiction of the High Court, Civil or Criminal. The position defined by these rules is quite unmistakable. The person who is to appear before the High Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction is the Vakil with the traditional remuneration, ad valorem. Barristers and Attorneys have a right of audience in the appellate business and for purposes of that business only may enrol themselves as Vakils. I am not quite clear as to whether the idea was that they must necessarily enrol themselves as Vakils, if they wished to appear on the Appellate Side; and I do not feel sure that an Advocate could not have appeared, instructed by an Attorney, and claimed to be heard as an Advocate and not as a Vakil. This, however, is quite certain that the only remuneration that could have been claimed either from the client or from the other party, would have been the single ad valorem fee. The client could only with his consent have been charged with the ordinary bill of costs including separate items of remuneration to the Attorney and the Advocate.

On the 1st October 1863, the High Court issued two sets of new rules, the first being headed "Rules providing for the qualification and admission of Advocates, Vakils and Attorneys of the High Court". They laid down certain qualifications with which we are not now concerned. But in Rule 7, one qualification is that of having studied for six months with "a Vakil entitled as such to practise on both the Original and Appellate Sides of the High Court". This, so far as I know, is the first mention of a Vakil entitled to practise on the Original Side. I do not think it is of much importance to enquire whether, on that date, any Vakil did or did not practise on the Original Side. At any rate no one had been able to point out any rule which empowered him to do so, and by the rules of 28th August of 1862 he was clearly prohibited from so doing. I think it more probable that the rule had reference to the future, for, on the same day, 1st October 1863, it is clearly contemplated that Vakils shall practise on the Original Side, because there is an elaborate series of provisions regarding Vakils' fees on the Original Side, though nowhere, in terms, is it directly said that he shall have a right of audience. On the one side it is contended that the rules of 1862, on the other that the rules of 1863 were ultra vires the Charter, and, of course, a third view is possible and that both were intra vires and that it was at the option of the High Court as to whether or no, it should give a right of audience to Vakils, an option which it exercised in one way on the earlier date and in another on the later.

But it is not necessary to go into that matter, because, within 3 years, the Letters Patent of 1862 were superseded by the Letters Patent of 28th December 1865. The only clauses that I need refer to are 9 and 10 (relating to the admission of Advocates, Vakils and Attorneys), 37 and 41. Clauses 9 and 10 are so important that they must be set out in full.

Clause 9:—"We do hereby authorise and empower the said High Court to approve, admit and enrol such and so many Advocates, Vakils and Attorneys as to the said High Court shall seem meet; and the said Advocates, Vakils and Attorneys shall be and are hereby authorised to appear for the suitors of the said High Court and to plead and act for the said suitors according as the said High Court may, by its rules and directions, determine and subject to such rules and directions."

Clause 10:—"We do hereby ordain that the said High Court shall have power to make rules for the qualification and admission of proper persons to be Advocates, Vakils and Attorneys-at-Law, of the said High Court, and shall be empowered to remove or suspend, on reasonable cause, the said Advocates, Vakils or Attorneys-at-Law; and no person whatsoever but such Advocates, Vakils or Attorneys shall be allowed to act or plead for or on behalf of, any suitor in the said High Court."

Clause 37 makes it lawful for the High Court, from time to time, to make rules and orders for the purpose of regulating all proceedings in Civil Cases which may be brought before the said High Court; and in doing so, is to be guided, as far as possible, by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure; Clause 44 makes all the provisions of the Letters Patent subject to the powers of the Indian Legislature which is empowered to amend and alter them.

On the 5th July 1866, new rules were passed by the High Court relating to Advocates, Vakils and Attorneys and by the 5th of those rules, Vakils admitted under the rules of 1st October 1853 may appear, plead and act and Attorneys may appear and act for the suitors in all matters over which the Court has any jurisdiction. It is clear and it is not contested that by that rule, the High Court definitely purported to give a right of audience to Vakils on the Original Side of the High Court, and the right conferred by that rule was no less explicit and no more restricted than the right conveyed by the Rules of 1902, now in force.

In this state of things, in 1875, the matter was brought before the Full Bench of four Judges, Sir W. Morgan, C. J., Innes, Kerran and Kindersley, J.J., on a petition by the Attorneys to have it declared that Rule 5 of 1866 was ultra vires and that the Court has no power to authorise Vakils to appear on the final hearing of a case on the Original Side. A good many arguments ab inconvenienti were addressed to that Court with which, however relevant they might be on the hearing of a petition (though, as a matter of fact, the Court decided that they were not relevant), I clearly have no concern. The legal arguments were much the same as those addressed to me and I may say at once that, whatever my own view might be, I must clearly hold myself bound by that Full Bench decision, and I am of opinion that that decision precludes me finally from holding that so much of Rule 533 of 1902 as gives a right of audience to Vakils on the Original Side is ultra vires the Letters Patent. For the sake of clearness, I will just re-state what the chief contention was. It was based on section 9 of 24 and 25 Vict., Ch. 104, which, in its concluding words, says:—"The High Court to be established in each Presidency shall have and exercise all jurisdiction and every power and authority vested in any of the Courts in the same Presidency abolished under this Act at the time of the abolition of the last mentioned Courts. The argument is that there has been vested in the High Court only such power regulating the admission of the various classes of legal practitioners as were vested in the abolished Courts, and that those powers did not include the power to extend or contract the right of audience theretofore existing, but only to determine what qualifications should enable a person to be an Advocate or a Vakil, as the case might be. The High Court can say, for instance, that a person with a degree of Master of Laws of an Indian University should be entitled to be enrolled as an Advocate or that a person with a degree of Bachelor of Laws should be entitled to be enrolled as a Vakil; but it had no power to extend the functions and the right of audience of an Advocate or a Vakil beyond the powers enjoyed by the abolished Courts. This argument also involves the contention that if the rule was in accordance with the Letters Patent the Letters Patent were void and ultra vires, in so far as they exceeded the powers conferred by the Act, 24 and 25 Vict., Ch. 104, under which the Letters Patent purported to be promulgated. That contention was rejected by the Full Bench and I only wish to add this to what was said by the Full Bench, that the argument involves yet another step, which, to say the least of it, is one of difficulty. The reasoning is apparently this: the old Supreme Court had no power to give a right of audience to Vakils, though the old Sudder Court had and exercised the power to allow Advocates and Attorneys to appear before it as well as Vakils; when it is dealing with Original Jurisdiction, the High Court is the inheritor only of the powers of the old Supreme Court, and, as such, has no jurisdiction to give a right of audience to any practitioner to whom the old Supreme Court could not have given such a right; as the inheritor of the powers of the Sudder Court, it can give the right of audience to Vakils, but only in respect to the subject-matter with which the Sudder Court was concerned, namely, the Appellate Jurisdiction of the High Court which it took over from the Sudder Court. It is a very forcible argument and a very logical one and presents the view of the powers of the High Court in this matter which has clearly been adopted in Calcutta and Bombay. The difficulty of it is, as it seems to me, that it preserves and continues into the constitution of the High Court the cleavage between what I may call its Supreme Court functions and its Sudder Court functions, which is not only not warranted by 24 and 25 Vict., Ch. 104, but is expressly forbidden by section 8 of that Act. The answer made, and the only answer that can be made is, of course, that the Act only abolished the Sudder Court and the Supreme Court as such and that there is nothing obnoxious to the provisions of the Act in supposing a cleavage to persist between the two kinds of jurisdiction exercised by the High Court typified by the separation and distinct distribution of its work between the Original and the Appellate Sides. I have thought it right to state the contention of the parties, as I understand it, on this subject, though, as I have said, for me the matter is concluded by authority.

I now pass to another contention in which I clearly am not concluded by authority. I have already pointed out that Clause 44 of the Letters Patent expressly preserves the right of the Indian Legislature to vary and override the provisions of the Letters Patent. It is contended that Act XVIII of 1879 of the Indian Legislature, by necessary implication, takes away the right of audience of Vakils on the Original Side even if they be deemed to have it under the Letters Patent. If this contention as to the effect of the Act of 1879 is sound, it will do away with the authority of In the matter of the petition of Attorneys (2), because it is obvious that if the Indian Act can vary the Letters Patent themselves, it can a fortiori overrule the authority of any case purporting to put a particular construction on the Letters Patent. The Act is entitled "The Legal Practitioners Act of 1879." It did not, in its inception, apply to Madras but it was an adoptive Act and was extended to this Presidency, by adoption, by the Local Government in 1882. Section 4 of that Act provides that an "Advocate or Vakil on the roll of any High Court may practise in all the Courts subordinate to the Court on the roll of which he is entered or with the permission of the Court, in any High Court on whose roll he is not entered, provided that no such Vakil shall be entitled to practise under this section before a Judge of the High Court, Division Court or High Court exercising Original Jurisdiction in a Presidency town." It is argued that this, by implication, prevents a Vakil from appearing on the Original Side of a High Court. I think this argument is unsound, because the governing words of the section appear to me to be the words "under this section." At the time when this Act was passed, Vakils had no right of audience on the Original Side of the High Courts of Calcutta and Bombay and without the words, the section would authorise a Judge of the Bombay High Court to allow a Vakil enrolled at Calcutta to appear on the Original Side of the High Court of Bombay and thus enjoy a privilege denied to all Vakils enrolled in the Court of Bombay itself.

(2) 1 M. 24; 11 Mad. Jur. 92; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 15

A further argument was addressed to me on the construction of section 27 of the Act, which runs as follows:—The High Court shall, from time to time, fix and regulate the fees payable by any party in respect of the fees of his adversary's Advocate, Pleader, Vakil, Mukhtear or Attorney upon all proceedings (a) on the Appellate Side of such Court, (b) in the case of a High Court not established by Royal Charter, on its Original Side and (c) in Subordinate Courts. The argument is a subtle one and is to this effect; this section must be declaratory and exhaustively declaratory of the powers of the High Court to award fees of the nature of party and party costs, except in so far as there may be an express provision of the Letters Patent not directly in conflict with it. The Letters Patent contain a provision that the High Court shall regulate and make rules for the fees of Attorneys. There is nothing in that inconsistent with the power of the High Court to make provision for the fees of Attorneys on the Original Side, because that is a matter left untouched by the section which only deals with Attorneys' fees on the Appellate Side. But with regard to fees of Vakils, the Letters Patent are silent. Accordingly, the only jurisdiction that the High Court can have to make provision for the fees of Vakils as between party and party is contained in the Legal Practitioners Act, and section 27 expressly confines the High Court's power to make such regulations to the Appellate Side of the High Court. It is urged that if Vakils were to be supposed to have a right of audience on the Original Side, the absurd result will follow that the successful party cannot recover the fee he has paid to his Vakils, because the Court has no power to make any rule to fix what that fee may be. It is pointed out that Indian Courts have no inherent powers in these matters but only such as they derive from Statutes or from the Letters Patent issued under statutory authority. I am not called upon to decide whether there is power for a successful party to recover his Vakil's fees on the Original Side or not, and I do not propose to do so. The argument advanced is that the absurdity of supposing that the Legislature allowed a right of audience to exist without the right of recovering fees paid to the Vakil as party and party costs, is so great that the Legislature must be taken, by necessary implication, to have denied the right of audience on the Original Side to Vakils. I am bound by In the matter of the Petition of Attorneys (2) to hold that at the date of the passing of this Act, Vakils had, under the Charter and under valid rules of this Court, a right of audience on the Original Side. I cannot construe an Act passed after the privilege has been enjoyed for 16 years as taking it away, unless it says so in plain terms or by an absolutely necessary implication. A mere anomaly or inconvenience created per incuriam or by bad draftsmanship is not, in my opinion, enough. I am not, of course, deciding whether or no the suggested anomaly does exist. But even if it did, it would not, in my opinion, be sufficient to allow me to read into the Act a deprivation of the right of audience which is not clearly to be found in it. I, therefore, come to the conclusion that I must hold that Vakils have a right of audience on the Original Side of this Court.

It remains for me to decide whether Attorneys have such a right. My decision on the first point involves holding that the High Court is one and indivisible, that the old barriers between the Supreme Court and the Sudder Court are broken down and if an Advocate has the right of audience in one side of the High Court, he has necessarily on the other. I do not think that because the High Court is held to have the power to admit a practitioner to plead on both sides of the Court, it must necessarily, when it grants the right of audience on one side, be held to grant it, ipso facto, on the other. I have already said that I think it would be quite competent to this Court to follow the example of the High Courts of Bombay and Calcutta and exclude Vakils from practising on its Original Side. Conversely, it may well be that the High Court would have been within its powers in admitting Attorneys to plead on the Original Side as well as the Appellate Side. From the fact that it may exclude Vakils, I have held that it does not follow that it must. Similarly, from the fact that it may include Attorneys, it does not follow that it must. What it has done by rules is to give the right of audience, on the Original Side, to Vakils and withhold it from Attorneys. I am not prepared to hold that the one is not as much within its powers as the other.

I have been much assisted in this case by the extremely able and learned argument of Mr. M. K. Ramaswami Iyer, and I have to express my obligation also to Mr. Grant and Mr. C. P. Ramaswami Iyer for their equally able and learned arguments and especially for their readiness to assist the Court as amici curiæ. I hold, in the result, that I can hear Mr. Venkatasubba Rao for the plaintiff and that I am precluded from hearing Mr. M. K. Ramaswami Iyer for the defendant. The actual hearing of the suit has been postponed for a week in order to enable Mr. M. K. Ramaswami Iyer to instruct Counsel, which, in obedience to my decision, he has expressed his readiness to do until a higher Court decides otherwise.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL NO. 79 OF 1915.
April 14, 1916.

Present:—Sir Lancelot Sanderson, Kt.,
Chief Justice, Justice Sir John Woodroffe, Kt., and Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, Kt.
LALIT MOHUN NUNDY—DEFENDANT NO. 2

versus

HARIDAS MUKHERJEE—PLAINTIFF—
RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 76, 178—Certificates of shares, whether 'goods' or 'documents of title' to goods—Pleadings—Fraud, allegations of—Proof.

Certificates of shares are neither 'goods' nor 'documents of title' to goods within the meaning of section 178 of the Contract Act. [p. 711, col. 1; p. 714, col. 1.]

Sethna, R. D. v. National Bank of India, 8 Ind. Cas. 183; 12 Bom. L. R. 870, not followed.

When the plaintiff sets up a charge of fraud against the defendant, the nature and particulars of the fraud should be specifically stated and the fraud so alleged must be established beyond doubt. [p. 712, col. 1; p. 714, col. 2.]

The definition of 'goods' in section 76 of the Contract Act should not be extended to the term as used in section 178. [p. 711, col. 2; p. 714, col. 1.]

Appeal against the following decision of Mr. Justice Imam, sitting on the Original Side, dated the 14th June 1915:—

"The plaintiff in this suit sues the two defendants for the recovery of Rs. 2,500 lent and advanced to the first defendant Nikkamull Khetry on deposit of certain coal shares, for a declaration that the said shares are charged with the repayment of the debt, for recovery of the shares on the ground that they had been obtained by the 1st defendant from the plaintiff fraudulently, and for the sale of the said shares to satisfy the debt due to the plaintiff. The case of the plaintiff may be shortly stated here. On the 27th of March 1913 the plaintiff sold to the 1st defendant 200 Baraboni coal shares for a sum of Rs. 3,000 and as Nikkamull the 1st defendant was not able to pay the entire consideration money, he paid a sum of Rs. 500 by cheque on that date and pledged 100 Equitable Coal shares for the balance, namely Rs. 2,500. The plaintiff was assured that the sum of Rs. 2,500 would soon be paid to him and, therefore, he allowed that money to remain with the defendant No. 1 without any interest. On the 2nd April 1913 the defendant No. 1 represented to the plaintiff that he had negotiated the sale of the 100 Equitable Coal shares, that had been pledged, with the 2nd defendant Lalit Mohun Nundy, who was prepared to pay the consideration for all the shares to the defendant No. 1 and believing this assurance to be true, the plaintiff was induced to return the 100 Equitable Coal shares to Nikkamull defendant No. 1, on receiving from him a cheque for Rs. 2,500, the amount that was due to the plaintiff.

LALIT MOHUN NUNDY v. HARIDAS MUKHERJEE.

The plaintiff in his deposition in Court has stated that he was told that he would not have any occasion to present the cheque for encashment, inasmuch as the money would be paid to him that evening and he would then have to return the cheque to Nikkamull. The plaintiff to satisfy himself as regards the truth of the assurance approached Lalit Mohun Nundy and learnt from him that the transaction was as it had been stated by Nikkamull. The plaintiff accordingly returned the 100 Equitable shares and received the cheque. The payment of Rs. 2,500 was, however, not made in the evening and the plaintiff had the cheque presented to the Bank for encashment the next day, i. e., 3rd April 1913 and on its being dishonoured he instituted criminal proceedings against the 1st defendant. We are not concerned with the result of the criminal proceedings, as the same does not affect the considerations of this case. Nikkamull, on some allegations which it is not necessary to relate here, also instituted criminal proceedings against Lalit Mohun Nundy, the 2nd defendant. The result of those criminal proceedings also does not touch this case in this Court. The 1st defendant has not entered appearance and the suit has been contested by the 2nd defendant only. It is admitted that the 1st defendant on the 2nd April 1913 made over the 100 Equitable shares along with 1,100 other shares to the 2nd defendant and the latter's case is that he received the 1,200 shares in part satisfaction of debt due to him from the 1st defendant, and further the 2nd defendant states that at no time did he promise either Nikkamull or the plaintiff to pay to Nikkamull either the whole or any portion of the consideration for the 1,200 shares. His contention is that he received the 100 Equitable shares as well as the 1,100 shares in the course of a bona fide transaction and that he was not liable either to Nikkamull or to the plaintiff for payment in cash of any portion of the consideration of the 1,200 shares.

There are only two issues in this case that require to be considered. (1) Whether Nikkamull had pledged the 100 shares to the plaintiff, and (2) whether the plaintiff has any right, title, or interest to or in the shares in suit against the defendant Lalit Mohun Nundy. The suit, so far as the 1st defendant is concerned, has to be decreed ex parte. The first issue does not appear to me to have been seriously contested by the second defendant. He has offered no evidence to disprove the statement of the plaintiff as regards the pledge of the 100 Equitable shares and the production by the plaintiff of the original cheque for Rs. 2,500 is a strong corroborative evidence on his side to support his case. The 1st issue, therefore, has to be decided in favour of the plaintiff. The principal issue really is the second issue and on the evidence I am disposed to hold in favour of the plaintiff on that issue also. It is admitted by the defendant No. 2 that on the 2nd April the 100 Equitable shares in question came into his possession from the defendant No. 1. It is further admitted by him that he made no cash payment for the shares in question to the defendant No. 1. The question then is, whether Lalit Mohun Nundy received the shares in question on payment of any immediate consideration or in satisfaction of any existing debt or he received them in the manner alleged by the plaintiff. His case as further explained in his evidence is that out of the 1,200 shares 450 shares formed part of 2,750 shares that had been purchased for him by Nikkamull and 200 (of which 100 were the Equitable shares and 100 Baradhemu shares) were a part of the margin of 1,300 shares that had been left by Lalit Mohun Nundy with Nikkamull on the transaction of the purchase of 2,750 shares, and the remaining 550 shares out of the 1,200 were new shares that were handed over to Lalit Mohun Nundy by Nikkamull. Even on his own case Lalit Mohun Nundy shows that in exercise of some right the 100 shares in question had been kept by the defendant No. 1, and even if they belonged to Lalit Mohun Nundy they were subject to some liability, the exact nature of which has not been explained in this case. A letter dated 3rd March 1913 has been produced in this case and both parties in support of their respective contentions rely on the contents of that document. That document shows the purchase of 2,750 shares by Nikkamull for Lalit Mohun Nundy and the retention by him of 1,300 shares on account of margin, it being apprehended by him that there would be a difference between the market value of 2,750 shares and the price actually paid. So long as the value of 2,750 shares remained unsettled, there is no denying that Nikkamull was entitled to retain as margin the 1,300 shares. Lalit Mohun Nundy has produced a number of entries to show that a large sum was due to him from Nikkamull and that he was entitled to take the 1,300 shares in part satisfaction of the debt due to him, and the accounts seem to me to be so confused that it is impossible for me on the strength of them to declare that Lalit Mohun Nundy has succeeded in showing that anything was due to him from Nikkamull; it may be that he was entitled to receive something, big or small, from Nikkamull, but the evidence before me is not satisfactory enough to induce me to hold in Lalit Mohun Nundy's favour. But even if it be granted that money was due to Lalit Mohun Nundy from Nikkamull, a transfer by Nikkamull of property belonging to another in order to satisfy a debt could confer no title on the transferee, when the consideration for the transfer was not the payment of immediate cash but the mere satisfaction of an existing debt. It cannot be said that Lalit Mohun Nundy on account of the 100 shares parted with any money in favour of Nikkamull, what he did was that he had transactions with Nikkamull for a long time which resulted in a large balance in his favour and in order to satisfy the balance due to him he chose to accept from Nikkamull what was the property of a third person. In this view it seems to me that there was no transference of title though there was transference of physical possession. The plaintiff's case, however, is that Lalit Mohun Nundy had knowledge of the circumstances under which he the plaintiff parted with 100 shares in favour of Nikkamull. On this point the contentions of the parties are supported by their respective statements without corroboration from any witnesses, and I am left to decide the question on the credence that I can give to the evidence of one party or the other. I give preference to the statement of the plaintiff as his manner in the witness-box impressed me more favourably than that of Lalit Mohun Nundy, but apart from this, it seems to me that the probabilities of the case lie equally with the plaintiff. On the 27th March he certainly did not consider Nikkamull worthy of so much confidence as to have been allowed to retain the plaintiff's Rs. 2,500 on a mere verbal assurance to pay the same and the plaintiff had as security for his debt the 100 Equitable shares from him. Nothing happened during the 27th March and the 2nd April to alter the state of mind of the plaintiff and to engender in him any greater confidence in Nikkamull than he had on the 27th of March. On the 2nd April the plaintiff parted with the pledged shares in favour of Nikkamull on receiving from him a cheque for Rs. 2,500 with no certainty as to its encashment. There is no doubt on the evidence that the plaintiff was assured that Nikkamull was negotiating with Lalit Mohun Nundy for the sale of some shares including the 100 shares in question, and as the parties transact their business in the same neighbourhood and have frequent opportunities of meeting each other, the plaintiff must have ascertained from Lalit Mohun Nundy as to the negotiations that Nikkamull was having with him. To part with the pledged shares on receipt of a mere cheque without any certainty of its encashment would have been an act of indiscretion on the part of the plaintiff, which I do not believe he committed. It has been pointed out on behalf of Lalit Mohun Nundy that the case made by the plaintiff in this Court was not that that he had any talk with Lalit Mohun Nundy as regards the negotiations of Nikkamull with him, but that the plaintiff was merely informed that Nikkamull in collusion with another had defrauded people of their shares by giving a number of cheques without having credit at the Bank for their encashment. The passage on which this argument is based deals with not merely the case of fraud practised on the plaintiff but also of frauds alleged to have been committed on others by Nikkamull. As regards the others the plaintiff could not but say that he had informations. As regards his not mentioning the name of Lalit Mohun Nundy initially in the proceedings in this Court, the explanation has been given that the plaintiff had been advised by his Pleader not to start a case against Lalit Mohun Nundy. I am not concerned with the wisdom of the advice, but I believe the advice was so given, and I accept the statement of the plaintiff on this point. The result is that this suit is decreed not only against the defendant No. 1 but against the defendant No. 2 also. The plaintiff will get costs of this suit on scale No. 2 from the defendant No. 2 and on scale No. 1 from the defendant No. 1. The plaintiff will also get reserved costs, if any. I declare that the shares in question are charged with the payment of Rs. 2,500. The plaintiff is entitled to interest on Rs. 2,500 at 6 per cent. from the date of the decree from the defendant No. 1 only. The shares will be sold by the Registrar and the proceeds applied towards the payment of Rs. 2,500, interest and costs, and the balance, if any, will be made over to Lalit Mohun Nundy. If the sale-proceeds are not sufficient to satisfy the decretal amount for the balance, the plaintiff will have a personal decree against the defendant No. 1."

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—In this case the action was brought by the plaintiff claiming the sum of Rs. 2,500 and interest, and also for a declaration that the shares, which have been called in this case the "Equitable" shares, should be charged with the repayment of the said sum of Rs. 2,500 and also for the recovery of the said shares. The action was brought against Nikkamull Khetry the 1st defendant who did not appear, and, therefore, the case proceeded, so far as he was concerned, ex parte. The other defendant was Lalit Mohun Nundy, and he is the defendant who has appealed against the decision of the learned Judge.

The learned Judge has directed that as far as this defendant (the 2nd defendant) is concerned, the shares in question are charged with the repayment of Rs. 2,500.

It is to be noticed in the first instance that the claim put forward by the plaintiff was that he had but advanced the said sum of Rs. 2,500 to Nikkamull Khetry on the 27th of March 1913. It turns out upon the evidence being given that he had not lent or advanced Rs. 2,500 in the ordinary sense of the words, but had sold 200 Baraboni shares to Nikkamull at Rs. 15 per share amounting to Rs. 3,000, and Nikkamull had given him a cheque for Rs. 500 which had been cashed, and, therefore, there remained a balance of the purchase-money, Rs. 2,500 owing by Nikkamull to the plaintiff. In respect of that Nikkamull deposited with the plaintiff this certificate in respect of the 100 Equitable shares. The certificate is in the ordinary form, whereby it is certified that Mr. L. Rogers is "the registered proprietor of 100 of the above-mentioned ordinary shares" and so on. The certificate was signed by somebody, whose name I cannot read, on behalf of Macneill & Co., who are the managing agents, and then apparently it was transferred in the name of a man called Mr. Macnaghten, and then it was transferred in blank and signed by the Attorney of Mr. Macnaghten. This certificate and blank transfer were deposited by Nikkamull with the plaintiff on the 27th of March 1913 as security for the payment of the Rs. 2,500.

Now, it appears that the shares which were represented by this certificate had been deposited by the defendant Nundy with Nikkamull early in March. The learned Counsel for the respondent argued that there was nothing to show that the shares, the certificate for which the plaintiff held, were the same shares as those which had been deposited with Nikkamull by the defendant Nundy. I do not think that point was raised in the trial, and I think there was evidence given that they were the identical shares. As I have said, these shares were deposited with Nikkamull early in March as margin in respect of certain speculations which were going on between Nikkamull and Nundy; and, the letter of the 3rd of March shows the terms under which Nikkamull held these particular shares. They are: "In consideration that you (Nikkamull) hold in trust the undermentioned coal shares, with you on my (Lalit Mohun Nundy's) account, at the rates affixed thereto, I gave you and you received from me, some other coal shares as margin thereof at the rate of Rs. 25 per cent. of the value of those shares which are expressly stated below as such. You shall not be able to dispose of, to sell or to deliver to any one else except me any of these shares of mine, without my written instruction for the same." Then there is a provision in the end of the letter with reference to the margin being short, to which the learned Counsel has referred.

Now, those being the conditions under which Nikkamull held the shares, it is urged that even though he had no authority to deal with those shares, still the plaintiff obtained a good title to them, because he did not know anything about the limit of Nikkamull's authority; and, inasmuch as he took them without notice and bona fide he is protected by section 178 of the Indian Contract Act, and it has been urged that this certificate comes within the meaning of that section. Section 178 runs as follows, "A person who is in possession of any goods, or of any bill of lading, dock warrant, warehouse-keeper's certificate, wharfinger's certificate, or warrant or order for delivery, or any other document of title to goods, may make a valid pledge of such goods or documents: Provided that the pawnee acts in good faith, and under circumstances which are not such as to raise a reasonable presumption that the pawner is acting improperly: Provided also that such goods or documents have not been obtained from their lawful owner, or from any person in lawful custody of them, by means of an offence or fraud." Reading those words without reference to any authorities, I have no doubt in my mind that the word "goods" does not include such a certificate as that now before us: nor does it include, speaking more generally, shares. I think it is obvious from the phraseology of the section that it was intended to refer to "goods" in the ordinary meaning of the word. We know perfectly well what a bill of lading is,—it is a document of title to goods shipped on board of a vessel, what a dock-warrant is,—which is a document of title relating to goods which are lying in a dock, and so the other documents which are referred to in the section, such as a warehouse-keeper's certificate, wharfinger's certificate, warrant or order for delivery of goods—all documents of title to goods, which are perfectly well known not only in the legal world but also in the commercial world, and they cannot be extended by any stretch of language to such a document that is now before us. I, therefore, do not think that this certificate comes within the meaning of the word "goods." I am confirmed in that opinion by reference to the section (section 76) which defines the word "goods." In that section it means "Every kind of moveable property." But it is expressly provided in that section that that meaning shall only be applied to the word "goods" as far as that chapter is concerned, namely Chapter VII. If it had been intended that that extended meaning should be given to the word "goods" in Chapter IX in which section 178 occurs, I think that the Statute would have said so. Therefore, in my opinion section 178 does not apply to this case. What then is the position? We have the letter of the 3rd of March before us, in which it is distinctly stated that Nikkamull was not entitled to part with these shares without the express authority in writing of the other defendant Nundy. There was no evidence given to show that he had such authority. Therefore, the matter stands thus, that Nikkamull was holding these shares with no power to dispose of them and with no power to pledge them without express authority in writing. He did pledge them to the plaintiff, but he could not pass to the plaintiff any better title than he had himself.

At the time of the trial the shares had got back into the possession of the defendant Nundy. I do not understand how the plaintiff can make out any case against the defendant Nundy, unless he can prove a case of fraud against him. If he could have satisfied the Court that Nundy had been a party to a subterfuge or any fraudulent transaction by means of which either by himself or together with Nikkamull he had deprived the plaintiff of the special property which he had in the certificate as pledge, then two things would have resulted: It would have been right to infer, first of all, that Nundy had authorized Nikkamull to pledge the certificate, or, at all events, that he knew of the pledging of the certificate, and secondly, that he had been a party to the fraud by means of which the plaintiff was deprived of the pledge. But, in my opinion, the plaintiff has not succeeded in proving that there was any fraud on the part of Nundy by means of which the plaintiff was deprived of the possession of the certificate—I am not going into the evidence, which was referred to in detail in the course of the argument, because the matter was discussed fully, while the learned Counsel was arguing. But I should like to point out first of all that the plaint does not make any such charge of fraud as is now attempted to be made against Nundy, viz, that he, Nundy, fraudulently represented that he had undertaken to purchase the shares from Nikkamull and that he would provide the money in the evening. It is quite true that in the pleadings the plaintiff alleged that Nundy and Nikkamull have acted in collusion with regard to certain Police proceedings for the purpose of getting the shares out of the custody of the Police Court, and it is quite true that he also stated that the defendant Nundy was aware of the fraud which the plaintiff alleged Nikkamull had perpetrated upon him, but he did not suggest in his pleadings that it was by reason of fraudulent representation on the part of Nundy that the plaintiff was induced to part with those shares. In my opinion, it is necessary, when the plaintiff is going to set up a charge of fraud against the defendant, to state in the plaint, clearly and specifically what the fraud consists of, the nature of the fraud, and the particulars thereof, which he says has been committed, and, when he has pleaded that, it should be shown by strict proof that such fraud has in fact been committed. In this case not only did he not set up the fraud which is now alleged, but no sufficient evidence was given at the trial to support the allegation now made.

For this reason I think the learned Judge's judgment cannot be supported. He has not found a charge of fraud against the defendant Nundy, but has dealt with this matter, looking at the case from the point of view of title, and his judgment cannot be upheld.

Therefore, this appeal is allowed with costs and the suit as against the appellant-defendant Lalit Mohun Nundy dismissed with costs.

WOODROFFE, J.—The learned Judge has not, I think, dealt with this case from the right point of view.

For the purpose of this judgment I will assume that there was a debt owing by Nikkamull Khetry to the plaintiff, that that debt was secured by a pledge of the shares in question, that by fraud Nikkamull Khetry got back the shares without paying the debt and that he subsequently made them over to the defendant Lalit Mohun Nundy. Now, if, as the plaintiff alleges, Lalit Mohun Nundy was a party to the fraud set up, then the plaintiff would succeed. The learned Judge has not found this; and the fraud which is by no means clearly set forth has not been made out.

We must proceed then on the assumption that the fraud is not proved, and we have to determine who is entitled to these shares as between the plaintiff and defendant Nundy who, on the hypothesis I have stated, is assumed to be an honest holder of them.

The first question which is raised is whether section 178 of the Contract Act applies to the case. I am not prepared without further consideration to say that it does. The learned Judge who expressed his opinion in Sethna, R. D. v. National Bank of India (1) did not himself do so without doubt. But it is unnecessary for me to determine this question, because assuming for the sake of argument that section 178 does apply, that section makes no difference to the findings at which I have arrived; for, if that section be applied to the plaintiff, it must equally be applicable to the case of Nundy defendant. We have then this case. The shares clearly belonged originally to the defendant Nundy and were made over by him to Nikkamull Khetry as security for margin of shares carried by him on the express terms that he, Nikkamull Khetry, would not make them over to a third person. Notwithstanding, and I will assume in fraud of Nundy, Khetry pledged them on his own account to the plaintiff. Let me assume that the plaintiff having no knowledge of the true facts took a valid pledge of the shares. Then Nikkamull Khetry, we will assume, in fraud of the plaintiff got back the shares without paying his debts and made them over to their lawful owner. Defendant

LALIT MOHUN NUNDY v. HARIDAS MUKHERJEE.

Nundy took them without notice of anything which had previously happened. It is conceded that if Nandy had got them back, on payment of cash his title would have prevailed against the plaintiff. But it is said that it does not because Nundy, it is alleged, did not pay cash, but took them in payment of an antecedent debt due by Khetry to him on general account. It is not clear what the transaction was, but it is certain, whatever it was, that Nundy was getting back his own property. He was not, as the learned Judge has found, accepting property of a third person.

Mr. Sen says that Nundy was not entitled to get the property back except in terms of the letter Exhibit (1A). But assuming that he did not receive it in accordance with such terms, that is no affair of the plaintiff, but a matter between the defendants. It was open to Nikkamull to release the shares to their owner in any way he liked provided that the transaction was not, as I assume, fraudulent. The result is that whether the plaintiff had a valid pledge or not, the shares are now in the possession of their original rightful owner unaffected by notice of any fraud and he is entitled to retain the shares against the plaintiff. The relief, to which the plaintiff is in such circumstances entitled, is against the defendant Nikkamull Khetry who is said to have defrauded him. He had got this relief in the decree which the learned Judge has made. The suit against the second defendant should, in my opinion, be dismissed.

As for the argument that the evidence discloses a guarantee by the second defendant that the cheque would be honoured, that case was not made in the plaint or in the issues. There was no necessity in such a case to plead fraud. The case would have been a simple one of the receipt of a cheque in payment of a debt on the guarantee of a third party that he would be responsible if the cheque was not honoured.

Moreover as Mr. Sircar argued this story is quite inconsistent with what happened in the Police Court proceedings in which a charge of fraud was made against defendant Nikkamull, in which no such charge was preferred against defendant Lalit Mohun Nundy. If, as Mr. Sircar pointed out, the evidence given by the plaintiff be true then it would go to exculpate the first defendant who said, "what shall I do, Lalit Mohun Nundy did not pay me any money", when the plaintiff made a complaint to him that his cheque has been dishonoured. On the contrary if the evidence is true that Nundy was present, then a case might have been put forward (with what success I need not consider) against him.

The appeal, in my opinion, succeeds and should be decreed with costs. The suit as against the appealing defendant should be dismissed with costs.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I agree that this appeal must be allowed, notwithstanding the earnest endeavour made by Mr. Sen to support the decree which has been made in favour of the respondent by Mr. Justice Imam.

The cardinal question in controversy is, whether the plaintiff-respondent has acquired a valid lien on the shares in dispute. These shares were owned by the appellant Lalit Mohun Nundy, who on the 3rd March 1912 deposited them with Nikkamull Khetry as margin in connection with certain speculative transactions. The terms of the agreement of deposit are before the Court; and show conclusively that the bailee had no authority to deal with the shares. It is stated expressly that "the bailee will not be able to dispose of, to sell or to deliver to any one else, except the bailor, any of these shares without any written instruction for the same." Notwithstanding this clear instruction, the bailee dealt with the shares and pledged them with the plaintiff as security for a loan. Prima facie, the plaintiff did not acquire a valid title to the shares on the basis of this transaction, for the pledger could not confer on the plaintiff a title better than what he himself possessed. The plaintiff is consequently driven to rely on section 178 of the Indian Contract Act, which deals with cases of pledge by possessors of goods or documentary titles to goods, and lays down that a person who is in possession of any goods or documents of title to goods, may make a valid pledge of such goods or documents, provided that the pawnee acts in good faith and under circumstances which are not such as to raise a reasonable presumption that the pawner is acting improperly. This section cannot avail the respondent.

LALIT MOHUN NUNDY v. HARIDAS MUKHERJEE.

ent, unless he is able to establish that the documents, which are certificates of shares, were either goods or documents of title to goods. It has not been and cannot be contended that they were documents of title to goods; but, on the authority of the decision of the Bombay High Court in Sethna, R. D. v. National Bank of India (1), the argument has been advanced that these certificates were goods within the meaning of section 178 of the Indian Contract Act. I am not prepared to accept this contention as well founded. Reference was made to the very comprehensive definition of the term 'goods' given in section 76 of the Indian Contract Act, which lays down that in Chapter VII the word 'goods' means and includes every kind of moveable property. As section 178 is in Chapter IX, it would plainly be not right to extend the definition given in section 76 to the term 'goods' as used in sections not comprised in Chapter VII. If the Legislature had intended that the definition given in section 76 should have a wider application, we would have expected to find it in section 2, which is the interpretation clause of the Statute. Our attention has also been drawn to section 103, the provisions whereof are similar to those of section 178. But this is of no assistance to the respondent, because, section 108 finds a place in Chapter VII whereas section 178 finds a place in Chapter IX. Notwithstanding the decision of the Bombay High Court, I must consequently hold that the documents now before us are not 'goods' within the meaning of section 178.

If then section 178 does not apply, as I hold it does not, what is the position of the plaintiff? The defendant, at the time of the institution of the suit, was in possession of the disputed shares. What had happened was that Nikkamull had obtained the shares from the plaintiff in return for a cheque which was later on dishonoured. The shares were subsequently made over by Nikkamull to the defendant Nundy, the rightful owner, who is thus now in possession of the shares. Can the shares be pursued in his hand by the plaintiff? The answer must be in the negative. The plaintiff might have a remedy against the appellant if he could establish that the latter obtained possession of the shares by means of fraud. But no fraud was specifically charged as against him in the plaint, though fraud was charged against Nikkamull Khetry. In these circumstances, the elementary rule applies that fraud must be specifically alleged in the plaint in order that the plaintiff may succeed on the strength thereof against the defendant and the fraud so specifically alleged must be established beyond doubt. The appellant cannot properly be charged with fraud at this stage of the proceedings. But even if we concede for a moment that the plaintiff-respondent is entitled to succeed on the ground of fraud now brought against the appellant, what is the position? What is the fraud now charged? As I read his deposition, the allegation is that on the 2nd April the appellant made a false representation to the respondent that he had agreed to purchase shares for cash and would pay in the evening, fraudulently implying thereby that if, in the circumstances, the plaintiff accepted a cheque from Nikkamull Khetry, that cheque would be honoured. The statement made by the plaintiff, however, in his deposition does not bear out this allegation of fraud, and it must be considerably amplified and supplemented in order that this case may be supported. But the respondent is in a position of further embarrassment, if we remember that this specific case of fraud was not put to the appellant when he went into the witness-box. The substance of the matter then is that there was no specific charge of fraud against the appellant in the plaint, the fraud which is now alleged is not established by the deposition of the plaintiff, and was never put to the defendant when he was cross-examined. In these circumstances, it would clearly be wrong to allow the plaintiff to succeed against the appellant on the ground of fraud.

I agree that this appeal must be allowed and the suit as against the appellant dismissed with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Ram Bhandhu v. Kusu Bhattu, 5 C. L. R. 481, explained.

The rightful owner sued a trespasser for possession of a tract of land, which lay on a river-side, was exposed to the risk of temporary flooding, was covered with jungle, and was unhealthy and malarious. It could only be utilized for the purpose of grazing animals or for collection of forest produce. It contained heights as well as hollows, and when rain fell it settled in the hollows. When the river rose high portions of the land remained under water. During the rainy season people abandoned it and it could not be utilized; but it was not established that the land had ever during the period of the trespasser's possession been actually submerged under water or was permitted to remain derelict. The trespasser simply waited for the water to subside before he resumed his acts of ownership.

Held, that under the above circumstances the rightful owner could not be presumed to have been in constructive possession of the tract of land every rainy season when some portions of it were covered with water. [p. 724, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Tahsil Biswan, dated the 21st August 1913.

Babu Sita Ram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mohammad Nasim, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the suit against the decree in which the present appeal is preferred are as follows:—

The river Kauriala forms the western boundary of the Bahraich District and separates that district from the districts of Kheri, Sitapur and Bara Banki. At the junction of the Bahraich, Kheri and Sitapur districts at a place called Kataighat the river's name is changed to that of the Ghagra: it is generally known by the latter designation. Towards the north-west of the Bahraich District, as shown in the map of the Gazetteer, Volume 45 of the District Gazetteers of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh published in 1903, will be found the village of Chahlua which lies in a bend of the Kauriala. East of Chahlua lies the village of Barkharia and east of Barkharia is the village Sujauli. The Kauriala at this point takes a course from west to east and at Sujauli diverges due south. On the other side of the river in the Kheri District is the village known as Grant Gularia, which is bounded on the north by the river Kauriala. It is necessary to make it clear that there are three villages on the other side of the river from Grant Gularia. Barkharia is not the only village on the other side. The river Kauriala like other rivers in this portion of Oudh scours its banks, and causes a loss by erosion, which sometimes is and sometimes is not thrown up on the opposite side. It does not follow, because a village on one side of the river loses a quantity of land, that a village in the immediate vicinity will receive an accretion equivalent in extent to the amount eroded. What one village loses by diluvion may be gained by another village lower down through alluvion, or that land may be lost entirely under water, HEARSEY v. KARAM SINGU.

There may be an increase by alluvion from soil brought from the upper reaches of the river in the Bhabar and Tarai of the Nepal State. There may be losses by diluvion which will never be found to have accreted by alluvion anywhere within a discoverable distance. This is clear from pages 4 and 5 of the Bahraich Gazetteer and can be traced from an examination of the documentary evidence upon the record of this case. The river Kauriala is also liable to change its course. The result is, that considerable changes take place in the areas of the villages on both sides of the stream, these changes being caused sometimes by alluvial and diluvial action on the part of the river and sometimes by a change of the course. The river may in one year move from the old main channel to a new channel half a mile distant. Thus there can be no assumption, when a change is made in the area of a village adjoining the river, that it has been caused either by alluvial and diluvial action, or by shifting of the main channel, or by both. In each case the reason for the change can only be discovered by a careful examination of the facts.

Grant Gularia was conferred by the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces and Chief Commissioner of Oudh with effect from 24th December 1876 on Captain Andrew Hearsey. The grant was contained in a sanad dated the 28th March 1879 (Exhibit 2). Captain Andrew Hearsey died and was succeeded eventually by Lionel Hearsey, who is now represented by J. B. Hearsey, the plaintiff-appellant before the Court.

Mr. Hearsey's case, as set forth in the plaint, is that the Kauriala suddenly changed its course in the years 1892 and 1894 and took a broad sweep to the south, and that by so doing it left to the north some 850 acres of land belonging to Grant Gularia. The plaintiff thus avers that from the year 1892 onwards the Kauriala cut off 850 acres of land belonging to the grant towards the north from the remainder of the grant in the south. He continues that, in spite of this severance, his predecessor-in-title retained possession over the tract in question. It is further asserted that in 1905 an officer in the Government Survey Department, by name

Captain Coldstream, demarcated a boundary north of the river as the boundary between Grant Gularia and Barkharia and that he indicated this boundary by placing pillars thereon and by digging a ditch, that in 1906 Mr. Lionel Hearsey applied to the Deputy Commissioner of Kheri to have the map of Grant Gularia corrected, but that Mr. Fremantle, the Deputy Commissioner, refused to take action. He further averred that on 23rd March 1907 he himself as representative of Mr. Lionel Hearsey was opposed, while in possession of the tract in question, by the servants of the defendant who is the proprietor of Barkharia, that a serious riot took place, and that after this riot proceedings were taken in Bahraich under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which terminated in an order by which not he but the defendant was declared to be in possession of that tract. That order is dated the 31st December 1907. It was passed by a Deputy Magistrate to whom the District Magistrate had transferred the proceedings. In paragraph 8 of the plaint the tract in question is described as a tract locally known by the name of Jhakua Gaurhi. The name has some importance, as will be shown later. The plaint concludes by asking for possession of the tract called Jhakua Gaurhi and for mesne profits. The suit was filed at the beginning of 1911. At that time Mr. Hearsey's estate was under the management of the Court of Wards who filed the plaint on his behalf.

The defendant replied that the whole of the tract of Jhakua Gaurhi was owned by him. It is not clear from his written statement whether he avers that only a portion of it had accreted to Barkharia by alluvion or that the whole had accreted to Barkharia in that manner. He suggests in paragraph 16 of his written reply, that at least a portion had so accreted. His case was that in any circumstances the dhardhura custom prevailed in Barkharia and Grant Gularia, that according to that custom the midstream of the main channel marks the boundary, and that thus he is entitled to any land lying north of the river. He also set up possession, but he further contested the plaintiff's suit on the point that the plaintiff was suing for possession of immoveable property which on his own showing had formerly been in the possession of his predecessor-in-title and from which his predecessor-in-title had been dispossessed. The defendant set up that the plaintiff had not been in possession within a period of twelve years from the date of the institution of the suit, and he pleaded that the suit of the plaintiff was, therefore, time-barred under the provisions of Article 142, Schedule I, Act IX of 1908.

The case was filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kheri. It took a considerable time to decide and during the course of proceedings the presiding officer changed three times. The hearing of the suit commenced before Mr. A. G. Shirreff, I. C. S. It continued before Mr. G. C. Badhwar, I. C. S., and was concluded by Mr. Ram Prasad who decided it on 21st August 1913. A large number of issues were framed. Only two issues were decided. The first issue decided runs, "Whether the river Kauriala suddenly changed its course in the years 1892 and 1894 towards the south, and whether the land referred to in paragraph 4 of the plaint was cut off, as alleged by the plaintiff?" The learned Subordinate Judge decided that the land in suit was cut off by the sudden action of the river between 1892 and 1897. The second issue decided runs, "Whether the plaintiff was the owner of the land so cut off and whether the plaintiff continued to be in possession of this land after the change in the course of the river?" This issue was found against the plaintiff. The learned Subordinate Judge apparently meant that the plaintiff had title to the land so cut off at the time that it was cut off but that he had failed to prove possession within twelve years preceding the date of the suit. He dismissed the suit without deciding the remaining issues. The present appeal was preferred. The appeal was filed by the Court of Wards on behalf of Mr. J. B. Hearsey. Since the institution of the appeal the Court of Wards has relinquished charge of the estate. Mr. Hearsey is now the appellant on his own behalf.

It has been noted above that the land in dispute is known locally as Jhakua Gaurhi. The word "gaurhi" has been interpreted to us by the learned Counsel for the appellant as meaning an enclosure used for the tethering of cattle. It is said to have the following local meaning in the part of Oudh in which the land in suit is situated. In the north-western portion of the Bahraich district and the adjoining part of Kheri there is little cultivation and much tamarisk jungle and grazing ground. Certain graziers (Ahirs or others) take over tracts of such grazing ground and construct thereon enclosures which are fenced by thorn hedges or palisades. Such enclosures are called gaurhis. Large numbers of cattle are brought to the grazing grounds during the day-time. They graze over the tracts outside the gaurhi and at night are driven within the enclosure to protect them from attacks of wild animals and to prevent straying. In the morning they are driven out again to the grazing grounds. It appears to be a practice for certain individuals to construct these gaurhis at their own expense, taking permission from the proprietor of the village. The man who has made the gaurhi then takes in other people's cattle and charges fees for grazing them. The word "Jhakua" is the name of a sub-caste of Ahirs and "Jhakua Gaurhi" would mean the gaurhi founded by the Jhakua. Many other gaurhis are referred to by the witnesses as being in the neighbourhood. We find by examining the record at random a Tiloki Gaurhi—apparently a gaurhi founded by a certain Tilok (page 151 of the printed record) and a more careful search will discover the names of others.

There is on the record the translation of an application made to the Deputy Commissioner of Kheri filed by Mr. Licnel Hearsey in the Bahraich Court in connection with the section 145 proceedings (Exhibit A 34). This application was filed on 17th June 1907. Here Mr. Hearsey refers to the land in question as Jhakua Gaurhi.

The first point for determination in this appeal is whether the learned Subordinate Judge rightly dismissed the suit as time-barred. According to the plaintiff's averments in paragraph 4 of the plaint, 350 acres of Grant Gularia were cut off by a change in the river channel in 1892 and in 1894, and another 500 acres were cut off by a further change in the channel. Thus according to his own showing his predecessor-in-title was separated from the whole of the area in dispute known as Jhakua Gaurhi at the latest in 1894. He has alleged that in spite of the fact that the main stream ran between Jhakua Gaurhi and the remainder of Grant Gularia, his predecessor-in-title nevertheless retained possession continuously from 1894 till the 31st December 1907. The learned Subordinate Judge has found on the facts that this statement is without foundation. His grounds for this decision are as follows:—

Reference has already been made to a serious riot which took place in 1907 on the disputed land between the present plaintiff and his servants on the one side and the servants of the defendant on the other side. In that case certain of the servants of the defendant were prosecuted in the Criminal Courts of the Bahraich district. The present plaintiff gave evidence in that case and copies of his depositions before the District Magistrate who committed the case for trial, and before the Sessions Judge who tried the case, are on the record. They are filed as Exhibits A 80, A 81, and A 79. Before the Sessions Judge (Exhibit A 79) the present plaintiff deposed, "I have been managing my father's grant in Gularia from 1905 to the present time..... In 1905 we got possession of some land which had been demarcated by Captain Coldstream. This is a piece of land north of the Kauriala Nadi and is the scene of the riot. I gave out contract for hides, grass, bazar, fishing in respect of this piece of land" (page 125 of the printed record). Later on he stated, "The land in question had by the action of the river gone out of our possession..... After Captain Coldstream had demarcated we took possession of the land. We paid the whole or part of the cost of the pillars. They were put up by Government" (page 129 of the printed record). He further stated (page 133), "There was a little cultivation at Jhakua Gaurhi in the area in dispute. After taking possession I collected rent for it. The rest is jhau and grass. I was not in possession till 1905." In Exhibit 81 he stated, "I have been managing the Gularia grant since 1898." Mr. Hearsey was called as a witness in the present case and was examined as P.W. No. 23. He commenced by stating that he had been managing Grant Gularia from 1905 to 1907, that he collected grazing dues, and gave the contract for grass and hides. In his examination-in-chief which consisted only of a few lines, he made no statement suggesting that his predecessor-in-title had been in possession between 1894 and 1905, but when he was cross-examined on the averment in the plaint to the effect that possession had never been lost between 1894 and 1905 and when his attention was drawn to his statement in the Sessions Court, he stated that if he had said in the Sessions Court that the land had gone out of his father's possession what he stated must have been correct. But he added, "The land had not gone out of our possession so far as I know." In the face of Mr. Hearsey's statement in the Sessions Court the insertion of the averment in the fourth paragraph of the plaint, "But the possession of Mr. Hearsey all along continued over the land thus cut off", appears extraordinary. It is even more extraordinary that the learned Counsel for the appellant has before us refused to give up the point that his client was in physical possession between 1894 and 1905. He refers us to the evidence of certain cultivators, herdsmen, and others who have been produced to depose that the Hearsey family as a matter of fact were in possession during that period. The learned Subordinate Judge has disbelieved the evidence of these witnesses and rightly disbelieved it. It is perfectly clear that the Hearsey family on the plaintiff's own showing had no sort of physical possession from 1894 till 1905.

It remains to be seen whether they had any physical possession afterwards.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has based his case to prove possession between 1894 and 1905 on three sets of circumstances. He urges in the first place that the placing of boundary pillars by

HEARSEY v. KARAM SINGH.

Captain Coldstream on the north of the disputed land is a physical act of ownership. He argues in the second place that the evidence that Mr. Hearsey collected grazing dues, dues for the rights of fishing and for the collection of tamarisk which the learned Subordinate Judge disbelieved, ought to have been believed. He argues in the third place that the evidence in connection with the riot shows that Mr. Hearsey was in possession at the time that the riot took place.

We take up these three points separately.

It is first to be noted that there is very little evidence beyond the evidence of Mr. Hearsey that any boundary pillars were ever placed on the disputed land by Captain Coldstream. Captain Coldstream was not called as a witness. It is not proved that at the time that the suit was instituted in 1911 Captain Coldstream was not available as a witness and it is difficult to understand why the Court of Wards, who were conducting the appellant's case, should have failed to call this important witness if they intended to rely on the incident of the boundary pillars. This much may be said that the Commissioner's report shows that there are boundary pillars on the north of the disputed land, and that reference is made to these boundary pillars as having been erected under Captain Coldstream's orders in the proceedings of Mr. Fremantle (Exhibits A 31 and A 32). Mr. Fremantle, it is to be noted, observes in those proceedings that if Captain Coldstream laid down such a boundary he did so without any authority from any one. The evidence upon the point is, however, far from clear and is in the main confined to the statement of the plaintiff himself. It is not plain in what capacity Captain Coldstream who, we understand, is an officer employed in the Government Trigonometrical Survey, came to these parts, and why he was deputed to make a survey in the neighbourhood. It is perfectly clear that if Captain Coldstream erected these pillars on his own initiative and not as an agent or on behalf of the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title, and if he acted as a Government official either with or without authority, and not on behalf of the Hearsey family, the laying down of this boundary cannot be considered as an act asserting the ownership of Mr. Lionel Hearsey. But, even if it be held that Captain Coldstream laid down this boundary as Mr. Hearsey's agent, can it be said that the erection of pillars on the extreme edge of a disputed area is an act of physical ownership? The learned Counsel for the appellant has referred us to a decision of the Calcutta High Court of 1878 in Ram Bhandhu v. Kusu Bhattu (1). At page 483, Garth, C. J., observes: "As long as reliable evidence of acts of ownership is forthcoming, there is no difference between the proof of possession in the case of jungle or uncultivated lands and that in the case of cultivated lands, and such proof is oftentimes forthcoming, as in the cutting down of trees, or grazing of cattle, or putting up boundary marks,...and the like." The statement therein contained is unassailable as a statement of law. But it does not cover the point. The putting up of boundary marks may be a very effective assertion of title. In the case of staking out a claim it would be a most effective assertion, but in a case such as this it does not indicate physical possession. At the highest the plaintiff's father went to a disputed tract and laid boundary marks outside it on its extreme edge. If such an act conveyed possession, it would be the simplest thing for a person asserting title to any tract of country, however enormous, to obtain the valuable factum of possession by indicating a line around the circumference, and the act in question palpably does not constitute an act of physical possession.

We now come to the next point. The assertion of the plaintiff is that he enjoyed the profits of Jhakua Gaurhi between 1905 and 1907 by collecting grazing dues, giving contracts for grass and hides as he stated in the present suit, and, as he stated before the Sessions Judge in Exhibit A 79, by collecting also bazar dues and farming and fishing rights. Various witnesses were called to support the collection of grazing dues and other dues. The evidence of these witnesses has been discussed in detail by the learned Subordinate Judge. He found their evidence unworthy of belief. We have been taken through the whole of the evidence produced by the plaintiff on this point. We agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the evidence is unworthy of belief. The documentary evidence, such as it is, does not convince us that the plaintiff or his predecessor-in-title ever collected anything in the village or exercised any act of physical ownership between the years 1905 and 1907.

HEARSEY v. KARAM SINGH.

The last point is with reference to the riot, and here the statement of the plaintiff himself made in the Sessions Court makes the point clear. It provides an additional reason for finding that the plaintiff never obtained possession over this disputed tract at any time. After Mr. Fremantle had refused to make a boundary in accordance with the line alleged to have been drawn by Captain Coldstream, and after Mr. Saunders the Commissioner had upheld Mr. Fremantle's order (Exhibit A 33), we find that a contract was given by the Hearsey family to a certain Mardan Singh of Sujauli to fish in a spill-channel of the Kauriala within the area in dispute. We find that the Hearsey family had failed to obtain possession over the disputed area and that the exercise of fishing rights by Mardan Singh was intended to supply the necessary ingredient of possession which was wanting. Mr. Hearsey's deposition before the Sessions Judge indicates clearly to us that Mardan Singh had not been permitted by the other side to fish in this water at all. In Exhibit A 79 at page 126 of the printed record we find Mr. Hearsey stating in one place that Mardan Singh's men had caught one fish and in other place that they had been unable to get into the water as it was too cold, and from this statement we find that although Mardan Singh attempted to fish in this water, his attempt to fish was repelled by a resistance which resulted in the death of one man and brought his assailants within the reach of the criminal law. Thus we find that he did not fish in the channel and that the attempt to take possession was frustrated. We have not before us the judgment of the Criminal Court that decided the case; it cannot be inferred that the Criminal Court decided that the defendant's servants were not in possession of the disputed area. Whatever the Criminal Court may have decided upon the subject it will be open to us to decide the point anew. But there is nothing to show that the Criminal Court ever decided the point. It is obvious that even if the defendant's servants had been exercising the right of private defence of property, they could have been criminally convicted for having exceeded that right by having caused the death of a man on the opposite side. We thus find that no physical acts of ownership were ever exercised by the plaintiff or his predecessor-in-title from the year 1894 up till the 31st December 1907, when he was found not to be in possession. It is admitted that no physical acts of ownership have been exercised between the 31st December 1907 and the date of the bringing of the suit.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has, however, urged that his client was in constructive possession of the land in dispute. His argument is that his client having proved his title and it being established on the evidence on the record that the land in dispute was covered with water at certain intervals, a presumption of constructive possession arises in his favour. He urges that, as soon as the water covered any portion of the disputed area, the title of his client revived. We must first arrive at some conclusions before we discuss this proposition. The title of the plaintiff to the disputed area has not, in our opinion, been established and could not be established until the remaining issues are decided, which the learned Subordinate Judge did not consider it necessary to decide. Thus if we found that owing to the nature of the land in dispute such a presumption as that set up would arise, we should further have to consider the question of the appellant's title. But as we find that the nature of the land in dispute would in no circumstances cause such a presumption to arise we can proceed to determine the point. The evidence on the record shows that this land is exposed to the risk of temporary flooding. It shows this characteristic with all other lands anywhere in the world, possibly with the exception of precipitous hill-sides. Even precipitous hill-sides can be covered temporarily by sheets of water. This land is covered with jungle, is unhealthy and malarious. It contains heights, it contains hollows, and when rain falls it settles in the hollows.

HEARSEY v. KARAM SINGH.

When the river is high portions of the soil must be under water. But, while it is established that during the rainy season people abandon Jhakua Gaurhi, it is not established that the land is ever permitted to remain derelict or that during the period in suit it has ever been submerged under water.

The law on the subject of revival of the title of the true owner in derelict land will be found first in a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in an appeal from the Supreme Court of New South Wales—Trustees, Executors and Agency Company, Limited v. Short, generally known as Trustees of Agency Company v. Short (2). In that case the holder of a good title was ousted from possession by a trespasser. Before that trespasser's title had ripened by prescription into an effective title he abandoned the land which became derelict and was in no person's physical possession.

The Court of New South Wales held that, once the Statute of Limitation began to run against the true owner it continued to run until he regained physical possession. Their Lordships of the Privy Council considered this a wrong exposition of the law on the subject and laid down that no presumption of ownership can be made for the benefit of a holder of an imperfect title. Thus a trespasser whose title has not become perfected by adverse possession cannot tack on to his period of possession the period during which the land has remained derelict. A presumption of ownership would exist in favour of the holder of a perfect title during the period that the land remained derelict. The distinction arises in cases in which no act of effective ownership is exercised or can be exercised over the land. In such a case if the last holder had obtained a perfect title a presumption of ownership is made in his favour, but if the last holder has only an imperfect title no presumption of ownership is made in his favour, and a subsequent trespasser cannot tack the period during which a prior trespasser was holding under a different trespass on to the period of his subsequent trespass as against the holder of the good title. This is all that their Lordships laid down in that decision. The most important portions are the passages at pages 798 and 799 commencing—"They are of opinion that if a person enters upon the land of another and holds possession for a time, and then, without having acquired title under the Statute, abandons possession, the rightful owner, on the abandonment, is in the same position in all respects as he was before the intrusion took place. There is no one against whom he can bring an action. He cannot make an entry upon himself. There is no positive enactment, nor is there any principle of law, which requires him to do any act, to issue any notice, or to perform any ceremony in order to rehabilitate himself. No new departure is necessary. The possession of the intruder, ineffectual for the purpose of transferring title, ceases upon its abandonment to be effectual for any purpose. It does not leave behind it any cloud on the title of the rightful owner, or any secret process at work for the possible benefit in time to come of some casual interloper or lucky vagrant," and the reference to the decision of Parke, B., in the case of Smith v. Lloyd (3)—"We are clearly of opinion that that Statute applies not to cases of want of actual possession by the plaintiff, but to cases where he has been out of and another in possession for the prescribed time. There must be both absence of possession by the person who has the right, and actual possession by another, whether adverse or not, to be protected, to bring the case within the Statute."

The doctrine was carried further in a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in an Indian case—Secretary of State for India v. Krishnamoni Gupta (4). The facts of that case were as follows:—The Government had held a portion of certain land continuously for more than twelve years. The land was alluvial land which had formerly been part of the plaintiffs' permanently settled estate but subsequently in 1854 after diluvion and reformation had been adjudged to be an accretion to Government land. The plaintiffs had taken from the Government ijaras of such land and accretions. The possession of the Government was held to be adverse to the plaintiffs during the period. They were, as ijaradars, estopped from denying the landlord's title, as the Government held this portion of the land continuously for more than twelve years, the plaintiffs' suit was held barred by limitation. But with regard to the remaining portion of the land the Government were held to have no title. This portion of the judgment should be given in their Lordships' own language—pages 534 and 535.

"As regards the northern portion of the disputed lands, other considerations apply. The Government have never had actual possession of the land through their ijaradars for a continuous period of twelve years, because the lands became submerged prior to the year 1869, and remained so (it is found by the High Court) until within ten years of the commencement of the suit. But it is urged on behalf of the Government that, having been in possession through their tenants when the lands became submerged, their possession must be deemed to have continued in law while the lands were under water and to have revived on their being re-formed, and reliance is placed on a case of Kally Churn Sahoo v. Secretary of State (5) decided by the High Court in 1881. For the purpose of trying the question whether limitation applies, the Government must be regarded as a trespasser and dispossession of the rightful owners, and in the opinion of their Lordships it would be contrary both to principle and authority to imply such constructive possession in favour of a wrong doer, so as to enable him to obtain thereby a title by limitation. In order to sustain a claim to land by limitation under the Indian Act, there must in their opinion be actual possession of a person claiming as of right by himself or by persons deriving title from him. The possession of the Government was in fact determined by the submergence of the land which then became derelict, and so long as it remained in that state, no title could be acquired against the true owner. Sir R. Garth, however, seems to have thought that in such a case the possession of the trespasser would continue, until the true owner resumed possession.

"Their Lordships cannot agree in this view. On the contrary, they think that on the dispossession of the Government by the vis major of the floods, the constructive possession of the land was (if anywhere) in the true owners. In the case of Trustees, Executors, and Agency Company, Limited v. Short (2), it was laid down by this Board, that 'if a person enters upon the land of another and holds possession for a time, and then without having acquired a title under the Statute abandons possession, the rightful owner on the abandonment is in the same position in all respects as he was before the intrusion took place.' And the opinion of Parke, B., is there quoted that there must be both absence of possession by the person who has the right and actual possession by another to bring the case within the Statute.

"Their Lordships think that for this purpose dispossession by vis major has the same effect as voluntary abandonment, and they are of opinion that the case of Kally Churn Sahoo v. Secretary of State (5) was wrongly decided and ought to be overruled."

The suit had been instituted in 1894. Thus it will be seen that the lands became submerged prior to the year 1869 and remained submerged until 1884, that is to say, the lands remained submerged for fifteen years.

The point came before the Judicial Commissioner in a case tried by him singly—Erijraj Singh v. Ganga Bakhsh Singh (6). The facts in that case were as follows:—Certain persons had title to some tank land. This land was in ordinary circumstances submerged. It emerged from time to time during thirty years and during that period was cultivated by trespassers. Here the land was usually under water completely submerged, and derelict. It emerged from the water on rare occasions. Mr. Lindsay decided that so long as the land was under water the title was with the rightful owners. At page 47* he says: "It is an axiom of the law relating to possession that where possession in fact is undetermined, possession in law follows the right to possess: in other words possession follows title. Applying this principle to the case before us it follows that while the land in suit was under water possession in law was with the plaintiffs whose title or right to possess is acknowledged. And if it is shown, as I think it has been, that the land was under water during twelve years before suit the presumption as to possession must be in favour of the plaintiffs. It was for the defendants to rebut that presumption and in my opinion they failed to do so. It was not sufficient for them to show that on isolated occasions when the land emerged they successfully asserted their physical possession. Being trespassers their possession would be recognised only for so long as they could successfully assert it. It cannot be presumed in their favour that their possession continued after submergence. No presumption of possession can be raised in favour of a trespasser. So once their actual possession ceased by reason of the lands going under water possession in law must have necessarily reverted to the rightful owner—that is the person who has the right to possess. I cannot agree with the learned Judge in holding that possession in law can remain in abeyance in a case of this nature. If possession is not with the trespasser it must be with the person who has the right to possess. The learned Judge remarks in the latter portion of his judgment that the real truth appears to be that the land was not in the actual possession of either party during these intervals, meaning I take it the intervals of submergence. That no doubt is true, but possession, that is, possession in law must during those periods be presumed to have been with the plaintiffs."

It is to be observed that in that case and in the case in Secretary of State v. Krishnamom Gupta (4), the land was derelict. It was absolutely abandoned for long periods and during those periods no one attempted to wait for its re-appearance and utilize it as soon as the water had subsided. Before the principle laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Secretary of State v. Krishnamoni Gupta (4), and followed by Mr. Lindsay in Brijraj Singh v. Ganga Bakhsh Singh (6), can be applied it is necessary to establish that the land has become absolutely derelict, abandoned, and incapable of use. To us it would appear that such a principle cannot be applied in a case like the present in which there has been no actual submergence in the proper sense of the term and no abandonment, and in which it has only been the case that the land has been flooded in parts by temporary floods which interfered for short periods with the use to which it could be put. As we have stated in more than one place the land in suit can only be utilized by the owner for the purpose of grazing animals, or for the collection of forest produce. It is clear that while the water was over the land it would be difficult to graze animals thereon or to collect jungle produce. The evidence goes to show that the land consists of heights and hollows, and although the hollows would be filled with water in the rainy season, and the low lying parts of the land would be liable to inundation by temporary floods, there is nothing to show that the land was ever abandoned or remained derelict during the period that the defendant has been in occupation of the same. In the rainy season the use would have been interfered with not only by the fact that the water was on the land but by the prevalence of malarial fever, and it would appear that when the land was unsuitable for occupation or when malarial fever was prevalent the graziers and herdsmen and collectors of forest produce discontinued their avocations, which they commenced to follow as soon as the water had subsided. Exactly the same interference with avocations would occur in any land, agricultural or non-agricultural, to a less or greater degree. Any heavy shower of rain will flood land to a certain extent and prevent its being utilized for some hours or for some days. But it would be impossible to our minds to lay down a doctrine that during such periods of temporary discontinuance the possession of the last owner ceases when he is simply waiting for the water to subside before he resumes his acts of ownership.

KEARSEY v. KARAM SINGH.

A different view to this was possibly taken in a single Judge case of the Allahabad High Court. Loknath v. Manorath Ram (7). There, however, Tudball, J., found that the land was submerged every year during the rains. He considered that the decision in Secretary of State v. Krishnamoni Gupta (4), laid down that during such submersion the title reverted to the true owner. In the present case we consider that there was not actual submersion, but we are not disposed to consider submersion the necessary factor. The requisite factor to our minds is the factor of abandonment, and the question to be asked is did the land remain or did it not remain derelict? If it remained derelict the possession during such period as found by their Lordships of the Privy Council undoubtedly is presumed to be with the true owner. But it is necessary to prove actual abandonment. It cannot possibly be said that the defendant in this case ever abandoned the land from the period that it passed into his possession. Thus we are unable to accept the view pressed upon us by the learned Counsel for the appellant that this suit is within time because his client must be presumed to have been in possession of the lands in dispute every rainy season when some portion of them was covered with water. It is also to be noted that their Lordships of the Privy Council in Secretary of State v. Krishnamoni Gupta (4), were dealing with an asserted title by adverse possession. Here the case is different. It is not for the defendant to establish his title by adverse possession. It is for the plaintiff to establish possession within twelve years. For the above reasons we find that the suit is barred under the law of limitation. In view of our decision on the question of limitation it is not really necessary to decide the remaining points raised in the suit. The learned Counsel for the respondent has, however, pressed upon us certain arguments as his client is anxious to show that his position in the case is not of a wrong doer who is taking advantage of the omission of the rightful owner to bring a suit within the period allowed by law but of a man with an honest title which he is rightly enforcing. The learned Subordinate Judge apparently found that the title was with the plaintiff. We say that he found this apparently as it is clear that he did not try out the question completely. His view would appear to be that the provisions of Bengal Regulation XI of 1825 had application, that the lands had not been gained by gradual accession from the recess of a river but had been left on the defendant's side of the main stream by a sudden change of the river-bed. Now it does not follow that the provisions of Regulation XI of 1825 would have any application. The defendant had asserted not only that the lands had been gained by gradual accession but also that the custom of dhardhura had application, that is to say that the mid channel of the deep stream wherever the deep stream might be, determined ownership in the village of Barkharra, and that even if the river had changed its course he was entitled to hold the land in suit as it was on his side of the river. The learned Subordinate Judge did not decide whether the custom dhardhura had or had not application and thus his finding on the question of title is necessarily imperfect. But apart from that fact we consider that his finding that the river had changed its course suddenly is not a correct conclusion from the evidence on the record. The old Settlement maps of Barkharra and Grant Gularia (Exhibits Nos. 3 and 17) which were prepared in the Settlement of 1867 prove clearly enough when compared with the Commissioner's map (Exhibit 1) that the river ran in 1867 not where it runs now but to the north. It may be taken that the main stream of the river is now very much further south than it was in 1837. But it does not follow from that fact that there has been a sudden change of the river-bed. The change may have been a gradual change. Land may have been silted up on the left bank towards the north gradually year by year and the river channel may have been forced in the same way gradually year by year towards the south. The river may have had at one period a very much wider channel and that channel may have become gradually narrowed by the accumulation of alluvial land towards the north. No inference can be drawn in favour of a conclusion that land has been cut off from Grant Gularia and thrown into Barkharra from the facts that the area of the former has diminished and the area of the latter has increased during the past thirty years. It is true that they are on opposite sides of the river, but it does not follow that land that was cut off from Grant Gularia has been thrown up on the opposite bank. It may well have been washed further south. It may have gone to increase the area of village Sujauli or of other villages or it may have disappeared. Similarly accretions to Barkharia need not necessarily have come from the village on the opposite side. They may have been formed from land washed from the north, that is to say from Nepal. It is impossible to make conjectures in a case of this kind. Clear proof is wanted, not guess-work, and the reasons which inclined the learned Subordinate Judge to the view which he took are based on guess-work and not on proof. He did not believe the plaintiff's evidence but he was ready to find in the plaintiff's favour on certain inferences that he drew from entries in the revenue papers and from facts proved as to the growth of trees which do not, in our opinion, justify the conclusions that were based upon them. He attached great weight to the observations made by his two predecessors who had visited the spot. Now these observations, valuable as they may have been as directing the attention of the officers who made them towards the salient points of the case, are of little or no value to persons other than the observers. For example, we find that Mr. Badhwar noted (vide pages 216, 217 of the printed record) that there was a large shisham tree on a portion of the land in dispute. The defendant told him on the spot that the tree had grown after the river had receded. The tree in question was a very old tree. The plaintiff said that the tree stood there in 1867. He also noted that certain other trees were standing and he considered that if the whole of the land was alluvial land there had not been time for the trees in question to grow. Then he says that the appearance of the land shows that it is flooded in the rains but that it has not been cut away by the action of the river, and he points out that he saw two depressions one of which was said to be the bed of the river in 1892 and the other the bed of the river in 1894. The learned Counsel for the appellant has laid great stress on the remarks of Mr. Badhwar. Now it is perfectly clear that these remarks in themselves cannot be considered as evidence. We find for example with regard to the tree that Mr. Badhwar saw that that tree stood north of the northern boundary of the land claimed. The value of Mr. Badhwar's observations as to flooding in the rains can certainly not be great as he made his inspection in the middle of the cold weather, and there is nothing to show that he had any expert knowledge which would enable him to decide from the appearance of the land whether it was flooded in the rains, or whether it was or was not land formed by the action of the river. His remarks as to the alleged old river-beds of course are not intended to show that he was able to locate the site of the old river bed. But in any circumstances remarks of this kind can only be valuable if they are contained in sworn evidence which has been subjected to cross-examination. The main reason why the learned Subordinate Judge found that there had been a sudden change in the river channel was because there were certain trees found on the land in dispute which certain forest officers deposed to be of varying ages. The argument is this. If such old trees stood on the land the land must have been unaffected by the river for many years. The trees could not have risen to that height if there had been a gradual alluvial action. The land on which those trees stand must have been in the same condition for twenty, thirty, or a larger number of years, and in those circumstances it must be held that there has been a sudden change in the river-channel. This argument does not exhaust all the possibilities of the situation.

(7) 18 Ind. Cas. 618; 11 A. L. J. 68.

HEARSEY v. KARIM SINGH.

From the evidence of Mr. Latifullah Khan, the Commissioner, who surveyed the area in question and prepared the map, Exhibit 1, and submitted the report, Exhibit X 3, it appears that the land is of varying heights. It is true that in his report he says: "There is no old and high land here. The entire land is new and low." But in his deposition he refers to the traces of channels. He says he found some three large channels. He did not take any levels, but from his evidence it is clear that the levels vary. Now it is not uncommon to see in a river such as the Kauriala small islands on which trees grow.

Trees can, of course, also stand on the uplands. Now if there were uplands on which the trees were standing or if there were islands on which the trees were standing and alluvial land was formed on the north bank pushing the river-bed gradually further and further down from the north towards the south, an observer would find trees of twenty, thirty and forty years' growth standing amongst the new alluvial land although there had been no sudden change in the course of the river channel. The fallacy in the argument of the learned Subordinate Judge appears to be this. He assumes that the existence of old trees is incompatible with conditions other than a sudden change in the course of the river-channel. Of course if there had been a sudden change in the course of the river-channel the land lying between the old channel and the new would remain unaffected and the old trees would stand as they had always been. But it does not necessarily follow that, because there are old trees standing on the land, there has been a sudden change in the course of the river-bed. The evidence of Mr. Latifullah Khan is clearly of value. He no doubt has drawn wrong conclusions and deductions in places, but his observations are nevertheless the most valuable observations of any person who has examined the land. He is a trained surveyor who had been surveying land for thirty-six years before he gave his evidence. He has frequently surveyed land subject to fluvial action. He states that the whole of the disputed land is land formed by gradual accretions, in other words that it is alluvial land, and that the soil is chiefly loam with a large admixture of sand. In places he finds stiff loam. Such places might well be islands or lands left amongst the new alluvial land. Nearer to the north bank of the present channel there is a larger admixture of sand. Now if there had been a sudden change in the bed of the river the land would not have possessed such a distinctly alluvial character.

The case for the appellant is that the river was on the northern boundary of the disputed land in 1867, and that in 1892-1894 it made a sudden change cutting off the whole of the disputed land from his village. If such were the case, the disputed land would not be of a strongly marked alluvial description. It would be towards the south of a slightly alluvial description and towards the north not of an alluvial description at all, and in the old bed of the river as it was in 1867 it would bear traces still of a recently abandoned river-channel. So far from this being the case the land is found to be of the same quality—more alluvial towards the south, less alluvial towards the north, but of a marked alluvial character everywhere except in some places which would apparently be islands or uplands. We do not make these comments by way of a decision. We find it impossible to decide the point exactly owing to the absence of evidence. But it is to be remembered that the burden of proof was on the appellant, that it was for him to discharge this burden of proof, and that the evidence which he has given has not discharged it. We need not in these circumstances go into many of the other points or touch any of the other points in great detail. It is, however, remarkable that Barkharia has always been described as an alluvial mahal. We find from Exhibit A9 that in 1893 the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich ordered the Tahsildar of Nanpara to make a full inquiry as to the letting value of an area of 323 acres which had been added to that village by alluvion, and in Exhibit A10 it is ordered that as the assets are less than ten per cent. no action is required. On 28th February 1895 (Exhibit A12) a map was prepared and the case was put up for assessment of revenue. Exhibit A13 is the summary Settlement of Barkharia. We find the area is given as 322 acres which was assessed to Rs. 40 land revenue and Rs. 3-15-10 cesses. Then we find Exhibit A14 the kishtwar khasra of the newly thrown out mahal of Barkharia which was prepared on 10th September 1895. On 9th March 1895 the Deputy Collector passed an order recommending an assessment (Exhibit A15). This was sanctioned by the Commissioner on 10th September 1895 (Exhibit A16), a kabuliyat having been previously executed

HEARSEY v. SARDAR KARAM SINGH.

(Exhibit A 17) by Rani Narain Devi talukdar of the village. There was another Summary Settlement on 27th January 1899 (Exhibit A 15) and a fresh kabuliyat was executed. In all these proceedings the land was treated as alluvial land and not a word is said as to any sudden change in the course of the river.

We have now to note the peculiarity with regard to the name. We find in the kishtwar khasra (Exhibit A14) No. 27 recorded as a gaurhi constructed by Pragi Jhakua, that is to say the name Jhakua Gaurhi appears for the first time on the papers that have been produced before us in the proceedings that ended in 1895. So at sometime prior to 10th September 1895 there was a gaurhi constructed by a Jhakua on the land. This paper shows that the name of that Jhakua was Pragi. The defendant called a witness Mathura (D. W. No. 32) who deposed that he was a son of the Pragi Jhakua who had made the gaurhi and that Pragi had died about 1905. Pragi was a Sujauli man. This witness's evidence is corroborated by the evidence of other witnesses and the plaintiff's Counsel has practically admitted that the gaurhi in question was called after Pragi Jhakua and was founded by him. Thus we have it that the man who founded the gaurhi was a man who lived on the Bahraich side of the river. How is this compatible with the plaintiff's case? If the land were as he asserts his own land which had been cut away from him by an action of the river that took place according to his plaint between 1892 and 1894, how is it that in proceedings terminating in 1895 the land was already known as the gaurhi made by a man who did not live on the Kheri side of the river? The only answer that can be given is that Pragi Jhakua pounced upon the land the moment it had come to the Bahraich side. But this answer is nullified by some of the oral evidence. We have had to go through the oral evidence and on the whole it is the most unsatisfactory. The plaintiff's witnesses are unsatisfactory. They have deposed to anything that will suit the plaintiff's case with regard to the question of possession. The defendant's witnesses are in many instances as bad as the plaintiff's but here and there is a witness of the defendant whose evidence deserves to be treated with consideration. We are unable to find that there are many witnesses called by the plaintiff whose evidence deserves consideration. Prag Dutt (D. W. No 15) is a retired Supervisor Kanungo. He appears to us to be a respectable and reliable witness. He was Supervisor Kanungo of Pargana Dharmapur from July 1887 to 1901. He has deposed that ever since he knew the land in suit it was in the possession of the defendant and that the land had gradually accreted. He prepared Exhibit A13 in which Jhakua Gaurhi is shown and he has deposed that he knew Pragi Jhakua, that Jhakua Gaurhi existed two years before and that by error it was not entered in the previous khasra kishtwar Exhibit A 7. Now if this witness is believed Pragi Jhakua had founded the gaurhi at a period prior to the period when the plaintiff asserts that the river changed its course. We can see no reason for disbelieving him. The learned Subordinate Judge apparently believed him, for he remarks that the defendant's evidence on the question of possession is far superior to the plaintiff's evidence. If it is far superior to the plaintiff's evidence and reliable, as the learned Subordinate Judge appears to find, the evidence of Prag Dutt is reliable on the question of title also.

For the above reasons we find that the appellant has failed to prove that the river changed its course suddenly and thus our decision on the question of title also is against him. We thus find that he failed upon every point and in the circumstances dismiss his appeal. The appellant will pay his own costs and those of the respondent.

Appeal dismissed.

ORIGINAL SIDE APPEAL No. 14 OF 1916.

August 28, 1916.

versus

MAHOMED HUSSAIN SAIT, MINOR,

BY HIS NEXT FRIEND ZACCHARIA

Kutchi Memons are governed by the Hindu Law in matters relating to succession and kindred questions and by the Muhammadan Law in matters of guardianship. [p. 729, col. 2.]

In cases of urgent and imperative necessity, or where a transaction from its nature must necessarily be beneficial to a minor, a de facto guardian can alienate the property of the minor, whether moveable or immovable. [p. 730, col. 1.]

A settlement of accounts arrived at by the de facto guardian of a Muhammadan minor, as representing the amount due to him for his deceased father's share in a partnership, is binding on the minor if it is fair and is made bona fide and in the best interests of the minor and as the result of independent advice. [p. 730, cols. 1.]

The minor is only entitled to either the stipulated or a fair rate of interest on the amount found to be due to him at the settlement. [p. 731, col. 1.]

A settlement once arrived at is final and in the absence of fraud or substantial errors the accounts cannot be re-opened or profits claimed on the ground that they were unduly large and the amount payable under the settlement or the interest thereon bore no proportion to it, especially where the settlement was long acted upon. [p. 731, col. 1.]

Plaintiff's father and the defendants, all belonging to the class of Kutchi Memon Muhammadans, were trading as partners till October 1907, when plaintiff's father died. In November, accounts were taken of the amount due to plaintiff, then a minor one year old, and a settlement arrived at that Rs. 16,000 was due to him. This amount was left in the hands of defendants who were to pay interest at 7½ per cent. The mother and maternal grandfather of plaintiff and two other respectable gentlemen were parties to the settlement, which was registered. The interest amounting to Rs. 100 a month was regularly paid by defendants to the plaintiff's maternal uncle, who now brought this suit as his next friend, for accounts and for a share of profits, since plaintiff's father's death. Mr. Justice Bakewell, on the Original Side, held that the settlement was void, as the plaintiff was properly represented, his mother not being his legal guardian, and decreed the suit, without even giving credit to sums regularly paid after the death of plaintiff's father. In appeal:

Held, reversing the decree of Mr. Justice Bakewell, that plaintiff was not entitled to maintain this suit and ask for an account. [p. 731, col. 2.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—A minor who is entitled to claim the assets of his deceased father in a partnership is not entitled to claim as of right a share in the profits of the concern. There is nothing in the Indian Contract Act to that effect. There is no fiduciary relation between the surviving partners and the legal representatives of the deceased partner. The amount due to the deceased is a loan and nothing more. [p. 732, col. 1.]

It is always a very difficult process to find out to what exactly the profits earned in the trade are due, whether to the capital left by the deceased, or to the capital brought in by the other partners or to other things. Therefore, there are innumerable difficulties in the way of an account being taken. Discretion must be left in the Court in such matters to act on behalf of the minor. [p. 732, col. 2.]

Abid Ali v. Imam Ali, 32 Ind. Cas. 177; 38 A. 92; 14 A. L. J. 18, referred to.

Illustration (f) to section 88 of the Indian Trusts Act goes further than the operative portion of the section itself, and, if it is to be regarded as laying down that in every case where after the death of a partner the money is left outstanding in that partnership the legal representative of the deceased partner is entitled to a share of the profits, it is not sound law. [p. 733, col. 1.]

Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Bakewell, dated the 5th January 1916, passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of this Court, in Civil Suit No. 247 of 1915.

Messrs. T. Narasimha Aiyangar and T. Arumainatham Pillai, for the Defendant No. 1 Appellant.

Mr. M. K. Ramaswami Aiyar, for the Defendant No. 2 Appellant.

Messrs. Short Bewes & Co., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The suit in which this appeal has arisen, was instituted by the plaintiff through his next friend, his maternal uncle, Zaccharia Ismail Sait.

SIDDICK v. MAHOMED HUSSAIN.

The facts of the case are, the plaintiff's father and the defendants in the suit, were partners carrying on business in piece goods. The partnership commenced on 16th June 1901, and it appears that the accounts used to be settled from time to time. The last settlement of accounts in the lifetime of the plaintiff's father was in February 1907. The plaintiff's father died on 5th October 1907. The suit is now brought for an account to be taken of the share of the plaintiff's father in the business and for recovery of what may be found due. The shares of the different partners were fixed, the plaintiff's father's share being one-half of the profits. He contributed Rs. 7,500, to the capital; 1st defendant contributed a similar amount, the 2nd defendant bringing in no capital. It also appears that in addition to the capital found by the plaintiff's father he also contributed his labour and skill to the business. The defence to the suit is that after the plaintiff's father died on the 13th November 1907 an account was taken of what was due to the representatives of the deceased on account of his share and two gentlemen of respectable position belonging to the same community as the parties to the suit took accounts on behalf of the plaintiff's mother who was acting as his de facto guardian; and it was ascertained that a sum of Rs. 16,000, in round figures was due on the date of settlement. I might mention that the plaintiff at the date of his father's death was only one year old and he had no paternal relatives, so far as can be gathered from the record, of a near degree. A formal deed of release was drawn up reciting that Rs. 16,000 were due to the estate of the plaintiff's father and, pending investment of the money in immoveable properties, it should remain in the business in the hands of the defendant and that the amount was to carry interest at the rate of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The settlement was arrived at, not only with the help of two independent men of respectable position in the community but of the maternal grandfather of the plaintiff. Interest at $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. amounted to Rs. 100 a month and it is admitted by Mr. Barton, the learned Counsel for the respondent, that this amount was regularly paid until about April 1915. The plaintiff is still under age and the suit, as I have stated, was instituted by a maternal uncle of his, who, according to the evidence of the plaintiff's mother herself, used to receive the interest payable on Rs. 16,000, every month and make over the amounts to the mother. It is stated by the mother in her evidence that she was receiving the interest on Rs. 16,000 and that it was utilized for her and the minor's maintenance. The last time that payment was received according to the settlement was a few months before the institution of the suit. The suit is instituted on the allegation that very large profits have been earned in the business carried on by the defendants since the plaintiff's father's death and, therefore, it is alleged that if an account be taken of the profits so earned and of what was attributable to the plaintiff's father's share in the assets at the time of his death, it will be found that a very large sum is payable to the plaintiff. The defendants paid the whole of Rs. 16,000 into Court, while the appeal was pending and they claim that all that the plaintiff is entitled to is interest at $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on this amount as arranged under the settlement.

Mr. Justice Bakewell who tried the suits has held that under the Muhammadan Law which governs the question, as to who is the legal guardian of the minor in this suit, the mother is not such guardian, therefore, the so called settlement is of no effect in law, and is not binding upon the minor. He, therefore, held that an account must be taken from the date of the last settlement during the lifetime of the plaintiff's father of the profits earned in the business and that the defendants are liable to pay what has been earned by the user of the amount due on account of the share of the plaintiff's father. As regards the Rs. 100, which the plaintiff's mother has been receiving from month to month he refused even to give credit for them because the maternal uncle or the maternal grandfather had no power in law to grant receipts, that is to say, they did not properly represent the minor.

The parties are Kutchi Memons and so far as succession and kindred questions are concerned they are governed by the Hindu Law. But with reference to guardianship it is the Muhammadan Law that applies to them. No doubt under that law the mother of an infant is not the legal guardian. The learned Judge held on the authority of Mata Din v. Ahmad Ali (1) that a mother is not a legal guardian and, therefore, any act which she purports to do on behalf of the minor is of no legal effect although such act might be purely for the benefit of such minor and necessary in his interests. I do not think, however, that the ruling of the Judicial Committee goes so far as that. The whole question was fully considered by Mr. Justice Ayling and myself in a case reported in Hyderman Kutti v. Syed Ali (2) in which all the rulings on the subject including Mata Din v. Ahmad Ali (1) and also the original authorities of Muhammadan Law have been discussed. Nothing has been urged to-day which would make me doubt the correctness of the proposition of law laid down there. What is laid down is:—"In cases of urgent and imperative necessity, or where the transaction from its nature must necessarily be beneficial to the minor, a de facto guardian can alienate the property of the minor whether moveable or immoveable." And it was also held that other acts of a de facto guardian, if of a similar nature, are binding. This case has been followed in this Court in Abdul Hussain Rowthan v. Mahomad Ibrahim Rowthan (3). The rule of law as enunciated above was also recognised by the Allahabad High Court in Abid Ali v. Imam Ali (4).

Now the position of affairs on the plaintiff's father's death was this. The plaintiff who was only one year old, had no paternal relatives of any near degree. He had no other property and, so far as it appears, his mother also had no means of subsistence. All the property which the minor inherited from his father was his share of the assets of this business. Therefore it was absolutely necessary that whatever was due to the plaintiff from the defendant's firm should be available to him at once for his maintenance as well as for the maintenance of his mother. The mother was entitled under the Hindu Law, which governs her rights in this respect, to maintenance from the property inherited by her son. It does not appear that she had the wherewithal to institute a suit and even if she had, the law does not say that she was bound to institute a suit if she could recover the money due to her infant son by means other than a suit. Under the circumstances she acted not only in the best interests of her infant child and herself but was compelled by necessity to have the matter settled out of Court if possible. She sought the advice of her own father and, I suppose, also of her brother, and with the help of men of commanding position and influence in the community, an account was taken up of what was due to the estate of her deceased husband. It will be seen that the plaint entirely ignores the settlement though the settlement is evidenced by a registered deed and though the next friend who has taken upon himself the responsibility of instituting the suit has been for years receiving the moneys due under the settlement and must have been fully cognizant of it. It is not alleged that the men who acted as arbitrators did not discharge their duties fairly and properly. In fact as I have stated the whole settlement is ignored. Even at the trial no definite issue was raised questioning the conduct of the arbitrators or suggesting that more was due to the estate of the deceased than what was arrived at, at the settlement. The learned Judge has set aside the settlement merely holding on the question of law, that the mother was not the legal guardian and, therefore, has no authority to come to a settlement in this matter. That view of the law, in my opinion, is quite erroneous and as there is really no allegation that the settlement was not bona fide or that the account so settled is impeachable because of any substantial errors, I see no reason why the settlement should not be held binding. If that is so, no further question really arises.

It was argued by Mr. Barton that 7½ per cent. interest was not good enough and that another partner received 9 per cent. on what he lent to the firm. But if the settlement arrived at was a bona fide one, and advantageous to the minor, it is no ground for impeaching it that greater advantage might possibly have been secured to the plaintiff. The plaintiff asks that the whole account be re-opened, that a fresh account be taken of whatever profits accrued to the business and that what may be found to be due on account of the assets of the deceased partner should be awarded to the plaintiff. It may or may not be that the business which was continued after the plaintiff's father's death brought in more profits than what would be represented by interest at $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. I am, however, satisfied that the suit instituted by the next friend of the plaintiff is not bona fide. He was fully cognizant of the settlement for all these years and never thought of questioning it; he received interest from time to time and that has not been denied by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff. In a case of this nature, even if we could hold that the settlement ought to be re-opened, I should be unwilling to grant a decree for an account. Accounts for a number of years would have to be examined and in a business such as this it would be difficult to ascertain how much of the profits was due to the user of the deceased partner's assets and how much to the labour and skill of the defendants. It might very well be that if an account was taken—and it is sure to be very costly—the minor would be a loser and I have not been convinced that in a case such as this the Court would be bound to order an account at the instance of the plaintiff's next friend. The defendants were, I may mention, always willing to hand over the money that was in their hands and have been regularly paying the stipulated interest. The minor's next friend or the minor's mother has yet taken no steps for the appointment of a guardian. It seems to me an untenable position that, the settlement having been accepted and acted upon for so many years by the minor's mother, and his maternal grandfather and by the plaintiff's next friend himself, the next friend should now be allowed to turn round and say that it was unauthorised and, therefore, should be set aside, without even alleging that the settlement was not fair and bona fide or that it was liable to be opened on account of errors.

I would, therefore, set aside the decree passed by the learned Judge. There will be a decree instead for Rs. 16,000 and for interest at the rate of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. for the months during which interest has not been paid. It is conceded that interest should cease from the date on which the money was deposited in Court, i.e., 11th February 1916. Interest at Rs. 100 a month will, therefore, be payable from 1st April 1915 to 11th February 1916.

As regards costs, we find that the defendants alleged that the plaintiff's mother had been appointed guardian. That plea they were unable to make good. On the other hand, the suit was clearly ill-advised and the responsibility for it lies with the plaintiff's next friend. The order will be that each party should bear his own costs throughout and the costs of the minor plaintiff be borne by his next friend.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I entirely agree, but I wish to say a very few words in addition to what has been said by the learned Officiating Chief Justice. It was conceded that those who acted on behalf of the minor were justified in seeking a settlement of accounts after the death of the minor's father. There is no allegation in the plaint that any undue advantage was taken of those that acted on behalf of the minor; and having regard to the fact that persons most interested in the welfare of the minor took part in the settlement, I am of opinion that the settlement should not be re-opened. Upon another ground also I am of opinion that the decree of the learned Judge should be set aside. The amount settled by the father before his death, in February 1907, was Rs. 13,777. In the settlement in November of that year, six months after, a sum of nearly Rs. 2,000 was added to the settlement and the total of Rs. 16,000 was arrived at. Prima facie it looks as if that was the correct amount due to the minor on the date of the settlement. As I said before, inasmuch as there is no allegation that this settlement was not come to after careful scrutiny of the accounts there is no reason to doubt that this sum did not represent the actual amount due to the minor on the date of the settlement. Granting for a moment that the mother of the minor and his maternal grandfather were not competent legally to settle the affairs of the minor, if I am correct in thinking that Rs 16,000 represented the amount actually due to the minor on the death of his father, I see no reason why plaintiff should be given a share in the profits of the concern which, by law, was dissolved on the death of the father of the minor.

Mr. Barton contended that an option should be given to the minor either to accept a share of the profits proportionate to the amount utilised by the surviving partners or to claim interest, whichever may be profitable to him. In my opinion there is no absolute rule that a minor who is entitled to the assets of his deceased father in the partnership, is entitled to claim as of right a share in the profits of the concern. There is nothing in the Indian Contract Act to that effect. In a case decided by the House of Lords, Knorr v. Gye (5), Lord Westbury points out that there is no fiduciary relation between the surviving partners and the legal representatives of the deceased partner. It is a case of pure contract in which a legal relationship is substituted on the death of the deceased partner. The learned Lord seems to suggest that the amount due to the deceased partner is a loan and nothing more. In section 43 of the English Partnership Act of 1890, this is how the law is stated, "Subject to any agreement between the partners, the amount due from the surviving or continuing partners to an outgoing partner or the representatives of a deceased partner in respect of the outgoing or deceased partner's share, is a debt accruing at the date of the dissolution or death." Sir Frederick Pollock in commenting upon this section says "The claim of the representatives against the surviving partner is in the nature of a simple contract debt and is subject to the Statute of Limitations, which runs from the deceased partner's death." If we look at section 241 of the Indian Contract Act, the same idea seems to underlie the provision in that section. I am, therefore, of opinion that, even assuming that there was no legal settlement of accounts, if the sum of Rs. 16,000 represents what is due to the minor and if that was left in the hands of the surviving partners, it is only a debt upon which the minor will be entitled to a proper rate of interest, but in regard to which the minor is not entitled to claim, as of right, a share in the profits of the concern. As pointed out by Wigram, V. C., in Willett v. Blanford (6), there are innumerable difficulties in the way of an account being taken as regards the share of the profits due on the amount left by the deceased partner and which has been utilised for purposes of the trade. The learned Vice Chancellor says "The nature of the trade, the manner of carrying it on, the capital employed, the state of the account between the partnership and the deceased partner at the time of his death, and the conduct of parties after his death, may materially affect the rights of the parties." To these considerations may be added the fixing a value on the skill and labour employed by each of the partners in making the concern a successful one. Under these circumstances it must always be a very difficult process to find out to what exactly are the profits earned in the trade due, whether it is to the capital left by the deceased partner or to the capital brought in by the partners who continue the trade or whether these are negligible considerations as compared with other circumstances. I, therefore, think that the discretion must be in the Courts in such matters to see whether under all the circumstances it is not desirable to fix a rate of interest on the minor's share in the property. That, I understand is the principle acted on by the Judicial Committee in the case of Ahmed Musaji Saleji v. Hashim Ebrahim Saleji (7). The learned Counsel who appeared for the respondent in that case said that the Courts below exercised their discretion properly in awarding a rate of interest instead of a share of the profits. And in another case to which Mr. Barton drew our attention, namely the case on the Original Side, Mr. Justice Wallis (as he then was) fixed a particular rate of interest instead of a share of the profits of the concern. Under these circumstances I am of opinion that where the amount due to a minor has been ascertained, the proper course in the interests of the minor would ordinarily be to fix a rate of interest and not to direct the accounts to be taken.

Considerable reliance was placed by the respondent upon illustration (f) to section 88 of the Trusts Act. The first observation that occurs to me in connection with that illustration is that it goes further than the operative portion of the section itself. Under the section, there must be some act on the part of the person which is unauthorised and which aims at gaining an advantage to himself at the expense of the minor. The illustration is "A and B are partners. A dies. B, instead of winding-up the affairs of the partnership, retains all the assets in the business. B must account to A's legal representative for the profits arising from A's share of the capital." It may be that the illustration contemplates cases where the partner acts manifestly to his own advantage and with a view not to benefit the minor. But if the illustration, as it stands is regarded as laying down that, in every case where after the death of a partner the money is left outstanding in that partnership the legal representative of the deceased partner is entitled to a share of the profits, I am not prepared as at present advised to accept it as sound law, especially having regard to the observations of Lord Westbury already referred to, that there is no fiduciary relationship between the parties.

I have some little doubt as to whether in this case interest at 9 per cent. should not be given to the minor. I have, in mind, the fact that one of the partners who was allowed to bring in capital was himself given 9 per cent. interest. But having regard to the fact that the mother and the maternal grandfather and two members of the community to which the parties belong, have considered that 7½ per cent. would be a fair and reasonable rate of interest, I see no justification for varying that rate of interest and awarding 9 per cent.

I, therefore, agree with the Officiating Chief Justice in the order proposed.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in Original Suit No. 56 of 1912.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar (with him Mr. T. R. Krishnaswami Aiyar), for the Appellants.

Mr. S. Muthiah Mudaliar, for the Respondents.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 21st and 24th July 1916, and having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs as reversionary heirs of one Ramachandra Ekanadha brought this action to recover certain immoveable property, the subject of this appeal, sold by Jamna Boi, the widow of the last male owner. Ramachandra Ekanadha, the last male owner, died in 1833 leaving his widow Jamna Boi and a daughter Soma Boi, then an infant of two years or thereabouts. The sale was made to six persons in equal shares by six separate sale-deeds on the 4th October 1860. The 10th defendant, the principal contesting defendant (whom we shall hereafter call the defendant) has now acquired the whole of the properties now in dispute through several intermediate sales from the alienees of the widow. The learned Subordinate Judge in the Court below has dismissed the plaintiffs' suit in respect of these items on the ground that the sales were made by the widow to get money to pay debts borrowed by her for the expenses of the marriage of her daughter and for the cultivation expenses of some of her lands which had been affected by floods. The plaintiffs appeal and the principal question now is whether the finding of the Subordinate Judge on this matter is correct. The evidence as to the necessity for the sales is that of defendants' witnesses Nos. 6, 13 and 15 who were all examined before a Commissioner, 16th witness for the defendants being one of the original alienees. As they were all examined on commission we are in as good a position as the Trial Judge to decide on their credibility and we have come to the conclusion that the evidence does not satisfactorily prove that the sales were made for the purposes found by the lower Court.

Before dealing with that evidence it is we think necessary to refer to the written statement of the 10th defendant as that suggests that he himself had really no knowledge of the purpose for which the sales were made. In paragraph 7 he stated that these items of property had passed out of the hands of the original family before the year 1850. He does not even say that the properties were sold by the widow though in his evidence he admits that he was aware of the sales before he filed his statement. In paragraph 8 he stated that if there was a sale of these properties, which evidently he did not admit, it must have been for the purpose of procuring money for the marriage of the daughter. The learned Pleader for the appellants laid some stress on these two paragraphs of the written statement and argued with considerable force that the defendant who must necessarily have known that these lands were sold in 1860 deliberately put forward a false case to enable him to plead that if there was a sale it must have been made to discharge debts contracted for the daughter's marriage; and that if the plaintiffs were unable to prove an alienation by the widow, to plead that title to the property had been extinguished by 12 years' possession under the Limitation Act of 1859. It will be observed that the daughter was about 2 years of age at the time of Ekanadha's death in 1833 and the Inam Register shows that the daughter must have been about 29 or 30 at the time of these sales. The suit properties were inam lands and the sale-deeds executed by Jamna Boi were produced before the Inam Commissioners. She must have been married in the early forties, a number of years before the sales and we think that was the reason why the defendant put the sales as near to the date of the marriage as he could. Not merely did the defendant plead that the alienations were before 1850 but he examined a considerable number of witnesses, about 10, (including the three who gave evidence as to the purpose) before the Commissioner, for the purpose of proving that the sales, took place in the year 1853 or before, that is before the Parithapi storm of March 1853. At the time when the defendant led this evidence plaintiffs had not produced the Inam Register which showed that the sales were made on the 4th October 1860. It is only after the plaintiffs had produced the Inam Register that the defendant through a witness produced two of the original sale-deeds, Exhibits XIII and XIV, which we have reason to suspect were in the hands of the defendant himself.

The defendant, therefore, started with a case which was obviously false and sought to support it by evidence of witnesses among whom the principal ones are the three on whose evidence he depends to prove the necessity for the sales. The most important of these witnesses is Gopala Aiyar one of the original vendees from Jamna Boi. The sales as we have stated above were to six persons including Gopala Aiyar who were all inhabitants of a place called Villianallur. The principal person who negotiated the sales was one Seethapathi Aiyar: the oldest among them. It appears from the evidence of Gopala Aiyar himself that he was then a boy of about 17 and that his affairs were managed by his brother-in-law one Panchanada Aiyar. It appears to us doubtful whether this Gopala Aiyar was present at all at the sale. At any rate there can be no doubt that he took no part in the negotiation or the obtaining of the sales, but it was Seethapathi Aiyar that arranged the whole thing on behalf of himself and his co-vendees. This witness deliberately put the date of sale in the Parithapi year, i. e., 1852-1853 in order that his evidence may accord with the statement already filed by the 10th defendant. In order to make the year of sale tally with his age then, which he says was seventeen, he gives his present age as 77, in which case he would have been about 24 years of age and not 17 at the time of the sale. We think that these statements were deliberately made and were not due to any lapse of memory. He also says that with the price two debt bonds were paid off, and the bonds handed over to him:

which again is scarcely likely, considering that he was a boy in his teens, while the negotiations were conducted and completed by Seethapathi Iyer. The two debt bonds which he says were handed over to him are not produced and it is said they were eaten up by white ants and destroyed. One curious difference may be noted between his evidence and that of Chockalingam Pillai, the defendants' 6th witness, who is said to have been present at the sale. While Chockalinga says that the debt bonds were in cadjan this witness is positive that they were in paper. He speaks to a number of details which it is scarcely likely he could have remembered at this distance of time. We are not, therefore, prepared to place any reliance upon this man's story.

The next witness on whom reliance is placed is Chockalingam Pillai defendants' 6th witness. He purchased a portion of the lands from Gopala Iyer which he in his turn sold to the father of the 10th defendant. He gives his age as 78, states that he was present at the time of the sale along with his father and is clear that his father attested these sale-deeds. He also starts with the statement, which is not true, that the sale took place four or five years prior to the Parithapi storm. He gives no satisfactory explanation for his presence at the time of the sale to the Villianallur people. In cross-examination he stated that at the time when the Brahmins of Villianallur who finally purchased the property went to Tanjore for this purpose, he and his father also went with them, but lower down he stated that, as the sale had been completed to the Brahmins of Villianallur, Jamna Boi said that she could not sell to him and his father. From the latter statement one would infer that he and his father went there for the purpose of obtaining the sale in competition with the Villianallur people, but were too late, while his previous statement in the same cross-examination leads one to infer that they all went together. According to him the sale had been settled to the Villianallur people, but he and his father stayed on although it had been so settled, and though they had no further business to detain them there. He stated that his father attested the document but in Exhibit XIII there is no such attestation. Exhibit XIV the other sale-deed is too badly torn to be read. It is obvious that the witness is speaking of things about which he knew nothing and in two material particulars, namely, as to the date of the sales and the attestation of his father, his evidence is proved to be untrue. It must be remembered that at the time when he gave his evidence the date of the sales had not been proved by the production of the Inam Register, and Exhibit XIII which would have disproved his statement as to the attestation by his father had not been produced and the defendant had probably no idea of producing it. The witness goes further and states that the sale-deeds were registered at Thiruvidadamarudur, which again is not true.

The only other witness who speaks about the purpose is the defendants' 15th witness who again puts the sale before the Parithapi year. He is a resident of Neppukovil and the reason which he gives for being present at Tanjore is far from satisfactory. According to him while he was passing along the street Thyagaraja Pillai, the father of Chokalinga, who was sitting on the pial of the house of Jamna Boi called him and that the Villianallur Brahmins requested that he should remain with them and complete the sales. But he did not stay and nothing was done that day. He went to the house the next day after the sales had been completed; somebody, however, was good enough to read the sale-deeds to him, and he came to know of the purpose as it was mentioned in the sale-deed. No purpose is mentioned in Exhibit X II and it is not pretended that the terms of the other sale-deeds were different. We have already shown that in all probability, neither Chokalingam Pillai nor Thyagaraja Pillai his father, were there at the time of the sale. It is again difficult to see why he was asked to remain with the Brahmins.

These are the only three witnesses who speak about the necessity for the sale and it is impossible to place any reliance on their evidence. Wherever their evidence could be tested they are found to be speaking an untruth.

The only other piece of evidence which remains to be dealt with in connection with this matter is the alleged attestation of the sale-deeds by the plaintiffs' father. The only evidence as to this attestation is that of defendants' 3rd witness. That that witness could not have been acquainted with the plaintiffs' father's signature is obvious on his own statements. His opportunity for seeing the signature of the plaintiffs' father was that that man was signing some account in a grocery shop in which the witness also had an account. It appears to us that that story of his is palpably false. Again we find no warrant for the assumption of the learned Judge that Siva Pandithar the person who purchased the stamp paper for the sales is the father of the plaintiffs.

The sales no doubt took place a very long time ago; but making all allowance for the meagreness of the evidence owing to the long lapse of time and for lapse of memory of old men who are called as witnesses we are not satisfied that the 10th defendant on whom the burden lay has proved that the sales were made for purposes binding on the estate. We must hold that the sales are not binding on the reversioners.

The learned Pleader for the respondents, however, sought to sustain the judgment of the lower Court, on a new ground which was not raised in the lower Court, viz., that the plaintiffs' suit for the recovery of items the subject of appeal is barred by limitation. To make the point clear it is necessary to state a few dates. The widow Jamna Boi who sold the property died on the 21st April 1865, the daughter Soma Boi who succeeded her died on the 27th June 1901, and this suit was instituted on the 7th December 1912. It is clear that so long as the widow was alive there can be no question of limitation for a suit by the reversioner. But it is said that on her death in 1865 the possession of the alienees became adverse to the daughter Soma Boi and as 12 years elapsed before the coming into force of Act XV of 1877, which for the first time enacted a special Article for the institution of a suit by a Hindu after the death of a Hindu female, enlarging the scope of Article 142 of Act IX of 1871, which provided for a suit on the death of a Hindu widow only, the adverse possession against Soma Boi must be taken to have been adverse to the reversioners also. It is argued that although twelve years had not elapsed from the death of the widow when Act IX of 1871 came into force, as that Act provided a special period of limitation only for a suit to be instituted by a Hindu on the death of a Hindu widow, and as Soma Boi who would have been entitled to sue the alienees had allowed her right to become barred, the right of the present plaintiffs must be taken to have been extinguished along with the title of the daughter, as she represented the inheritance. We cannot agree with this contention. It is no doubt true that if the twelve years' period had run out, before Act IX of 1871 came into force, not merely the daughter but also the reversioners would have been barred under Act XIV of 1859, Sreenivasa Rogavochariar v. Sambasiva Pillai (1) [overruling on review Sambasiva v. Rogava (2)]. But the scheme of the previous Limitation Act was altogether changed when Act IX of 1871 was passed. Even if Article 142 of Act IX of 1871 did not apply to reversioners in the position of the present plaintiffs, the Article which would be applicable to a suit by the reversioners, in the absence of a special Article, would be Article 145 of Act IX of 1871, corresponding to Article 144 of the later Acts, which gives twelve years from the time when the possession of the defendants became adverse to the plaintiffs. The contention for the respondents is that the possession of the defendants, which was adverse to Soma Boi the daughter, was necessarily adverse to the reversioners, as Soma Boi represented the inheritance, and that the reversioners must be deemed to be persons claiming from or through Soma Boi. The question then is whether the plaintiffs claim from or through Soma

Boi. The Privy Council in Runchordus Vandravandas v. Parvatibai (3) distinctly laid down that reversioners are not persons claiming from or through a female heir so as to make possession adverse to her adverse to the reversioners and that adverse possession against reversioners began only from the time when they became entitled to possession. The exact question now raised came up for decision before the Calcutta High Court in Srinath Kur v. Prosunno Kumar Ghose (4), and a Full Bench of that Court had no hesitation in holding that reversioners were not barred. See also Kokilmoni Dossia v. Manick Chandra Joddar (5) and Brāja Lal Sen v. Jiban Krishna Roy (6). It has been held by this Court in Kancharla Venkataratnam v. Koganti Venkatarao (7) that the time allowed for an action by an adopted son to recover possession of immoveable property held adversely to his adopting mother was twelve years from the date of his adoption. There is no specific Article in the Limitation Acts of 1871, 1877 or 1908 for a suit by an adopted son and the Article applicable is the residuary Article 144. The learned Judges had no hesitation in holding that the adverse possession of a trespasser against the widow was not adverse possession against the adopted son and that there can be no adverse possession till the adopted son became entitled to possession, that is, on his adoption. We think the principle of this decision applies to this case. It is no doubt true that in Srinath Kur v. Prosunno Kumar Ghose (4) reference was made to the Articles applicable to remaindermen and reversioners—terms scarcely applicable to the so-called reversionary heirs to a deceased Hindu male, who have no estate so long as the heiress is alive—and no reference is made to Article 144, the residuary Article in respect of suits for immoveable property. It may also be noted that Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in the latter case cites (3) 23 B 725; 26 I. A. 71; 1 Bom. L. R. 607; 3 C. W. N. 62; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 543; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 485.

JOGENDRA PROSAD MITRA v. ASUTOSH GOSWAMI.

Sambasiva v. Ragava (2) as authority for his position without noting that that case had been overruled on review. We think, however, the principle is not affected by this. The case of Pydigantam Jagannatha Row v. Rama Doss Patnaik (8) does not affect the present question, as there the question related to the office of trustee in which the widow had no beneficial interest; in fact that very case recognises the principle that adverse possession against the ultimate reversioner does not begin till he is entitled to possession.

We must, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower Court and decree the plaintiffs' suit in respect of the properties the subject of the appeal with costs here and in the lower Court. The plaintiffs are also entitled to mesne profits from the date of the suit at the rate fixed by the lower Court.

Appeal allowed; Suit decreed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 19, Sch. I, Art. 182—Execution—Application for adjournment of sale—Acknowledgment—Leave to bid, application for, whether step-in-aid of execution—Decree, splitting up of—Acceptance of portions of decretal debt from different judgment-debtors—Uncertified payment, power of executing Court to recognize.

Where a judgment-debtor stated in an application for adjournment of an execution sale that, in case of his failure to pay up the decretal money on the date to be fixed for sale in the month following, he would not take any objection to the validity of the sale:

Held, that the application contained an acknowledgment within the meaning of section 19 of the Limitation Act. [p. 739, col. 1.]

Where a decree-holder applied for leave to bid at the sale, and on the very day the application was granted consented to its adjournment and on the day of sale, refrained from bidding although there were no bidders present:

Held, that under these circumstances, the application could not be treated as an application to the proper Court to take a step-in-aid of execution. [p. 740, col. 1.]

The acceptance by a decree-holder of sums tendered by different judgment-debtors under the same decree from time to time with an undertaking not to proceed with execution against those judgment-debtors, without, however, releasing them from liability under the decree, does not split up the decree so as to make the decree-holder bound to pursue his remedy against each judgment-debtor only to the extent of his separated liability. Babus Sib Chandra Palit and Hira Lal Sanyal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by five of the judgment-debtors against an order for execution of a decree for mesne profits, made on the 11th December 1899. There were applications for execution in 1901 and 1903 to which no detailed reference is necessary for the purposes of this appeal. These were followed by a third application for execution on the 22nd August 1905. The present application was not made till the 6th January 1909, and is prima facie barred by limitation. The decree holders endeavour, however, to take the case out of the bar of limitation by reliance upon section 19 and Article 182 of the First Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act.

In so far as the first ground is concerned, it is contended that on the 19th February 1906

there was an acknowledgment by the appellants sufficient for the purpose of section 19. On that date, an application was presented to the Court for adjournment of the sale. The application on the face of it purports to have been made on behalf of one of the appellants Jogendra Prosad Mitter. It has been argued, however, that the application was in reality made by him on behalf of the other judgment-debtors as well. Before we deal with this question, it is necessary to point out that the application is not explicitly on behalf of all the judgment-debtors. An examination of the original application shows that an attempt has been made to tamper with it. In the right hand corner, there appears the signature of Jogendra Prosad Mitter. He is consequently the applicant and the application purports to have been made on his behalf by his Pleader Amrit Lal Mitter. In the body of the petition, it was originally stated that the application was on behalf of Jogendra Prosad Mitter, but an alteration has been effected, which on the face of it looks like a subsequent interpolation. This is obvious from an examination of the two paragraphs which constitute the body of the petition. In the first paragraph, it is stated explicitly that there was a prayer for one month to be granted to the petitioner. The word used is amahe (* *) in the singular. In the second paragraph also, it is clear that in the petition as originally drawn up, there was a statement that 'I,' that is the petitioner, will not take any objection to the validity of the sale which might be held. An attempt, however, has been made to alter the word * * into * *. In these circumstances the petition must be taken to have been made by Jogendra Prosad Mitter alone. Hence arises the question whether the application, if it be construed to embody an acknowledgment, avails against the other defendants. That the application does embody an acknowledgment is clear, because the petitioner states that in case of his failure to pay up the decretal money on the date to be fixed for sale in the month following, he will not to be able to take any objection to the validity of the sale. This implies and acknowledges an obligation to pay the decretal debt. In order to make this acknowledgment operative against the co-judgment-debtors of Jogendra Prosad Mitter, the requirements of section 19 must be fulfilled. Section 19 requires that the acknowledgment of liability be made in writing, signed by the party against whom the right is claimed or by some person through whom he derives title or liability. The second explanation to the section then states that the term 'signed' means signed either personally or by an agent duly authorised in this behalf. The application was, as already stated, signed by Jogendra Prosad Mitter alone and by his Pleader Amrita Lal Mitter on his behalf. It has been contended on behalf of the respondents-decree-holders that this signature may be taken to have been made by an agent of the other judgment-debtors. But there is no proof that Jogendra Prosad Mitter was authorised duly to make this acknowledgment on behalf of his co-judgment-debtors. It is clear, therefore, that the decree-holders have failed to establish that there has been a valid acknowledgment under subsection (1) of section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act as against the four judgment-debtors other than Jogendra Prosad Mitter. The acknowledgment is of no avail against them.

In so far as the second ground is concerned, it has been argued that within three years antecedent to the application of the 16th January 1909, the decree-holders had applied to the proper Court to take a step-in-aid of execution of the decree. Reliance is placed, in this connection, upon an application made by the decree-holders on the 19th February 1906 for leave to bid at the sale which had then been advertised. In this application, which was granted by the Court, it was stated that when the properties would be put up for sale, it would be necessary for the decree-holders to make a purchase for the decretal amount, if no other purchaser offered any bid, and it was prayed that permission might be granted in that behalf. For the decree-holders, it has been argued that this application was an application to the proper Court to take a step-in-aid of execution of the decree, and reliance has been placed in support of this view upon the cases of Bansi v.

JOGENDRA PROSAD MITRA v. ASUTOSH GOSWAMI.

Sikree Mal (1), Dalel Singh v. Umrao Singh (2), and Vinayakrao Gopal Deshmukh v. Vinayak Krishna Dhebri (3). These cases, it may be conceded, do support the contention of the decree-holders. But it has not been disputed that a contrary rule was laid down by this Court in the cases of Toree Mahomed v. Mahomed Maboob Bux (4), Raghunundun Misser v. Kallidut Misser (5). On behalf of the decree-holders, the view taken in the case last mentioned has been criticised and we have been invited to refer the question for decision to a Full Bench. Our attention has also been drawn to the dictum of Mr. Justice Banerjee in Troylokya Nath Bose v. Jyoti Prokash Nandi (6), and reference has been made to the judgment of one member of this Bench in Hira Lal Bose v. Dwija Charan Bose (7). We may say at once that we are not prepared to accept the view expounded in Bansi v. Sikree Mal (1), Dalel Singh v. Umrao Singh (2) and Vinayakrao Gopal Deshmukh v. Vinayak Krishna Dhebri (3). For our present purposes, it is also unnecessary to determine whether, in any conceivable circumstances, an application for leave to bid may be deemed an application to the proper Court to take a step-in-aid of execution, because even if it be assumed that there may be cases in which an application for leave to bid may be an application to the proper Court to take a step-in-aid of execution, such circumstances undoubtedly do not exist in the case before us. It has been established that on the very day when the application for leave to bid was granted, the decree holders consented to an adjournment of the sale, and on the date when the property was subsequently put up for sale, although there were no bidders present, the decree-holders themselves did not avail themselves of the opportunity granted to them to offer bids. Under these circumstances, it is impossible to hold that the application of the 19th February 1906 was in any sense an application to the proper Court to take a step-in-aid of execution. The conduct of the decree-holders shows that not only was execution not aided, it was rather retarded by them. The two grounds assigned to support the contention that the application for execution, dated the 6th January 1909, is not barred by limitation, both prove unsustainable in so far as the judgment-debtors other than Jogendra Prosad Mitter are concerned. As regards him, however, there was clearly a valid acknowledgment within the meaning of section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act. We must consequently hold that the application is barred by limitation as regards the four judgment-debtors other than Jogendra Prosad Mitter.

On behalf of Jogendra Prosad Mitter, it has been finally contended that the appeal should succeed on two other grounds. It has been argued, in the first place, that the decree-holders were disentitled, in view of their own conduct, to execute the decree against him for recovery of the balance thereof. It has been stated that on a previous occasion the decree-holders accepted from some of the judgment-debtors moneys alleged to represent their rateable share of the entire judgment-debt. On this basis, it has been contended that the judgment-debt was by the conduct of the decree-holders split up and the decree-holders can pursue their remedy against each judgment-debtor only to the extent of his separated liability. In our opinion, there is no foundation for this contention. The decree-holders, no doubt, accepted sums tendered by the different judgment-debtors from time to time. They also undertook not to proceed with execution against those judgment-debtors; but at the same time, they did not release them from liability under the decree. On the other hand, it was expressly stated that if upon execution of the decree against the other judgment-debtors, the whole of the judgment-debt was not realised, the decree-holders would be at liberty to proceed with execution for recovery of the balance even as against those who had made the payments mentioned. Consequently, the principle recognised in the case of Ram Ratan Kapali v. Aswini Kumar Dutt (8) cannot be applied to the circumstances of this case.

The next ground upon which it has been urged that execution should not be allowed to proceed against Jogendra Prosad Mitter is that he had from time to time made payments towards satisfaction of the decree for which no credit had been allowed by the decree-holders. But these payments were not duly certified as required by rule 2 of Order XXI of the Code, and the time within which the judgment-debtor could have invited the Court to have the payments recorded, has elapsed. It is thus no longer open to the execution Court to take notice of the alleged payments. Reliance, however, has been placed upon the case of Gadadhar Pande v. Shyam Churn Naik (9), in support of the proposition that as this omission on the part of the decree-holders to allow credit for the payments made was an act of fraud, it is open to the Court to investigate the question of fraud under section 47 of the Code. In our opinion, there is no foundation for this contention. If this argument were to prevail, the restriction imposed by the Legislature upon the execution Court under rule 2 of Order XXI of the Code would be nullified. It is worthy of note that the view taken in the case of Gadadhar Pande v. Shyam Churn Naik (9), which accords with that adopted in Ramayyar v. Ramayyar (10), has been repudiated: Ganapathy Aiyar v. Chinna Chenga Reddy (11), Veerappa Chettiar v. Arumugam Poosari (12), Kamini Devi v. Aghore Nath Mukerjee (13), Nistarini Dasi v. Kazim Ali (14), Mon Mohan Karmakar v. Dwarka Nath Karmakar (15), Hiramon Biswas v. Musa Khan (16), Biroo Geraia v. Jainurat Koer (17). As it is not competent to the execution Court to allow credit for uncertified payments, it is not necessary for us to investigate whether the alleged payments were actually made.

The result is that this appeal is allowed in so far as the appellants other than Jogendra Prosad Mitter is concerned, and any sums belonging to them, which may have been taken away by the decree-holders under the order of the Court below, must be refunded at once. In so far as Jogendra Prosad Mitter is concerned, the appeal will stand dismissed. The decree-holders-respondents must pay the successful appellants their costs both here and in the Court below; but they will be entitled to receive from Jogendra Prosad Mitter their costs in both the Courts. We assess the hearing-fee in this Court at five gold mohurs.

Appeal partly allowed.

realization of the balance from the person and other properties of the judgment-debtor. [p. 745, col. 2; p. 747, col. 1; p. 748, col. 2.]

Per Abdur Rahim, Offg. C. J., and Seshagiri Aiyar, J. (Phillips, J., dissenting).—The starting point of limitation for execution of the portion of the decree relating to the unsatisfied balance under section 48, Civil Procedure Code, is the date when, after the remedy against the mortgaged property has been exhausted, it is ascertained that there is a balance due to be recovered from the defendant and his other properties. [p. 746, col. 2; p. 747, col. 2.]

Venkata Perumal v. Prayag Dossjee, 29 Ind. Cas. 556, overruled.

Jnanendranath Bose v. Khulna Loan Company Limited, 24 Ind. Cas. 35; 18 C. W. N. 492, disapproved.

Ratnachalam Ayyar v. Venkatrama Ayyar, 29 M. 46; Narhar Raghunath Naphad v. Krishnaji Govind Nadgavandi, 15 Ind. Cas. 822; 36 B. 368; 14 Bom. L. R. 381; Kommachi Kather v. Pakker, 20 M. 107; 7 M. L. J. 66; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 75; Munawar Husain v. Jani Bijai Shankar, 29 A. 619; A. W. N. (1905) 132; 2 A. L. J. 376, referred to.

Per Abdur Rahim, Offg. C. J., and Phillips, J.—Such an application is not covered by clause (b) of section 48, Civil Procedure Code, for the decree does not direct payment on a 'certain date'. For that clause to apply, the date should be fixed in the decree or at least should be ascertainable from its terms. The expression 'certain date' cannot be construed to mean a date which can be made certain, and there is no authority for applying the maxim 'whatever can be made certain is to be treated as certain' to the construction of a Statute of Limitation. [p. 746, col. 1; p. 749, col. 1.]

Per Abdur Rahim, Offg. C. J.—The application, however, falls under clause (a) of the section. The date of the decree sought to be executed need not necessarily be the date put down at the time it was drawn up. The words 'sought to be executed' in the clause indicate that the date is to be ascertained with reference to the time when the decree becomes capable of and ripe for execution according to its terms, and not always the date which it bears on its face. [p. 746, col. 1.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—The essence of the law of limitation is to provide against dilatoriness and negligence in the enforcement of a man's rights. But where the party is unable to seek his remedies, it cannot be said that he has failed to avail himself of the cause of action that has accrued to him. [p. 747, col. 2.]

Per Phillips, J.—Such an application falls neither under clause (a) nor under clause (b) of section 48, Civil Procedure Code. The Legislature has laid down a period of twelve years as the maximum period within which a decree can be executed (save in the case of fraud) and presumably this period has been fixed to avoid a prolonged harassing of the judgment-debtor, and consequently the section must be construed strictly. [p. 749, cols. 1 & 2.]

It is open to the decree-holder in the case of such a composite decree, to apply for amendment by omission of the personal decree, in which case, if a personal decree is subsequently given, twelve years' time will run from the date of the latter decree. The words of section 48 should be interpreted as they stand, viz., the date of the decree must be one date alone and from that date twelve years must be calculated. [p. 750, col. 1.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J. (in the referring order):—The decision on a question of law in one proceeding is not res judicata in any later proceeding except to this extent, namely, that the right which was the object-matter of the former proceeding and was established in favour of one party cannot be questioned in the subsequent proceeding. [p. 744, col. 1.]

Civil miscellaneous second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tanjore, in Appeal Suits Nos. 598 and 653 of 1913, preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Valangiman, in Execution Petition No. 454 of 1912, in Original Suit No. 117 of 1894.

This civil miscellaneous second appeal coming on for hearing on the 7th February 1916, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and the judgment and order of the Court of first instance and the material papers in the case, and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellants, and of Mr. S. Muthiah Mudaliar, for the Respondents, and the case having stood over for consideration till the 16th of February 1916, the Court (Sadasiva Aiyar and Moore, JJ.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO FULL BENCH.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiff is the 1st appellant. The decree was passed so long ago as in January 1895. The execution petition out of which this appeal arose was filed on the 14th November 1912. The question is whether it is barred by the twelve years' period mentioned in section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The decree, as I construe it, is a mortgage-decree directing sale of the mortgaged properties, if they are not redeemed within three months by payment of the decree amount. It is also a personal decree against the 1st defendant and a decree realisable by the attachment and sale of the family properties of the defendants for any balance which might be left after the mortgaged properties are sold. Instead of postponing the passing of the personal decree till after the mortgaged properties are sold and the price fetched at the sale is ascertained to be inadequate to satisfy the amount due to the mortgagee, a personal decree contingent on the mortgaged properties not fetching the whole of the decree amount was passed at once on the 16th January 1895, according to the old practice in the mofussil. I do not think that, as contended by the respondents, a decree executable at once against the person of the 1st defendant for the whole amount decreed was intended to be passed, that is, executable even before the mortgaged properties were brought to sale. [See Paradiah v. Kumara Venkata Perumal (1)].

An order absolute for sale was passed on the 11th April 1900. The passing of an order absolute was made in execution under the old Civil Procedure Code and did not mean the passing of a final decree (according to the decisions of this Court). In accordance with the order absolute, the mortgaged properties were sold on the 3rd May 1901 and the sale was confirmed on the 12th July 1901. and the right to proceed against the person of the 1st defendant and against the family properties of the defendants granted by the decree of 16th January 1895 became ripe on there being an unsatisfied balance out of the decree amount after the sale of the mortgaged properties.

If the twelve years' period mentioned in section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure be calculated either from the date of the combined decree of 1895, or the date of the order absolute for sale, April 1900, the present execution petition of November 1912 is clearly barred. If, however, it is calculated from July 1901, when alone the decree holder's right under the decree to proceed against the person of the 1st defendant and the other properties of the defendants could be, for the first time, enforced, then the execution petition is not barred by limitation.

As I have held that the decree did not give a right to proceed against the person and other properties for the decree amount at once on the date of the passing of the decree and as no "certain" date was fixed for the accruing of that right to the decree-holder, it is arguable that section 48 (1) (b) of the Code of Civil Procedure, which prohibits any fresh application for execution after the expiration of twelve years from the date of default in making a payment which is directed by the decree to be made at a "certain date", does not apply to this case. The date on which the decree directs the balance to be paid, in default of which execution can proceed against other properties, is the date of the confirmation of a future sale of the mortgaged properties, the latter date depending on when the decree-holder applies for sale of the mortgaged properties and when the proceedings for sale become ripe and when the Court fixes the date for sale, etc. But it can so be made certain by the decree-holder bringing the mortgaged properties to sale, and may we not apply the doctrine that that is certain which can be rendered certain? In Narhar Raghunath Naphad v. Krishnaji Govind Nadgavandi (2) it was held that section 48, clause 1 (a), itself must be interpreted as meaning "the date of the decree sought to be executed if the decree is capable of execution at once or, if the decree is not capable of execution at once, the date when the decree becomes executable." I have incidentally considered this decision in my judgment in the case reported as Venkatamma v. Manikkam Nayani Varu (3). The case of Narhar Raghunath Naphad v. Krishnaji Govind Nadgavandi (2) is in respect of the material facts analogous to the present case. There a decree passed in 1892 became for the first time capable of execution in 1908 in respect of the personal remedy given to the plaintiffs in the fourth part of that decree. Until 1908 the decree in respect of that part of the remedy was merely ancillary and provisional. It was held that the twelve years' period mentioned in section 48 must be calculated from 1908 when only that part of the decree became capable of execution. Though I was inclined to follow Narhar Raghunath Naphad v. Krishnaji Govind Nadgavandi (2) in my judgment in Venkatamma v. Manikkam Nayani Varu (3), it was unnecessary to express a final opinion on that point for the purpose of that decision. Mr. Justice Napier who took part with me in the decision in Venkatamma v. Manikkam Nayani Varu (3) expressed still greater doubts than myself as regards the correctness of the construction of section 48 in Narhar Raghunath Naphad v. Krishnaji Govind Nadgavandi (2) and of the construction of Article 182, old Article 179, in Muhammad Suleman Khan v. Muhammad Yar Khan (4), the analogy of which decision was relied on in Narhar Raghunath Naphad v. Krishnaji Govind Nadgavandi (2).

Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar suggested that the decision as to the construction of section 48 is not necessary in this case, because it had been held in a prior execution application of 1910 that that application was not barred as the twelve years should be calculated only from July 1901. But as the applicability of the bar by section 48 to the present execution application does not necessarily depend upon the former application of 1910 being barred, in other words, as this application need not necessarily be within time if the former application of 1910 is held to be within time, I do not think that there is anything in the contention of the appellants' Vakil on this question of res judicata, the decision on a question of law in one proceeding not being res judicata in any later proceeding except to this extent, namely, that the right which was the object-matter of the former proceeding and was established in favour of one party cannot be questioned in the subsequent proceeding. See Mangalathammal v. Narayanaswami Aiyar (5) and Palaniappa Chettiar v. Savari Naidoo (6).

Returning then to the main question, the case of Venkata v. Perumal Prayag Dossjee (7) was quoted by the respondents' learned Vakil as in his favour. The decree in that case was construed by the District Judge (see his "finding") as a decree granting only a provisional personal remedy, provisional on the sale of the mortgaged property not fetching the full decree amount. But it does not appear that the learned Judges of this Court (Oldfield and Tyabji, JJ.) accepted that finding, as the following sentence occurs in their judgment:—"We think it sufficient that the decree before us was never at any time, after it was passed, inexecutable." But they also state that "it did not provide for the payment of any money by defendant on a certain date," thus showing that on the date of the decree, the mortgagor was not made liable at once to pay personally the whole decree amount. Anyhow, I have been unable to fully understand the reasoning of the judgment in that case. Narhar Raghunath Naphad v. Krishnaji Govind Nadgavandi (2) is referred to in the judgment as also Venkatamma v. Manikkam Nayani Varu (3), but no dissent is expressed from Narhar Raghunath Naphad v. Krishnaji Govind Nadgavandi (2). I think that even if the words of section 48, clause (1) (a), cannot be extended as held by the Bombay High Court in Narhar Raghunath Naphad v. Krishnaji Govind Nadgavandi (2) so as to include the later date when a decree becomes executable, the decision therein can be supported on the ground that the words "certain date" in clause (1) (b) might be made to include the future date which is rendered certain by proceedings and facts ordinarily expected to take place. For instance, let us take a case where a compromise decree is passed making a certain sum payable to a minor girl on her marriage, the minor being six years old on the date of the decree. Supposing that the marriage takes place when she attains her nineteenth year, more than twelve years after the decree—Is section 48 to be treated as a bar to execution because the date of her marriage was not "certain" in the ordinary sense on the date of the decree?

I would, therefore, refer for a decision of a Full Bench the following question:—

Where a mortgage-decree for sale includes also a provisional decree for recovery of any balance from the other properties of the mortgagor in case the sale-proceeds of the mortgaged properties are found insufficient, to satisfy the entire decree amount and where the mortgaged properties are afterwards sold and the sale-proceeds are insufficient, from what date is the twelve years' period mentioned in section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure to be calculated where an application is made to enforce the decree for the balance against the judgment-debtor's other properties?

AIYASAMIER v. VENKATACHELA MUDALI.

MOORE, J.—The decree in this case is similar in its terms to the decree which the learned Judges had to construe in Venkata Perumal v. Prayag Dossjee (7), which is against the appellants.

The decree directs first the sale of the mortgaged properties in default of payment of the decree amount within three months and that the 1st defendant personally and the common family properties of the defendants shall be liable for any balance not obtained by the decree. The decree was not, I think, executable against 1st defendant personally and the family properties until after the sale of the mortgaged properties had taken place. In fact, as my learned brother has pointed out, the right to proceed against 1st defendant personally and the family properties of the defendants was contingent on there being an unsatisfied balance out of the decree amount after the sale of the mortgaged properties. Narhar Raghunath Naphad v. Krishnaji Govind Nadgavandi (2) is referred to but not expressly dissented from in Venkata Perumal v. Prayag Dossjee (7), and I confess that I have found some difficulty in following the reasoning of the judgment in the latter case.

The learned Judges (Oldfield and Tyabji, JJ.) observe that 'authority is unsettled as to the portion of section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure applicable to such a decree, and go on to say "that the decree before us was never at any time inexecutable and that it did not provide for the payment of any money by the defendant on a certain date." The effect of the decision appears to be that in the opinion of the learned Judges the period of twelve years' limitation in that particular case must be calculated from the date of the decree, and not from the date when the sale-proceeds of the mortgaged properties prove insufficient and the balance is ascertained.

In Venkata v. Manikkyam Nayani Varu (3) my learned brother was inclined to follow Narhar Raghunath Naphad v. Krishnaji Govind Nadgavandi (2), while Napier, J., doubted the correctness of the decision.

I accordingly agree in the question which my learned brother proposes to refer to a Full Bench,

This civil miscellaneous second appeal coming on for hearing on the 18th July 1916, upon the question referred for the decision of the Full Bench, upon perusing the Order of Reference and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. A. V. Viswantha Sastri for Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for Appellants Nos. 3 to 5, and of Mr. S. Muthiah Mudaliar, for the Respondents, and the case having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court expressed the following

OPINION.

ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The answer to the question referred to the Full Bench should be that the period of limitation under section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure runs from the date when, after the remedy against the mortgaged property has been exhausted, it is ascertained that there is a balance due to be recovered from the defendant and his other properties. The decree in this case was passed before the present Code of Civil Procedure came into operation, and under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. Properly speaking, there should have been first a decree for sale of the mortgaged properties, and if the mortgaged properties were found insufficient, a separate decree or order should then have been made for realization of the balance from the person and other properties of the judgment-debtor. But there was a very prevalent practice in the mofussil Courts to draw up one decree providing for the sale of the mortgaged property and if the sale-proceeds were insufficient to satisfy the decree, for recovery of the balance from the other properties of the mortgagor. A combined decree like this, though irregular, has been held to be within the competency of the Court and binding on the parties—See Dinabandhu Nandi v. Mashuda Khatun (8). It has further been ruled that in such cases, it is not necessary to obtain another separate decree or order under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, see Periasami Kone v. Muthia Chettiar (9).

That was the state of law, when section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure which now provides the limit of time for execution was enacted. It is in these words:—

"Where an application to execute a decree not being a decree granting an injunction has been made, no order for the execution of the same decree shall be made upon any fresh application presented after the expiration of twelve years from (a) the date of the decree sought to be executed, or, (b) where the decree or any subsequent order directs any payment of money or the delivery of any property to be made at a certain date or at recurring periods, the date of the default in making the payment or delivery in respect of which the applicant seeks to execute the decree." I am not prepared to hold that clause (b) applies to decrees like the one under consideration, for they cannot be said to direct payment or delivery of property at a "certain" date. For that clause to apply, the date should be fixed in the decree or at least should be ascertainable from its terms. We have not been referred to any authority for applying the maxim "whatever can be made certain is to be treated as certain" to the construction of a Statute of Limitation and I am not aware of any.

I think, however, the case falls under clause (a). There is no good reason for holding that the date of the decree sought to be executed must necessarily be the date put down at the time it was drawn up. The Legislature by using the qualifying words "sought to be executed" seems to me to have indicated that the date is to be ascertained with reference to the time when the decree becomes capable of execution. Otherwise, there are cases in which, if time were to be reckoned from the date when the judgment is pronounced, which as provided in the Code of Civil Procedure (Order XX, rule 7) is the date which the decree must bear, the result would be that the decree-holder would not be able to execute the decree at all; for instance where a decree directs something to be done upon a certain contingency, such as in the case mentioned by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., where a decree for partition provides for an amount to be spent for the marriage of a girl belonging to a Hindu family in the event of and when the marriage takes place. A decree may give more than one relief, some of them may be enforceable at once and some can only be enforced at future dates either fixed in the decree or depending on the happening of a particular event. A decree is defined as 'the formal expression of an adjudication which, so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit'. When the reliefs given in respect of those rights are distinct and enforceable at different periods of time, then for purposes of execution, there are in fact more than one decree though embodied in one document. In such cases, it is only reasonable to hold that the date of the decree sought to be executed within the meaning of section 48, clause (a), of the Code of Civil Procedure may not be what it bears on its face. It is the date when the particular adjudication sought to be enforced becomes ripe for execution according to the terms of the decree.

This is the view of the law adopted in Ratnachalam Ayyar v. Venkatrama Ayyar (10) and in Narhar Raghunath Naphad v. Krishnaji Govind Nagavandi (2). In Vydia-natha Iyer v. Subramanian Pattar (11) the learned Judges seem to have gone even further, holding that in cases of this class, time begins to run for the whole of the decree only from the time of the ascertainment of the amount left undetermined. But I do not wish to express any decided opinion as to whether this is correct. The opposite view was expressed in Jnanendranath Bose v. Khulna Loan Company, Limited (12) and by this Court in Venkata Perumal v. Prayag Dossjee (7), where it was held that time must be calculated from the date which the decree bears on the face of it, and it makes no difference whether that part of the decree which is sought to be executed did not become capable of being enforced until afterwards. For the reason which I have given, I am of opinion that the ruling in Ratnachalam Ayyar v. Venkatrama Ayyar (10) and Narhar Raghunath Naphad v. Krishnaji Govind Nagavandi (2) is correct and the case reported as Venkata Perumal v. Prayag Dossjee (7), so far as this point is concerned, must be overruled.

The answer will be as proposed by Seshagiri Aiyar, J., and myself.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I am of the same opinion. The decree in this case was passed in January 1895. Its terms are "that the defendants do pay to the plaintiff the suit amount with costs and with interest on the suit amount at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from the date of the plaint till the date of realization of the amount within three months from this date, that in default the mortgaged properties shall be sold by public auction and if there be balance even after that, it shall be recovered by the plaintiff from the 1st defendant and the common family properties of both the defendants." Even under the Transfer of Property Act, the decree for the balance ought to have been passed only on ascertaining the amount remaining due after the sale of the hypotheca. Nonetheless, the loose practice of passing a combined decree for sale as well as for the recovery of the balance in case the sale proceeds resulted in a deficit was generally prevalent. The new Code of Civil Procedure, by making section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act part of the procedure to be followed in the framing of decrees, has drawn pointed attention to what a mortgage-decree should contain at the outset, and when the personal decree for the balance should be passed. It was held by Mookerji, J., in Dinabandhu Nandi v. Mashudah Katun (8) that a composite decree like the present one, "though not strictly in conformity with the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, is a good and valid decree as between the parties thereto." It has also been held that in the case of such decree it is not necessary to apply for a further order under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, after exhausting the mortgaged properties: Sadho Singh v. Maharaja of Benares (13) and Periasami Kone v. Muthia Chettiar (9).

If the decree is binding on the parties, and if it is executable without a further application for granting a personal decree, the next question is, when does it become executable. In Kommachi Kather v. Pakker (14), it was held by this Court that it is only on the ascertainment of the deficit that the decree is executable. The observations of the Banerji and Richards, JJ., in Munawar Husain v. Jani Bijai Shankar (15) show that any application to execute the personal decree before the hypotheca is sold will not be in accordance with law and will not be regarded as a step-in-aid of execution. Periasami Kone v. Muthia Chettiar (9) speaks of such an application as one which the Courts should never entertain.

Now comes the crucial question whether under section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure, time begins to run against the decree-holder from the date of the composite decree or only from the date when it becomes executable against the person and the other properties of the judgment-debtor. If the parties are bound by the terms of the decree, and if it cannot be given effect to until the happening of a contemplated contingency, limitation cannot be said to run against the party seeking to enforce his rights until he is in a position to avail himself of the advantage. The essence of the law of limitation is to provide against dilatoriness and negligence in the enforcement of a man's rights. But where the party is unable to seek his remedies, it cannot be said that he has failed to avail himself of the cause of action that has accrued to him.

It is true that under section 48, the twelve years' period runs from the date of the decree sought to be executed. As pointed out by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in the order of reference, the literal construction of this section would render nugatory clauses in partition decrees directing payment of sums of money for marriages, etc., on the performance of the ceremonies. Ex facie such sums would not be recoverable at once; for the contingency may never happen. Consequently, if the twelve years are to be reckoned from the date of the decree, the party in very many cases will be without a remedy.

It is a well recognised principle of jurisprudence that "where the language of a Statute, in its ordinary meaning and grammatical construction, leads to a manifest contradiction of the apparent purpose of the enactment, or to some inconvenience or absurdity, hardship, or injustice presumably not intended, a construction may be put upon it which modifies the meaning of the words, and even the structure of the sentence." Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, page 344*. It is on this principle, I take it, that the decision of the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court in Shedds Daulatram Marwari v. Narayan Asaji (16) proceeds. Vylianatha Iyer v. Subramania Pattar (11) and Ratnachalam Ayyar v. Venkatram Ayyar (10) lay down that notwithstanding the date of the decree, it becomes executable, so as to invite limitation against the party not able to seek relief at once, only when the decree is capable of execution and not before. The learned Judges who decided Venkata Perumal v. Prayag Dossjee (7) have taken a different view, and they are supported by Jnanendra-nath Bose v. Khulna Loan Company, Limited (12). The course of decisions in this Presidency is the other way. I would, therefore, overrule Venkata Perumal v. Prayag Dossjee (7) and answer the reference by saying that limitation began to run in the case of the decree under execution only when the balance was ascertained.

PHILLIPS, J.—This reference has arisen from the fact that the question referred has been answered in two different ways, in one way by this Court in Venkata Perumal v. Prayag Dossjee (7) and in another way by the Bombay High Court in Narhar Raghunath Naphad v. Krishnaji Gorind Nadgavandi (2). The Bombay High Court has held that the date from which the limitation is to run is the date when the decree became in all its parts ripe for execution, that is to say, when the personal remedy became available to the decree-holder. In Venkata Perumal v. Prayag Dossjee (7), Oldfield and Tyabji, JJ., have held that the period of limitation must run from the date of the decree. The decision of the Bombay High Court is supported by a decision in Muhammad Suleman Khan v. Muhammad Yar Khan (4), where it was held that, under Article 179 of the Limitation Act of 1877, the date of the decree from which the three years' limitation is to run must necessarily apply only where there is a decree or order which can at its date be executed. In Vylianatha Iyer v. Subramania Pattar (11) it was held "For the purposes of limitation regarding execution of a decree the decree must be taken as a whole and ordinarily when a portion of the decree is not executable by reason of the fact that the amount due under that portion is left to be determined at a future time, limitation begins to run as regards execution of the whole decree only from the time of ascertainment of the amount left undetermined, even though it might have been open to the party to have executed the other portions earlier." Those two cases did not raise a question under section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but under the Limitation Act, and they are not direct authority for the present case. In Sabhanatha Dikshatar v. Subba Lakshmi Ammal (17), in the case of a decree for payment of a certain sum annually as maintenance, it was held that execution was barred by limitation when the application was put in more than three years from the previous application, and similarly in Yusuf Khan v. Sirdar Khan (18). In Ratnachalam Ayyar v. Venkatarama Ayyar (10) it was also held, "A decree which leaves matters to be subsequently ascertained becomes capable of execution as to them only when they are ascertained; and an application for execution will not be barred if presented within three years of the time when, by such matters being settled, it becomes executable."

The authorities are clearly conflicting, and I think we must turn to the section for determining what is the correct interpretation of it.

Section 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure lays down:—Where an application to execute a decree not being a decree granting an injunction has been made, no order for execution of the same decree shall be made upon any fresh application presented after the expiration of twelve years from (a) the date of the decree sought to be executed, or, (b) where the decree or any subsequent order directs any payment of money or the delivery of any property to be made at a certain date or at recurring periods, the date of the default in making the payment or delivery in respect of which the applicant seeks to execute the decree.

(17) 7 M. 80; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 641.

AIYASAMIER v. VENKATACHELA MUDALI.

It is suggested by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in his order of reference, that, possibly, clause (b) might cover the present case "on the ground that the words 'certain date' might be made to include the future date which is rendered certain by proceedings and facts ordinarily expected to take place." But, with all deference, it appears to me that, in the present case, there is no decree for payment at a certain date because the decree provides, firstly, for the sale of the mortgaged properties, and it is only in case the proceeds of the sale are insufficient to extinguish the debt that any necessity arises for payment under the personal decree, and it can hardly be said, when it is not even certain that any payment will have to be made, that it orders payment at a certain date. In this view, clause (b) is not applicable to the present case, and the application would be barred unless it is in time under clause (a). Under clause (a) we have to compute the period from the date of the decree sought to be executed. The words, in themselves, are very clear for a decree can only bear one date, but the matter has been somewhat complicated by the rulings to which I have referred above, that similar words in the Schedule to the Limitation Act are to be modified by reading into the words "the date of the decree" the words "the date when the decree becomes executable." This addition to the words of the Statute has, it appears to me, been suggested in order to avoid hardship and to give a reasonable meaning to the words contained in the Statute. A similar addition may be read into section 48 (a), but this is no authority for going even farther. The Legislature has laid down a period of twelve years as the maximum period within which a decree can be executed (save in the case of fraud) and presumably this period has been fixed with a view to avoid a prolonged harassing of the judgment-debtor, and consequently I think the section must be strictly construed. Assuming that "the date of the decree" means "the date when the decree becomes executable," I can see no reason for adding the words "and any subsequent date on which a further relief is granted", more especially when the decree is one which ought not to have been passed in its present form. The trouble in this case has arisen from the fact that the decree is erroneous. The decree for the sale of the mortgaged properties should first have been made, and subsequently a personal decree given for any balance outstanding. It would have been open to the decree holder to have the decree amended by omitting the personal decree. In that case, if a personal decree had been subsequently given, twelve years' time would have run from the date of that decree. It has been held that a decree must be treated as a whole [vide Vudianath Iyer v. Subramania Partar (11) and Viraraghava Ayyangar v. Iorammal (19)]. In Ashfaq Husain v. Gauri Sahai (20), it was even held by the Privy Council that, where there were two decrees, one against several defendants and a subsequent decree against another defendant who had been ex parte at the first hearing, the period of limitation did not begin to run until the date of the subsequent decree against this one defendant. These cases are authority for holding that there can be only one date from which limitation is to proceed. What is suggested should be done in the present case is, that limitation as regards one part of the decree should run from the date of the decree, and as regards another part of it, from the date when that portion becomes ripe for its execution. If, however, there is only one date from which limitation begins to run, it does not appear to me possible to construe this one decree as having two separate dates for the commencement of limitation. There is nothing in the words of section 48, clause (a), to support this theory, unless one can read something into that section which is not there. In consequence of the law having been laid down to that effect, I would prefer to interpret the words as they stand, and would hold that the date of the decree must be one date alone and from that date twelve years must be calculated. It is the view taken in Venkata Perumal v. Prayag Dossjee (7) by a Bench of this Court and also by the Calcutta High Court in Jnanendranath Bose v. Khulna Loan Company, Limited (12) and I would prefer to follow these decisions rather than the one of Narhar Raghunath Naphad v. Krishnaji Govind Nagavandi (2). In this view, in answer to the question referred, I would hold that the date mentioned in section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure is the date of the decree and not the date when the sale-proceeds of the mortgaged properties had been found to be insufficient to satisfy the decree.

This case coming on for hearing after the expression of the opinion of the Full Bench on the question referred for decision by the order dated the 16th of February 1916, the Court (Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Napier) delivered on the 18th September 1916 the following

SAMINATHA ASARI—RESPONDENT No. 1

versus

G. GOPALAKRISHNA AIYENGAR—

PETITIONER No. 3—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182—Execution of decree, application for—Last intervening application by hostile claimant—Prior applicant, whether representative of petitioner.

An application for execution of a decree which is presented more than three years after a prior application by a person not entitled to execute the decree and claiming hostilely to the petitioner, is barred under Article 182 of the Limitation Act. The prior applicant cannot be treated as the representative of the petitioner to the prejudice of the judgment-debtor. [p. 752, col. 1.]

A mortgagee decree-holder having died in 1908, his widow, on 24th November 1910, made an application for execution of the decree, which was opposed by the alleged adopted son of the decree-holder. In 1912, the latter filed a suit to declare his adoption and it was upheld on 21st July 1913. He made the present application for execution more than three years after the application by the widow.

Held, that the application by the widow having been hostile to the petitioner, she could not be treated as the representative of the petitioner to the prejudice of the judgment-debtor and that the present application was, therefore, barred. [p. 752, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Mayavaram, in Appeal Suit No. 26 of 1915, preferred against that of the Principal District Munsif, Kumbakonam, in Execution Petition for Revision No. 388 of 1914 (Original Suit No. 317 of 1902).

FACTS are clear from the following judgment of the Subordinate Judge:—

"1. This appeal arises out of an execution petition for enforcement of the mortgage decree in Original Suit No. 317 of 1902 on the file of the Principal District Munsif, Kumbakonam, by sale of the hypotheca.

2. The decree in the suits was obtained by one Gopalasami Aiyengar. After his death, his widow Kannammal came on record as 2nd plaintiff. On the latter's death, the petitioner was added as 3rd plaintiff, as being the adopted son and legal representative of the original decree-holder.

3. There were some seven applications for execution filed in the case. The first applications were put in by the original decree-holder Gopalasami Aiyangar. The decree was made absolute on the second application. The third application was filed by the widow of the original decree-holder Kannammal, as his legal representative. The remaining applications were put in by the present petitioner as adoptive son of the original decree-holder. The applications Nos. 3 to 5 were dismissed without any effective steps being taken. The sixth application was also dismissed after service of notice on some of the defendants for non-payment of batta in regard to the other defendants. The seventh is the final application by the present petitioner. All the applications were filed within three years of each other, and within twelve years from the date of the decree.

4. The final application was opposed by the 1st defendant, the opposition being based on the following grounds:—

- (1) That the petitioner's alleged adoption is not true.
- (2) That the application is not sustainable without the production of a succession certificate.
- (3) That the application is barred by limitation, since the third application by the widow of the original decree-holder was not a valid one and cannot enure to the benefit of the petitioner.

* * * *

8. The remaining point raised in the appeal relates to the question of limitation.

It is based on the ground that the third application for execution by the widow of the original decree-holder was invalid, the petitioner's adoption having admittedly taken place during the lifetime of the original decree-holder. If the said application be held to be invalid as put in by a person having no right to do so, the present application would be barred by limitation. If it be held to be valid, the application could be within time.

9. In reference to the question under notice there seems to be no authority directly bearing on the point. From the deposition of the petitioner's brother Srinivasa Ragavachariar (P. W. No. 1), it would appear there were misunderstandings between the petitioner and his adoptive mother Kannammal after the death of the original decree-holder. The petitioner himself established his adoption in the course of the decree in Original Suit No. 47 of 1912, on the file of the Kumbakonam Sub-Court (Exhibit A), decided on 21st July 1913. The original decree-holder having died in 1908, his widow Kannammal put in the third application (24th November 1910), "before petitioner could establish his adoption, as representing the estate of her husband ignoring the petitioner's adoption." In this view of the matter her application may not be considered as put in by a person having no right whatever to do so. It would seem to have been put in by a person professing to represent the estate on the assumption of the non-existence of the petitioner's adoption, which necessitated the institution of the suit, Original Suit No. 47 of 1912, by the petitioner. That being so, the application by the widow was a valid one on the analogy of the rulings cited in the order of the lower Court (see Rustomji's Law of Limitation at pages 497 and 498).

10. For the appellants themselves, reliance is placed on the case of Saramma v. Seshayya (1), where it was held that an application for execution made by a mother as guardian on behalf of her son who was really a major at the time, was not an application in accordance with law. In that case, the son being really a major as to which there was no doubt whatever, his mother had not even an apparent right to put in the application. In the present case the petitioner's adoption itself being in dispute between him and his adoptive mother, the latter had prima facie right to apply for execution of the decree standing in the name of her late husband, though such right vanished subsequently by reason of the adoption being established in the course of the litigation. This circumstance would seem to differentiate the present case from the ruling cited for the appellants.

11. For these reasons I am of opinion that the petitioner's final application for execution is within time."

Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyengar, for the Appellant.

BALBIR PRASAD v. KARAN SINGH.

Mr. A. Krishnasami Aiyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We cannot agree with the lower Appellate Court's conclusion that the application by the widow enured for the benefit of the adopted son, the present petitioner. For the cases they have relied on relate either to the representation of the real judgment-debtor by some other person or to the representation of the decree-holder by a person not claiming hostilely against him, as the widow was against petitioner. The authorities in question being irrelevant, we have not been shown any other ground on which the widow can be treated as the representative of the petitioner to the prejudice of the judgment-debtor. We allow the appeal, set aside the lower Court's decision and dismiss the execution petition with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 5, applicability of—Execution—Appeal—Application to stay execution, maintainability of.

The provisions of Order XLI, rule 5, are applicable mutatis mutandis to applications on the execution side. [p. 752, col. 2.]

An application made by an appellant to an appeal pending on the execution side in the High Court, asking for an order to restrain the Court of first instance from taking any steps in execution pending the disposal of the appeal, is entertainable under Order XLI, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. [p. 752, col. 2.]

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Applicants,
Messrs. Pearey Lal Banerji and Sarat Chandra Chaudhri, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application of an unusual character. The position of the parties is as follows:—

The applicants are judgment-debtors and the opposite party are decree-holders.

Under a certain decree for sale on a mortgage, it is common ground that the decree directed the sale of some share in a particular mahal. It so happened that the decree was ambiguous. A difficulty arose on the execution side as to whether it was a $\frac{1}{4}$ th share of this mahal or a $\frac{1}{8}$ th share which was to be sold. The question must be determined primarily on the wording of the decree, though the surrounding circumstances may have to be taken into consideration.

The Court below has ordered a $\frac{1}{4}$ th share of the mahal to be sold, and the sale has already taken place, but an appeal against that order has been admitted, and is pending before this Court, raising the question whether it was $\frac{1}{4}$ th share and not $\frac{1}{8}$ th share which should have been sold. Now the judgment-debtor has presented this application praying for an order directing the Court below not to confirm the sale pending the disposal of this appeal. I must make it clear that in the sale held under the decree the decree-holder purchased the property so that no question could arise of the rights of third parties. The question at issue will be decided between the parties to the decree itself.

There has been considerable argument before me as to the precise provisions of the Civil Procedure Code applicable to the present application.

Personally I have no doubt that the application is under Order XLI, rule 5, and has to be dealt with as such. On behalf of the decree-holders it is argued that this rule is not applicable, as the execution proceedings terminated with the sale and confirmation cannot be regarded as a step-in-aid of execution.

The provisions of Order XLI, rule 5, are only applicable mutatis mutandis to applications on the execution side. The rule as it stands presupposes a regular application in a suit, the decree in which is sought to be executed during the pendency of the appeal.

Here the appeal is before this Court on the execution side and the applicant is asking for an order to restrain the Court of first instance from taking any steps in the matter pending the disposal of the appeal.

VAITHILINGA ODAYAR v. AYYATHORAI ODAYAR.

I am satisfied that such an application is entertainable, being subject to the provisions of Order XLI, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code in so far as they can be made applicable.

Looking at the matter from this point of view, I do not think this application should be granted. So far as the papers before me are concerned they show that no security has been furnished or tendered. The position taken up by the applicants-judgment-debtors is that, in the case of an order postponing the confirmation of the sale being passed, the property itself will remain available to meet the claims of the decree-holders-respondents in the event of the appeal failing.

This argument overlooks the fact that as matters stand the decree-holders are entitled to the possession of the property and the enjoyment of its profits. An order postponing the confirmation of the sale would certainly deprive them of this advantage and put them to undeserved loss in case the appeal is dismissed.

This view of the case being pointed out to the applicants they said they might be required to furnish security.

I do not think they are entitled to this indulgence and I am further of opinion that considerable difficulty might be felt by the decree-holder in obtaining compensation in the event of the appeal failing.

On behalf of the applicants it was contended that confirmation of the sale would leave them without any remedy in the event of the appeal succeeding, and it was sought to invoke the inherent jurisdiction of the Court in order to stay further proceedings in order to prevent the prosecution of the appeal from becoming purposeless or futile. I am quite unable to accede to this view of the case.

At the hearing of the appeal this Court will be sitting on the execution side, and fully seised of the case. If the appeal succeeds it will be upon a finding that the decree directed the sale only of $\frac{1}{8}$ th of the mahal. If this Court arrives at that conclusion I have no doubt that it can set aside the sale.

The Court below is bound to confirm the sale, provided the conditions of Order

XXI, rule 92, have been satisfied. Its order of confirmation will necessarily be subject to the result of the appeal.

For these reasons I do not think that the order applied for would be equitable and justified.

I dismiss the application. The interim order is discharged.

Application dismissed.

Caste Disabilities Removal Act (XXI of 1850), s. 1—Apostasy, effect of, on descendants of convert—Claim, reversionary, by descendant of convert to estate of deceased Hindu, maintainability of—‘Renouncing,’ ‘excluded,’ ‘deprived,’ meaning of.

The removal of disabilities on rights of inheritance by an apostate provided for by Act XXI of 1850 applies only to the convert himself and not to his descendants. [p. 754, col. 1.]

The descendants of a convert to Christianity, therefore, cannot maintain a reversionary suit to the estate of a deceased Hindu. [p. 754, col. 1; p. 755, col. 1.]

Bhagwant Singh v. Kallu, 11 A. 100 A. W. N. (1938) 248; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 49, dissented from.

Per Oldfield, J.—The ‘renunciation’ and ‘deprivation’ referred to in section 1 of the Act apply only to rights which have accrued and not to persons who were born in another religion before the succession opened. Under the section protection is, in terms, given only to one person, the one who has renounced or been excluded or deprived, and it cannot be extended by construction to others. [p. 754, col. 1.]

Per Bakewell, J.—The words “having been excluded and being deprived of caste” connote an act directed against a particular person, and do not apply to an individual who is not a member of a particular community because by reason of his birth he is included within another community. JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The plaintiffs, Christians, sued to recover the estate of a deceased Hindu, as his reversioners. That is, they claimed in virtue of their own relationship to him, not through any earlier reversioner, such as Saminada Odayar, the member of their branch of the family, who first embraced Christianity. The lower Appellate Court following Bhagwant Singh v. Kallu (1) held that they were relieved from all religious disability by Act XXI of 1850 and remanded the suit for decision on its merits. The question is whether this decision is right.

The persons relieved by the Act are those, who (1) renounce (2), have been excluded from the communion of a religion, (3) are deprived of caste. Renunciation and deprivation are applicable only to rights, which have accrued, and, therefore, are irrelevant in the case of plaintiffs, who were born Christians, before the succession opened. They, therefore, are not covered by descriptions (1) and (3). As regards (2) there is more difficulty. For the word "exclude" is applied in ordinary parlance to refusal of rights newly claimed and also deprivation of rights already enjoyed, the meaning as given in Webster's Dictionary being (1) "to shut out; to hinder from entrance or admission; to debar from participation or enjoyment; the opposite to admit and (2) to thrust out; to expel." It is an argument against the interpretation of "exclude" in the Act in the first of these senses that it is used in the context between two terms, which, as I have pointed out, express a different idea. It is further material that, if the Legislature had intended the result entailed by plaintiffs' contention, the perpetual right of the descendants of a convert to rely on the law of his birth for purposes of inheritance from unconverted relatives, it could and would have effected it by shorter and more explicit language.

These arguments are supported by the fact that plaintiff's contention entails consequences repugnant to reasonableness and consistency. In the case of the original convert, his status will be fixed at the date of his conversion and his original law will be invoked only in order to determine whether his relationship entitles him to inherit, not whether that relationship exists. No anomalies, therefore, beyond the initial one, involved in the application of his original law, will be entailed. With his descendant that case is different. He, having to establish both the points referred to above, will find the concession involved in plaintiffs' interpretation of the Act illusory, since his descent will have to be traced through some Christian marriage, which will not be valid according to the law under application and can be established, only if the claimant is allowed to apply both his abandoned and his present law as may suit each portion of his case. And if it be said that this is contemplated, the suggestion is so startling that a clearer expression of it than the Act contains may fairly be required.

The only decision of a High Court on the point [Bhagwant Singh v. Kallu (1)] is no doubt in plaintiffs' favour. It is based on considerations first of the preamble and then of the body of the Act. In respectfully dissenting from it. I observe first that the preamble set out a part only of section 9 of the Bengal Regulation VII of 1832, to which it refers. Reference to the whole and to section 8 of which it is a continuation, shows that (1) their object was to settle all cases of conflict of laws, one omitted portion restricting the operation of section 8 to "bona fide professors" of the religion in the question at the time of the trial and the whole having no special reference to the particular case of conversion, (2) the settlement consisted, not only in exempting either party from disabilities entailed by the Hindu or Muhammadan Law, but also, as provided in the other omitted portion, in applying the principles of justice, equity and good conscience. This recognised, the attempt to identify the purpose of the Act with that stated in the preamble or to explain the one with reference to the other must be abandoned. As regards the argument from the body of the Act the learned Judges, I think, overlooked the fact that protection is in terms given only to one person, the one who has renounced or been excluded; and, with all due deference, they were not justified in extending it by construction to others.

As the Act will not bear the construction proposed by plaintiff, the appeal must be allowed, the District Munsif's decision dismissing their suit being restored with costs throughout.

BAKEWELL, J.—I agree with regard to the construction of Act XXI of 1850, the plaintiffs are not "excluded from the communion of any religion or deprived of castes" by reason of their own conduct or by anything except what was done or suffered by their remote ancestor. The consequence of this Act is that his descendants form part of a community separated from his other relations by the observance of a different religion and other usages and governed by a different system of law.

In my opinion the words "having been excluded and being deprived of castes" connote an act directed against a particular person, and do not apply to an individual who is not a member of a particular community because by reason of his birth he is included within another community.

The plaintiffs and defendants belong to different communities governed by different laws of inheritance and the former desire to bring themselves within both systems, in so far as they can deprive benefit from so doing and argue that the provisions of the Mitakshara which exclude them have been repealed.

I do not think that the wording of the Act supports this contention.

Cess Act (IX B. C. of 1880), ss. 14, 20—Suit for recovery of rent due under kabuliyat, whether comes under the Act.

A suit brought by a landlord to recover certain rent, alleged to have been due by the tenant under a kabuliyat, does not come under section 14 of the Cess Act (IX B. C. of 1880), and, therefore, the Court is not precluded by reason of section 20 of the Act from giving the plaintiff-landlord a larger amount than the amount mentioned in the cess return. [p. 755, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Midnapur, dated the 22nd August 1914, reversing that of the Munsif, 3rd Court, at that place, dated the 14th August 1912.

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the learned Additional District Judge of Midnapur, dated the 22nd August 1914 reversing the decision of the Munsif. The suit was brought to recover certain rent alleged to have been due under a kabuliyat, the rent being payable in paddy. The defendant in their written statement denied the paddy rent but admitted a cash rent of Rs. 6-12-0. So, presumably, the only question to try was whether the rent was, as stated by the plaintiff, the paddy rent or whether the story set up by the defendants that the rent was a cash rent of Rs. 6-12-0 was correct. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court found the rent to be a cash rent; but he has given a smaller rent than that admitted by the defendants and the ground on which he has done so is that he considers that by reason of section 20 of the Cess Act, IX(B. C.) of 1880, the Court is precluded from giving the plaintiff a larger amount than the amount mentioned in the cess return. The question is: "Is the view of the learned Judge right as regards that?" Apparently no issue was settled as regards that point and the learned Judge acted on the materials that were before him. But so far as we can see, this case does not come under section 14 of the Act and, therefore, the plaintiff is not limited to recover the amount mentioned in the cess return. In that view of the case, the admission of the defendants that the amount is Rs. 6-12-0 must be acted on and the decree appealed from will be varied by allowing rent at Rs. 6-12-0 instead of at Rs. 3-15-0. The parties will receive and pay costs in proportion to their respective success and failure.

Decree varied.

Per Ayling, J.—A payment under section 20 of the Limitation Act, in order to save limitation, must be a conscious act. [p. 758, col. 1.]

The mere appropriation of rents due by a mortgagee to the mortgagor towards the interest due by the latter will not save limitation, especially when the interest is payable not periodically but on a single date [p. 758, col. 1.]

First plaintiff's father effected a kanom (usufructuary) mortgage with possession to defendants' ancestor on 14th November 1874 for 30 years for Rs. 400. On 12th August 1875, he executed a simple mortgage on the same lands for Rs. 400. This latter mortgage contained a stipulation that if the principal and interest were not discharged by 13th August 1876, the mortgagees were to have jeinmam or absolute rights. In a suit for redemption of the first kanom mortgage, defendants pleaded the forfeiture clause in the second mortgage and their own adverse enjoyment in bar of plaintiffs' suit.

Held, (1) that the stipulation in the second mortgage was invalid as a clog on the equity of redemption; [p. 757, col. 2.]

(2) that the effect of the said stipulation was not to alter the character of defendants' possession from 13th August 1876 and to render it adverse to the title of the mortgagor, but that it still continued as the possession of the mortgagees; [p. 757, col. 2.]

(3) that plaintiffs were not bound to redeem the second mortgage after plaintiffs' rights thereunder had become extinguished under Article 132 of the Limitation Act; [p. 758, col. 1.]

(4) that, in the absence of a payment for interest in respect of the second mortgage, the appropriation by the defendants of rents due by them towards interest did not operate to save the bar of limitation. [p. 758, col. 1.]

Messrs. C. Madhavan Nair and T. R. Ramachendra Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

AYLING, J.—The main question for determination in this appeal is whether the plaintiffs' right of redemption is affected by the provision in Exhibit III, or by defendants' subsequent possession of the mortgaged property after the date prescribed for discharge of that document.

The facts are simple. On 14th November 1874 by Exhibit A 1st plaintiffs' father effected a mortgage with possession (kanom) of the plaint properties to defendants' ancestress Kunhachamma for 36 years for Rs. 3,000. On 12th August 1875 he executed another document Exhibit III, which is in effect a simple mortgage on the same lands for Rs. 400. It was therein provided that if the latter amount with interest thereon was not discharged by 13th August 1876 the mortgagor had no objection to the mortgagee's holding and enjoying the property as jenmam. It is admitted that the latter phrase means in absolute ownership and that the object of the clause is to terminate plaintiffs' right of redemption of both mortgages, Exhibit A and Exhibit III.

Both documents were executed long before the enactment of the Transfer of Property Act, and following the decisions in Thumbusawmy Moodelly v. Hossain Rowthen (1), Ramasami Sastrigal v. Samiyappanaykan (2) and Venkatasubbayya v. Venkayya (3) it seems to me we have no option but to hold that this clause in restraint of the right of redemption is per se inoperative.

It is, however, argued that, although this may be so, yet the effect of the agreement of parties in Exhibit III is to alter the character of the possession of defendants or their ancestor from 13th August 1876 and to render it adverse to the title of the mortgagor. This being so, defendants must after twelve years' uninterrupted possession (which is not denied), have acquired full title to the property and plaintiffs' right to redeem must be regarded as extinguished.

If no agreement of parties to a mortgage can operate, ipso facto, to clog or restrain the equity of redemption and that is the law which has been declared to be applicable in Madras from 1858 up to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act (Vide decisions above quoted) I find it difficult to understand how, consistently with this view, agreement of parties to a mortgage can affect the character of the mortgagee's possession so as to convert it from that of a mortgagee, into that of a person prescribing for a full title.

The chief authority relied on by appellants is Usuman Khan v. Nagalla Dasanna (4). In that case a relinquishment by the mortgagor in favour of the mortgagee was held invalid to extinguish the equity of redemption, but, being followed by a continuance in possession of the mortgagee for more than the statutory period, the mortgagor's right to redeem was held to be extinguished. The learned Judges were of opinion that it was open to the parties to agree in what character the mortgagee should hold possession and that they had agreed by the relinquishment above referred to, that his possession thereafter should be as absolute owner. What distinguishes that case from the present one is this. The relinquishment or agreement was not only after the expiry of the period of mortgage, but after the enactment of the Transfer of Property Act. Section 60 of the latter provides that the right of redemption may be extinguished by act of parties, and this at once removes the case from the purview of the rulings already cited. None of them are in fact referred to.

In my opinion the possession of defendants after 13th August 1876 must be treated as still that of mortgagor and not adverse to the mortgagor.

ATHAN KUTTI v. MATAVIL ILLOTH SUTARJANAM.

The only other question is whether plaintiffs are bound to redeem Exhibit III or whether defendants' rights thereunder have become extinguished under Article 132 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act.

Reliance is placed on section 20 of the Act and it is argued that defendants having admittedly failed to pay plaintiffs the poreppad due under Exhibit A, it should be presumed that they appropriated it towards the interest due under Exhibit III year by year and that each such appropriation gives a fresh starting point of limitation. This argument hardly deserves serious consideration. Exhibit III makes no provision for payment of interest annually, but only on a single date 13th August 1876. Apart from this the appropriation thereto is a pure fiction, which we are not justified in raising and which was in fact not raised in defendants' written statement. Respondent contends with some reason, that a payment under section 20 must be a conscious act. It may be taken as certain that no such appropriation was ever contemplated by the parties and it cannot be treated as a fact for the purpose of saving limitation.

Lastly it is contended that it is open to defendants to set up their right as mortgagees in a suit for possession although their right to enforce payment under Exhibit III may be barred under Article 132. No authority has been quoted which seems to support such a proposition in this case. Defendants' possession is under another mortgage, Exhibit A, which it is sought to redeem and not under Exhibit III. Their rights under the latter have clearly become time-barred and plaintiffs cannot be compelled to redeem them.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Time for payment extended to four months from this date.

SPENCER, J.—I agree, Exhibit III is dated 12th August 1875.

There can be no doubt that under the equitable principles held in Ramasami Sastrigal v. Samiyappanaykan (2), Venkaatasubbayya v. Venkayya (3) and Neeiakandhan Nambudripad v. Terunilai Ananthakrishna Ayyar (5) to be applicable to mortgages executed subsequent to 1858 and prior to 1882 the forfeiture clause must be treated as a mere clog on the equity of redemption and no bar to a suit for redemption (vide Shepherd and Brown's Transfer of Property Act, pages 239 to 243 where the history of the litigation that preceded the introduction of the Act is discussed). The effect of the Act was to preserve the same equity of redemption unfettered, section 60 providing that only an independent act of the parties or an order of Court could operate to extinguish it. [See Perayya v. Venkata (6)].

The agreement in Exhibit III that the mortgagee should enjoy the properties as his jenm if payment was not made by August 13th, 1876, cannot be treated as affording a starting point for adverse possession to run against the mortgagor, because no act was done on that date to alter the character of the mortgagee's possession. The mortgagee still remained in possession under Exhibit A, which ran for a term of 36 years from 1874. It has been found by the District Judge that Kunhachamma and her heirs and representatives did not begin to deal with the properties as their jenm earlier than twelve years before suit. Usuman Khan v. Nagalla Dasanna (4), cited for the appellants, was a case in which by a term in the original mortgage deed it was provided that on the happening of a certain event, the mortgagee was to hold possession as an absolute owner, and when that event happened the parties at once showed by their acts and admissions that they had mutually agreed to alter the character of the possession according to the terms in the deed. Shankar Din v. Gokul Prasad (7) was a case where parties to a mortgage entered into a separate arrangement or compromise limiting the right of redemption. So long as the possession of Kunhachamma is capable of being attributed to the right she acquired under Exhibit A to enjoy the land as kanomdar, there is no reason to regard it as possession adverse to the jenmi merely by reason of the inoperative clause in Exhibit III. In this connection I would refer to the observations of Bashyam Aiyangar, J., in Seshamma Shettati v. Chackaya Hegade (8) as to the incapacity of a tenant or usufructuary mortgagee by setting up a title adverse to that of his landlord or mortgagor to acquire a title inconsistent with that under which he was let into possession before the period prescribed for the determination of his tenancy or the redemption of his mortgage, as the case may be, expires.

ATHAN KUTTI v. MATAVIL ILLOTH SUTARJANAM,

As to the question whether plaintiffs were bound to redeem Exhibit III, which is styled a bond and is, I think, rightly treated by the lower Courts as a simple mortgage with a clog on the equity of redemption, the mortgagee might have sued upon it at any time up to August 8th, 1910, notwithstanding the decision of the Privy Council in Vasudeva Mudaliar v. Srinivasa Pillai (9) that suits upon simple mortgagees are governed by Article 132 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act, which allows twelve years from the date when the money becomes due.

Section 3' (1) of the Act especially allowed sixty years from the date of the money becoming due or two years from the passing of the Limitation Act of 1908 for mortgagees to institute a suit for sale or foreclosure whichever period expired first. The two years expired first, and on the 11th of January 1911 when this suit was instituted, the mortgagees had already lost their right to recover the loan.

But it is argued that the defendants being in possession are entitled to rely on Exhibit III in bar of plaintiffs' suit although a suit to enforce their rights under the document may be barred. It has been often expressed that a defendant may in equity set up a defence that a certain instrument is, by reason of its invalidity or other defect, ineffectual against him, although if he sued to have it avoided or declared a nullity, his suit would be barred by limitation [Vide Lakshmi Doss v. Roop Laul (10), Ramanasari v. Muthusami Naik (11) and Sri Kishan Lal v. Kashmiro (12)].

This is very far from establishing a proposition that a party has a substantive right to compel his opponents to discharge a barred debt before they can succeed in their suit. In Parasurama Pattar v. Venkatchalam Pattar (13), where it was held that a mortgagor and a mortgagee are under mutual obligations to make all payments provided in the mortgage deed so long as the relationship of the mortgagor and mortgagee continues; it was expressly stated that this rule did not extend to payments which the parties were liable to make otherwise than under the contract of mortgage. The liability of the parties under Exhibit III is distinct from their liability under the mortgage sought to be redeemed in the suit. Although the defendants are, no doubt, entitled by way of equitable defence to set up the clause in Exhibit III that provides against redemption after a fixed time, we have already held that this clause is inoperative to bar redemption.

The plea that limitation has been saved by the appropriation of rents towards interest is one into which I consider we cannot now enter as it is not made a ground of second appeal, nor was it argued on the receipt of a finding in the lower Appellate Court upon this question of Exhibit III being time-barred. Besides the defendants' written statement has not been printed, and we are not now in possession of the necessary materials for deciding this mixed question of law and fact.

The claim for post diem interest has not been raised in the memorandum of second appeal and must be disallowed.

I am of opinion that this second appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA—

RESPONDENT.

Costs—Land acquisition cases.

Costs in matters under the Land Acquisition Act should be calculated in the same way as in ordinary suits.

Ekambara Gramany v. Muniswamy Gramany, 31 M. 328, referred to.

First appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Lahore, dated the 27th July 1914.

Rai Sahib Lala Moti Sagar, for the Appellants.

The Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Under Punjab Government Notification No. 3254-G., dated the 31st October 1912, the Government acquired 7 kanals 5 marlas of land belonging to the Dayanand Anglo-Vedic Management and Trust Society for the purposes of the Veterinary College and Hospital, and in due course the Land Acquisition Officer gave his award which amounted to Rs. 5,252. The Dayanand Anglo-Vedic College objected to this price and put in a claim amounting to Rs. 14,500 and also claimed compensation for severance. Mr. Durga Das, who then appeared on behalf of the objectors, was asked to state what amount he claimed as compensation for severance and he undertook to do so by the next hearing. For reasons which are not apparent on the record he did not put in any formal application or make any formal statement showing what amount of compensation the objectors were claiming. But in the course of arguments he stated that the amount so claimed was Rs. 6,000. The Court rejected the objectors' application with costs and in the preparation of the memorandum of costs, apparently through an error, Rs. 335 alone was awarded as Pleader's fees, being calculated on the difference between the amount claimed and the amount awarded. The sum of Rs. 6,000 was not included in the calculation. On this the objectors applied to the Court (Divisional Judge, Lahore) asking that the question of costs should be reconsidered, and the Government through the learned Government Advocate, applied that this sum of Rs. 6,000 should also be included in the calculation. After hearing Counsel the learned Divisional Judge held that the costs in suits of this nature should be calculated as in ordinary suits. In holding this he followed Ekambara Gramany v. Muniswamy Gramany (1) and certain unreported rulings of this Court. He has accordingly held that the Pleader's costs as calculated were correct with the exception that the sum of Rs. 6,000 ought to have been included in the calculation and altered the memorandum of costs accordingly, making the total amount payable to Government on account of Pleader's fees come to Rs. 451-15-3.

From the above order the Dayanand Anglo-Vedic Management and Trust Society has filed this appeal, and we have heard Rai Sahib Moti Sagar on its behalf. Mr. Petman has referred us, in addition to the rulings cited before the lower Court, to Civil Appeal No. 144 of 1913, in which it was held that costs in matters under the Land Acquisition Act should be calculated in the same way as in ordinary suits. With these decisions we are in accord and are of opinion that the ordinary rule should apply to cases of this kind. Mr. Moti Sagar then urged that in any event, inasmuch as the Rs. 6,000 as compensation for severance was not specifically claimed, this ought not to be included in calculating costs. We are, however, unable to agree with this contention. It is clear that a claim for compensation under this head was definitely made and put in issue, and it is also clear that Mr. Durga Das, on behalf of the objectors, in the course of his arguments distinctly stated that the amount claimed under this head was the sum of Rs. 6,000. We consider, therefore, that the learned Divisional Judge was right in including this sum as having been a part of the claim advanced by the objectors.

We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 18 (a)—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 56, para (2)—Agreement to re-convey land purchased in Court auction after setting aside sale—Omission to apply for cancellation of sale—Specific performance—Contract, performance of, whether rendered impossible—Imperfect title subsequently perfected—Damages, whether adequate relief.

Defendant, a Court auction-purchaser, agreed to convey the land he purchased to plaintiff, who was the judgment-debtor, after applying to Court for cancellation of the sale, on the plaintiff depositing Rs. 100 within a specified date, which the defendant was to credit under Order XXI, rule 89, Civil Procedure Code. Plaintiff duly deposited the amount, but defendant did not get the sale set aside. In a suit for specific performance of the contract:

Held, (1) that the contract did not become impossible of performance by reason of defendant's conduct in not applying for cancellation of the sale;

(2) that the transaction being, in substance, an agreement to re-sell the property to which the defendant had only an imperfect title pending confirmation of the Court sale, the defendant was compellable to make good the contract out of the interest that he subsequently obtained;

(3) that money compensation was not an adequate relief.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Trichinopoly, in Appeal Suit No. 405 of 1913, preferred against that of the Additional District Munsif, Ariyalur, in Original Suit No. 73 of 1913.

Mr. Mir Sultan Mohideen, (with him Mr. P. Tirumalachariar), for the Appellants.

Mr. V. O. Seshachariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant purchased at Court auction certain property sold in execution of a decree obtained against plaintiff by a third party. The plaintiff thereafter agreed with the defendant that, on payment of Rs. 100 within a specified date, the defendant would apply to the Court to have the sale set aside, taking credit for the deposit made under Order XXI, rule 89 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The defendant, though he received the amount of Rs. 100, did not perform his part of the contract and get the sale set aside. The plaintiff has now been given a decree for specific performance on the footing that the contract to have the sale set aside was tantamount to a contract to reconvey the land to him.

It is argued (1) that there was no enforceable contract as, owing to the money not having been deposited in time, it became impossible to perform the contract, (2) that damages would have been an adequate remedy for non-performance.

We think that the defendant having agreed to take certain action with regard to the suit property which would have had the effect of restoring it to plaintiff's possession, and having instead placed obstacles in the way of the plaintiff getting back his land cannot take advantage of his own conduct and plead that the contract was void on account of impossibility of performance; and that the transaction being in substance an agreement to re-sell the property, to which the defendant had only an imperfect title pending the confirmation of the Court sale, the defendant can be compelled to make good the contract out of the interest he subsequently obtained. (vide section 18 (a), Specific Relief Act). Further the plaintiff's undertaking to pay Rs. 100 at once for which he was indebted to defendant was, in our opinion, a good consideration for the contract.

The whole purpose of the contract being that plaintiff should regain possession of his own land which he had lost in consequence of the Court proceedings, we do not consider that this is a case in which money compensation would have been an adequate relief.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Custom—Alienation—Gift by sonless proprietor of ancestral land to sister's son in presence of collaterals—Gujars of Jhelum Tahsil—Burden of proof.

Among Gujars of the Jhelum Tahsil a childless proprietor cannot make a valid gift of ancestral property in favour of his sister's son in presence of collaterals.

The burden of proving the validity of such a gift is on the donee.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated the 24th November 1915.

Mr. Rama Nand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Jaigopal Sethi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are fully stated in the judgment of the learned District Judge, who has granted the defendants-appellants a certificate under section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act with reference to the question of custom involved in the suit, viz., whether among Gujars of the Jhelum Tahsil a sonless proprietor can gift his ancestral land to his sister's son.

Upon this question, both the Subordinate Judge and the District Judge have concurrently held that the defendants, on whom the onus lay, have failed to prove that by custom applicable to the parties the gift of ancestral land made by Nek Alam in favour of his sister's son, Muhammad Alam, is valid in the presence of the plaintiffs who are Nek Alam's collaterals, and they have accordingly granted a decree to the plaintiffs declaring the said gift to be invalid and ineffectual against the plaintiffs' right of reversion.

I have heard arguments on both sides and have referred to the oral and documentary evidence on the record bearing on the question of custom involved in the suit, and I am of opinion that the view taken by the Courts below is correct. Both the Courts have held that the land in suit is the ancestral property of the plaintiffs and the donor Nek Alam; and notwithstanding the attempt made by the appellants' Pleader to show that the finding of the District Judge as to the land in suit being ancestral is based upon conjectures and upon wrong inferences drawn from the facts disclosed by the record, I have no hesitation in holding that the conclusion arrived at by the District Judge on this point is perfectly sound.

The land in suit being ancestral, it is not disputed that the initial onus lay upon the defendants-appellants to prove that the gift in dispute, being one by a childless proprietor in favour of his sister's son, was valid by the custom applicable to the parties. In my opinion they have entirely failed to discharge this onus. The Jhelum Gujars are an offshoot of the Gujars in the Gujrat District, and there can be no question that among Gujars in the Gujrat District a gift of ancestral land by a childless proprietor to his sister's son is not justified by custom [see Customary Law of the Gujrat District by Captain Davies, page 7; also Maulu v. Fazal Ahmad (1)]. A reference to the record of this case shows that the plaintiffs have proved instances showing that among Gujars of the Jhelum Tahsil gifts of ancestral land to daughters, sons-in-law or sisters' sons are invalid by custom, and the defendants have not produced even a single well-authenticated instance of such a gift being held valid. The statement of custom in the Customary Law of the Jhelum District by Mr. Talbot at page 59 supports the plaintiffs' claim.

I accordingly hold, in agreement with the lower Courts, that the defendants have failed to prove that by custom applicable to them the gift in dispute is valid. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 315—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 93—Sale under old Code—Sale, setting aside of, after passing of new Code—Refund of purchase-money, claim for—Procedure—Execution—Suit.

The last clause of section 115 of the old Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) prescribing that the right to recover the purchase-money on cancellation of a sale can be enforced in execution, has been repealed by O. XXI, r. 93, of the new Code (Act V of 1908). The latter rule provides for the refund of purchase-money where a sale is set aside in execution proceedings. But even where the sale was held under the old Code, if it is set aside in a separate suit after the passing of the Act V of 1908, the purchaser must enforce his claim only by a separate suit.

Mohideen Ibrahim v. Mahamed Meera Levvai, 17 Ind. Cas. 437, 12 M. L. T. 431; (1912) M. W. N. 1130; 23 M. L. J. 487, distinguished.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ganjam at Berhampore, in Appeal Suit No. 7 of 1915, preferred against that of the Principal District Munsif, Berhampore, in Miscellaneous Petition No. 1194 of 1913, in Original Suit No. 202 of 1913.

Mr. P. Narayana Murthi, for the Appellants.

Mr. H. Suryanarayana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—An application was made to the lower Court by a purchaser in a Court auction, whose purchase has been held to be bad in a separate suit on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest, and who has been deprived of the property of which he was placed in possession in the Court sale. No application was made under Order XXI, rule 91, to set aside the sale. But still it is claimed that inasmuch as the sale took place while the old Act was in force, the present petitioner is entitled to take advantage of the procedure prescribed in section 315 and claim a refund of the purchase-money by way of execution under the last clause of section 315. Whether this case will be governed by the decision in Mohideen Ibrahim v. Mahamed

Meera Levvai (1), it is not necessary to consider: for, in that case both the sale and the setting aside of the sale by separate proceedings had taken place while the old Code was in force and the right to recover back the purchase-money under the specific terms of the section had already come into existence. I shall assume in favour of the petitioner that because his sale took place while the old Act was in force he is entitled to refund of the purchase-money although the sale was set aside after the new Act came into force and can enforce that right by a separate suit. But then the further question arises whether he is entitled to take advantage of the last clause of section 315 which merely prescribes the procedure by which the right to recover the purchase-money can be enforced. That procedure is by way of execution. That has been repealed and there is a special section now which deals with this matter, namely Order XXI, rule 93, which provides for the refund of purchase-money in cases where the sale is set aside on particular grounds including want of saleable interest in the judgment-debtor in the execution proceedings. That does not apply to the present case. I do not think that the petitioner is entitled to the particular procedure prescribed in section 315, whatever his rights may be to enforce his claim, if one there is in his favour, by separate suit. On this ground I dismiss this petition with costs.

Petition dismissed.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 1913), ss. 9, 21 (2), 24—Pre-emption—Sale sanctioned by Deputy Com.

KANDULA PEDA LINGA REDDI v. KAKUM NU HANUMAYYA.

missioner—Punjab Alienation of Land Act (XIII of 1900), ss. 3 (2), 5, 21 (2)—Civil Court, power of, to inquire into action taken by Deputy Commissioner—Jurisdiction.

Section 9 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1913, repeals by implication so much of section 5 of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, 1900, as conflicts with itself and, therefore, no right of pre-emption exists in respect of any sale sanctioned by the Deputy Commissioner under section 3 (2) of the latter Act.

Section 21 (2) of the Alienation of Land Act debars a Civil Court from taking cognizance of the manner in which a Deputy Commissioner exercises his powers under the Act.

If a sale is opposed to the provisions of the Alienation of Land Act, a suit for pre-emption in respect of the sale must be dismissed under section 24 of the Pre-emption Act.

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ambala, dated the 11th February 1915.

Messrs. Sewa Ram Singh and Balwant Rai, for the Appellants.

Sheikh Marghub Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for pre-emption of land which was sold by an agriculturist to non-agriculturists with sanction of the Deputy Commissioner given under section 3 (2) of the Land Alienation Act. The lower Court, overruling a plea that section 9 of the Pre-emption Act of 1913 took away all right of pre-emption in such a case, decreed the claim. Defendants appeal to this Court.

The learned Subordinate Judge holds that section 9 of the Pre-emption Act, which lays down that no right of pre-emption shall exist in respect of any sale sanctioned by the Deputy Commissioner under section 3 (2) of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, does not override the provisions of section 5 of the Land Alienation Act, which section provides, inter alia, that the Deputy Commissioner's sanction shall not affect any question relating to a right of pre-emption. There is certainly nothing in the Pre-emption Act which states precisely that section 5 of the Land Alienation Act is not still in full force, but, granting that section 5 of the latter Act is in conflict with section 9 of the Pre-emption Act (though appellant's Counsel does not admit that there is any such conflict) we have no hesitation in holding that section 9 of the Pre-emption Act repeals by implication so much of section 5 of the Land Alienation Act as conflicts with itself (See Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 4th edition, pages 237 and 237).

Then Counsel for respondent further argues that the Deputy Commissioner did not make proper enquiry as required by section 3 (3) of the Land Alienation Act, but we cannot go into this, for section 21 (2) of the same Act debars all Civil Courts from taking cognizance of the manner in which the Deputy Commissioner exercises his powers under the Act.

Then it is urged that the sanction is no proper sanction, being initialled only and not signed in full by the Deputy Commissioner. But this plea is futile, for if there is no valid sanction the sale in question is opposed to the provisions of the Land Alienation Act, and in this case section 24 of the Pre-emption Act requires that the suit for pre-emption shall be dismissed.

Lastly Counsel for respondents refers to the order of this Court of 22nd January 1916, and urges that the plaintiff should be compensated for the interest which he could have got for his money during the time it was lying in Court. But the suit should never have been brought at all so plaintiff has only himself to thank for any loss he has sustained.

We accept the appeal and reversing the lower Court's decree we dismiss the suit with costs in both Courts.

Appeal accepted.

whether relievable—Registration Act (XVI of 1909), s. 17, Excep. cl. VI Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 99.

A decree based on the terms of a compromise between the parties to a suit for money and creating a mortgage of properties for the amount that is payable and directing sale of the properties in default of payment within a certain time, is a mortgage decree and is executable as such. An agreement in pursuance of which such a decree is passed is a lawful agreement within the meaning of section 375 of Act XIV of 1882. Section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act has no application to such a decree nor is it repugnant to public policy. [p. 766, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

KRISHNAN, J.—This appeal arises in the execution of a compromise decree of 1903, passed in a suit brought by plaintiff-respondent for money due on two promissory notes. The decree directed the defendants to pay the plaintiff Rs. 705, made up of the amount sued for, costs and interest in nine yearly instalments on specified dates and in default of payment of any one instalment on due date, to pay the whole amount due with interest at one per cent. per mensem, calculated from the date of the decree; it further directed that till the debt was discharged the schedule mentioned immoveable property be mortgaged and that "plaintiff do recover the above debt from defendants Nos. 1 and 2, from the family properties of defendants, and by auction of the mortgaged property aforesaid." Defendants did not pay any of the instalments except the first on due date; the second and third instalments were paid and received long after due dates; the other instalments were not paid at all. In 1911, plaintiff applied under Order XXXIV, rule 5 (2), for a decree "absolute" and an order was passed in his favour after notice to defendants who did not, however, appear. No formal decree was drawn up in pursuance of the order. Plaintiff then applied for execution of the decree by sale of the mortgaged property and his application was granted by both the lower Courts and the appeal is against it.

Defendants-appellants have raised before us several legal objections to the execution which I shall consider one by one. The first objection is that the compromise decree merely created a mortgage on the property but was not in itself an executable decree against it and that a separate suit should have been brought if plaintiff wanted to enforce the mortgage by sale. This question depends on the construction of the decree. Though the decree in question is an unusual one, it appears to me to be clearly a decree for sale of the mortgaged property. It sets out the amount due and provides that on failure to pay on due date the plaintiff do recover his money by sale of the property prescribed in the schedule. It was suggested that the sale by auction mentioned in the decree was not a Court sale but a private sale; but I am unable to accept that suggestion. No such objection was taken by the defendants when application was made under Order XXXIV, rule 5, of the

KANDULA PEDA LINGA REDDI v. KARUMANU HANTAMAYYA.

Code of Civil Procedure on the footing that the decree was one, under rule 4 clause 1. The appellants' Vakils have relied on Rameshar Upadhyaya v. Subbkarana Upadhyaya (1) and Chundra Nath Dey v. Burroda Shoondury Ghose (2) and Aubhoyessury Dabee v. Gouri Sunkur Panday (3), they were all cases where mere charges had been created without any provision for sale of property to realise the debt.

The next contention is that the decree if viewed as a mortgage decree is an illegal decree because, it is alleged, that a mortgage decree for sale can be passed only in a suit on a mortgage and not otherwise; and because no decree on a compromise could have been passed except in "so far as it related to the suit" under section 375 of the old Code which was in force and this decree went beyond it. For the first part of the argument, appellants' Vakils relied on some observations of Richards, J., in Rameshar Upadhyaya v. Subbkarana Upadhyaya (1) already cited. They are obiter dicta, as the question for decision before the learned Judges was the construction of a decree and with all respect I am unable to follow them. There is no reason shown why an agreement between parties that a decree amount should be realised by sale of properties should be treated as anything but a lawful agreement and if it is lawful why a decree should not be passed in its terms. Section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act has no application and no question of public policy seems involved. The objection, therefore, fails.

The second part of the argument is that in so far as the decree directed the sale of property in the schedule it went beyond the scope of section 375 and was without jurisdiction, as it did not relate to the suit which was one for money due. It is conceded that the ruling in Joti Kuruvetappa v. Izari Sirusappa (4) is directly against this contention but it is argued that the rulings in Venkatappa Nayanim

v. Thimma Nayanim (5) and Muthu Vijaya Raghunatha Udayana Tevar v. Thandavaraya Thambiran (6) are not in consonance with it and the former has been accepted in Calcutta and we should, therefore, refer the question of the meaning of the expression "so far as it relates to the suit" to a Full Bench. The two Madras cases cited were referred to in Joti Kuruvetappa v. Izari Sirusappa (4) and reason given why it was unnecessary that they should be strictly followed. The view expressed in Joti Kuruvetappa v. Izari Sirusappa (4) has been ever since followed by this Court. See Natesan Chetty v. Vengu Nachiar (7) and Sabapathi Pillay v. Vanmahalinga Pillai (8). As I entirely agree with the ruling in Joti Kuruvetappa v. Izari Sirusappa (4) on the point, I see no need for any reference as suggested, I follow it and disallow the objection.

It was urged that such a question could not be raised in execution proceedings by a person bound by the decree even if it went beyond the scope of the section and reliance was placed on Sabapathi Pillay v. Vanmahalinga Pillai (8). It is not, however, necessary to decide this point as appellants' objection fails for the reason already stated.

The next point raised was that the decree required registration before it could validly affect immoveable property. This objection is entirely unfounded as we are dealing here with a decree which under section 17, exception clause VI of the Indian Registration Act, need not be registered.

It was next urged that as default had been waived by plaintiff by acceptance of instalments due, his right to execute the decree by sale of property had not accrued. Plaintiff has only accepted two instalments which were overdue, viz., the 2nd and 3rd and the defaults so far as they related to them, were no doubt waived, as payments were accepted without any reservation. See Easin Khan v. Abdul Wahab Sikdar (9).

MAUNG PO HNIN v. MA HNYEIN.

But there are several subsequent defaults which plaintiff is entitled to rely on; and this objection also fails.

The last point urged is that the clause in the decree which gives interest at 12 per cent. on the amount due not from the date of default but from the date of decree itself, no interest being provided for originally, is a penal clause which should be relieved against. This contention is well-founded. It has always been held that an agreement to pay an enhanced rate of interest not from the date of default but from that of the original obligation is in the nature of a penalty and is unenforceable. See Nanjappa v. Nanjappa (10) and Baid Nath Das v. Shamanand Das (11). It is conceded that the fact that a compromise decree has been passed in terms of the agreement does not affect the right of the defendants to be relieved against any term in it if it is of a penal nature. Plaintiff will, therefore, be entitled to the interest of 12 per cent. only from the date of the first default which he is entitled to rely on, viz., 31st August 1906.

Defendants' appeal is dismissed subject to the above modification as to interest, parties will pay and receive proportionate costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

LOWER BURMA CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 192 OF 1916.

January 5, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice Parlett.

MAUNG PO HNYIN—APPELLANT

versus

MA HNYEIN—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 283—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 63—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 102, 110—Suit, regular, to set aside attachment—Burden of proof—Possession, proof of—Order—Appeal.

The initial burden of proof in a regular suit under Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, lies on the person who fails to get the attachment removed. On proving possession, however, the burden is shifted on to the person out of possession under section 110 of the Evidence Act and the finding that he has failed to discharge it is not open to appeal. [p. 767, col. 2; p. 765, col. 1.]

Kadappa Chetty v. Maung Shwe Bo, 2 L. B. R. 152 and Narak Lal v. Thagoo Lal, 13 Ind. Cas. 455; 22 C. L. J. 380, referred to.

Mr. Sin Hla Aung, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The property in suit consists of three items, a pair of bullocks, 40 baskets of paddy and another 11 baskets of paddy. As regards the bullocks it is argued that Po Tin having sold the original pair (one of them having since been replaced by Ma Shwe) to Tok Paw on credit, and having given Tok Paw possession of them, the ownership passed to Tok Paw the judgment-debtor, and could not subsequently be transferred by Po Tin to Ma Nyein. A perusal of the evidence makes it clear to my mind that when Tok Paw was unable to pay for the cattle, the entire transaction was rescinded, and he let Po Tin have them back again. Po Tin then sold them to Ma Nyein who hired them to Tok Paw. The District Court has accepted the evidence to this effect, and the finding is not open to appeal. As to the 40 baskets, the finding of the District Court was sought to be impugned on the grounds that the paddy had recently been taken from the judgment-debtor's bin that the plaintiff is a relative of his, that the witnesses appear to be siding with him and that the judgment-debtor is said to have absconded. It is, however, not permissible to re-open matters of fact in this appeal.

Lastly as to the 11 baskets, it is admitted that it was attached in Ma Nyein's possession, and that by Kadappa Chetty v. Maung Shwe Bo (1) she was entitled to succeed, but I am asked to hold that in this case the burden of proving her ownership was on Ma Nyein under section 102, Evidence Act, and the case of Narak Lal v. Thagoo Lal (2). The latter says that the burden of proof in a suit under section 283 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, is upon the unsuccessful.

ful claimant in the claim case, and taking this to mean the initial burden of proof I find nothing antagonistic to the Burma case in this ruling. In the present case, Ma Nyein having failed to get the attachment removed, the initial burden of proof in the regular suit was upon her under section 102, Evidence Act. Upon her proving possession, the burden of proving that she was not the owner shifted to the appellant under section 110 of the Evidence Act and the finding that he failed to discharge it is not open to appeal. The appeal is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

The fact that the next reversioner is time-barred from claiming a widow's estate is no ground for allowing a remoter reversioner to do so, when the reversion has fallen in. [p 769, col 1.]

More recitals in a sale-deed as to the existence of legal necessity for an alienation are not of themselves any evidence of necessity; there must be evidence aliunde. [p. 769, col 2.]

Brij Lal v. Inda Kumari, 23 Ind. Cas. 715; 36 A. 187; 18 C. W. N. 649; 26 M. L. J. 443; (1914) M. W. N. 405; 15 M. L. T. 395; 19 C. L. J. 469; 12 A. L. J. 495; 16 Bom. L. R. 352; 1 L. W., 794, followed.

In the case of alienations by a Hindu widow made a long time ago, Courts should not insist on as strict proof of legal necessity as in the case of recent transactions. In such cases, though the burden of proof which lies on the purchaser is not shifted on to the reversioner, the Courts should approach the evidence with a much more indulgent mind than when the alienation took place a few years before suit. But where evidence as to the purposes for which the debts were incurred which led to the alienation is actually before the Court, it must be satisfied that such purposes amount to legal necessity before the alienation is upheld. [p. 769, col. 2; p. 770, col. 1.]

Kanthu v. Dist. Upadhyay, 26 Ind. Cas. 376 at p. 378, referred to.

The private expenses of the widow are not a legal necessity and expenses incurred by her in litigation that arose out of her own tortious acts cannot legally be charged on her husband's estate. [p. 770, col. 1.]

Prima facie the conversion of a charge payable from the income to a charge on the corpus is an improper act on the part of the widow. [p. 770, col. 2.]

Maintenance charges and kist should be paid, where possible, from the current income of the estate, and, in the absence of good reason why they should not be so paid, a debt borrowed for this purpose is not a proper charge on the estate in the widow's hands. [p. 770, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—The difficulties which a purchaser of property must have in proving that alienations made some fifty years ago by a Hindu widow were for necessary purposes, have in arguing this appeal been vividly represented to us. But in the present case I must accept the findings of the lower Courts for the reasons given by them. The appellant did not succeed in proving the minimum required in such cases. The consideration for Exhibit VI is four prior debts and a sum of ready cash received by Valu Ammal for her own use. One of these debts was according to the recital of Exhibit VI-D incurred by the widow for paying the arrears of kist and for meeting her private expenses. Another was incurred for permanently settling the claim of a maintenance holder of her husband's family. A third was borrowed for a purpose unspecified and the fourth was due upon a compromise decree obtained by the decree-holder of a usufructuary mortgage whose rights of possession she invaded.

BHUVARAGHA IYENGAR v. NATESA IYER.

It has not been shown that the income of the estate was insufficient to meet the demands for Government revenue and the maintenance of the family.

As it consisted of 73 acres of wet land in Tanjore District, the natural presumption would be rather that the widow must have been fairly well off. It is argued in respect of the third debt that, as it appears from one of the documents that the widow was put in possession of the mortgaged land by an order of a Magistrate, it is not likely that she acted mala fide. On the other hand it is clear that she had no prima facie right to appropriate the income which the othidar had a right to enjoy, and that the estate should not be made responsible for litigation arising out of her torts.

I agree with the finding of the lower Courts as to Exhibit IV.

The second appeal is dismissed with the costs of 2nd and 4th respondents.

KRISHNAN, J.—This second appeal arises from a suit brought by plaintiffs as the next reversioners to one Sivasankara Vythinatha Iyer, who died about 1854, to set aside certain alienations made by his widow and recover the properties alienated. The lower Courts have set aside the alienations under Exhibits VI and IV subject to a payment of Rs. 350, and interest by the plaintiffs, and given a decree for the properties sued for with mesne profits deducting the amount found due by the plaintiffs. The 1st defendant, who was in possession of the properties and who claimed title through the alienations now set aside, appeals to us.

It is first argued for the appellant that there is no proper finding by the District Judge that the plaintiffs are the next reversioners entitled to the property. The District Judge has found that "there are no nearer reversioners", agreeing with the Munsif on the point. It is true he says "if there were, their claim is time-barred." This is, as pointed out, erroneous, as the fact that the next reversioner is time-barred is not a ground for allowing a remoter reversioner to claim the estate as the reversion has already fallen in. He has, however, discussed the evidence on this issue and come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs are the next reversioners. I do not think the sentence quoted really affects his finding on the point or throws any doubt on it. The appellant's objection on the point must be disallowed. The next point argued was that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in law in its finding that there was no legal necessity for Exhibit VI except for Rs. 350. Exhibit VI was an alienation in 1861. The sale was for Rs. 4,950, made up as follows according to the recital in the deed: Rs. 1,280-1-6, said to be due by the widow and her husband to one Narasimha Iyengar on a hypothecation bond; Rs. 228, due to one Meenakshi Ammal; Rs. 500, due to one Rajangam Subbiah; Rs. 1,000, due on a mortgage and Rs. 1,941-14-6 paid in cash. The onus of supporting a sale from a Hindu widow is undoubtedly on the purchaser. Mere recitals in a sale-deed as to the existence of legal necessity for an alienation are not of themselves any evidence of necessity; there must be evidence abunde. These propositions have been recently re-affirmed by the Privy Council in the case of Brij Lal v. Inda Kunwar (1). Except the recital in Exhibit VI of there being a debt due to Rajangam Subbiah, there is no other evidence as to it. That was, therefore, rightly disallowed. There is also no evidence to show why Rs. 1,941 14 6 was borrowed by the widow. That item also fails.

As regards the other three items of consideration for Exhibit VI, there is further evidence. In considering the evidence with reference to an alienation so old as Exhibit VI, which is one of 1861, I agree with the appellant's contention that Courts should not insist on as strict a proof as in the case of recent transactions. I agree with the observation of the learned Judges of this Court in the case of Kantlu v. Dasa Upadhya (2) that though the burden of proof is not shifted on to the reversioner, the Courts should approach the evidence as to necessity adduced in respect of old alienations with a much more indulgent mind than when the alienations attacked took place a few years before suit. The authorities on the point are considered in that case and it is not necessary to refer to them again. Where, however, there is evidence, as in this case, of the purposes for which the debts were incurred which led to the alienation, the Court must be satisfied that such purposes amounted to legal necessity before the alienation is upheld.

The hypothecation bond to Narasimha Iyengar is by the widow alone and is filed as Exhibit VI-D. This document recites that Rs. 500 was borrowed for paying arrears of kist and for the widow's private expenses. There is nothing to show how much of the consideration went to each item. It is clear that private expenses of the widow will not be a proper necessity. It is not shown that there were any arrears of kist to be paid as recited. Kist should ordinarily be paid from the income of the property, unless there was some good reason why it could not be so paid. There is no such reason made out here. Assuming there were arrears of kist to be paid, prima facie the debt borrowed for it is not a proper charge on the estate in the widow's hands. If borrowing for charges which should be met out of the current income is treated as legal necessity, it will enable the limited estate holder to ruin the estate and take for himself moneys which ought to be applied for paying those charges. See the observations of this Court in Kotta Ramasami Chetty v. Bangari Seshama Nayanivaru (3). The 1st defendant must, therefore, show by some evidence, however slight, that the kist in question could not be paid from the current income. The estate in question was fairly large and now produces an income of not less than Rs. 1,500, a year. There is no evidence as to what the income was in 1858, the date of Exhibit VI-D; but we cannot assume it was too small to pay kist and other charges from it. It is argued that Exhibit XXIII shows that there were some magisterial proceedings soon after the widow became entitled to possession, which rendered it likely that the widow was short of funds. But the evidence is too vague, even if admissible, to base any conclusions on it. We have only the recital in Exhibit XXIII, which is a plaint by a third party, that the widow took possession of a property mortgaged by her husband before his death "through the Magistrate." It must, therefore, be held that no valid charge was created on the property by Exhibit VI-D; and Exhibit VI, so far as it went to pay off this debt, must be held not to be binding on the estate.

It was urged that a creditor was not bound to see to the application of his money if he has made bonafide enquiries and satisfied himself of the necessity for the loan, and reliance is placed on the well-known case of Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Musammatt Babooee Murraj Koonweree (4). This question does not arise in this case as there is no plea of this nature raised in the lower Courts; and as the plea depends on evidence it cannot be allowed to be raised now. It was next suggested that the existence of a debt under Exhibit VI-D was sufficient to justify Exhibit VI and that the alienee need not go beyond Exhibit VI-D to see if there was necessity for that transaction also. I am unable to agree with this argument. As the alienee under Exhibit VI was referred to Exhibit VI-D as creating a necessity for his sale, he ought to show that Exhibit VI-D was itself for a proper necessity. There is nothing to show it.

The next item is the amount due to Meenakshi Ammal. She had apparently a claim for maintenance from the estate and Exhibits VI-A and VI-C show that in 1855 her claim was commuted for a lump sum of Rs. 200. Maintenance charges stand on the same footing as kist, as they should be paid from the current income; and similar considerations apply. Prima facie the conversion of a charge payable from the income to a charge on the corpus is an improper act on the part of the widow. There is no evidence whatever in the case to show there was necessity for it. It was rightly disallowed by the lower Courts.

The last item is a debt due on a mortgage. The lower Court has rightly allowed Rs. 350, the amount of the usufructuary mortgage by the husband, as a valid charge. The balance of the amount claimed under this head was the result of the widow wrongfully taking and keeping possession of the property mortgaged and taking the produce thereof; it was partly the price of produce cut and removed by her and partly interest in lieu of mesne profits and partly costs of the suit by the mortgagee. The widow's act was prima facie an unlawful act of trespass and we cannot presume that it was in the interest of the estate. If she was made to pay over the profits for the time she was in wrongful possession, she would have got those profits herself and should, therefore, have paid out of what she got. The lower Courts were right in disallowing all except Rs. 350 of this item as not being a valid charge on the estate. The last question argued has reference to the alienation under Exhibit IV. It is not necessary to discuss the various items of consideration recited in it. They stand on a similar footing as the items in Exhibit VI. I accept the finding of the lower Court that no portion of the consideration for this document, which is a sale-deed in favour of the widow's brother, is shown to be binding on the reversioners or the estate.

I agree that this second appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs of 2nd and 4th respondents.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

WALSH, J.—It is unfortunate that there is nobody here to argue this question on behalf of the respondent or to support the view of the learned Commissioner. We must, therefore, deal with the case without that assistance.

These two cases (I will adopt the enumeration of the original suits, namely Nos. 543 and 544 in the Revenue Court of Meerut) have been referred to the High Court under section 195, sub-section (1), of the Tenancy Act of 1901 by the learned Commissioner. In form the matter comes before us as one of reference. In substance there are two distinct cases, and although the question which arises in each case is precisely the same, it is desirable to keep them distinct for the purpose of this judgment. I, therefore, propose to deal with suit No. 544 and the decision in this case will govern suit No. 543. Suit No. 544 was brought by Miss Isabella Jackson against one Sarjit, the plaintiff claiming to be the landlord and also lambardar of certain property specified in the suit, twenty plots of which were in khewat No. 1, and one plot, the identification of which is important, namely No. 2113, in khewat No. 2. The plaintiff merely alleged that the plaintiff was the landlord and the lambardar and that the defendant was the tenant, and asserted facts entitling the plaintiff to eject the defendant. So far it was a mere ejectment suit between a landlord and tenant, which was properly cognizable by the Revenue Court. The written statement, however, alleged totally different issues with respect to the two classes of property to which I have already referred. It is true that the opening paragraph set up a defence to the whole action, but paragraph 3 alleged that with regard to No. 2113 the defendant was a proprietor, and in paragraph 4 it set up a defence as a tenant and not as a proprietor which, if established in fact, would have been an answer to the claim in ejectment, but which was clearly distinct from the plea in paragraph 3 raised in regard to No. 2113, and raised an entirely different question of fact with regard to a totally distinct portion of the subject-matter for which the plaintiff sued. The result of that was to cut up the controversy, which the plaintiff had amalgamated, into two separate and distinct suits and inasmuch as the decree which was ultimately passed by the Assistant Commissioner on these pleadings on the 29th of October 1915 not only dismissed the whole action but also went out of its way to make a declaration in favour of the defendant upon the issue raised by him in paragraph 3, I think it must be taken that there were in substance two decrees, or at any rate two distinct parts of the decree dealing with two distinct subject-matters. Now it is obvious that if the plaintiff desired seriously to challenge the decision against her upon the question of proprietary title, it was necessary for her to raise that question formally in some way or another in the nature of an appeal. If she had appealed to the Commissioner merely upon that part of the decree which dismissed the suit as a whole and had not raised the question which had been decided with reference to No. 2113, even although she may have succeeded in reversing the order of the Assistant Commissioner on the hearing of the appeal, that portion of the decree declaring the defendant to be the proprietor of No. 2113 would have still stood. The course which she took was this. On the 8th of December 1915 she appealed to the District Judge against that part of the decree which had been passed against her on the question of the proprietary title of No. 2113. That appeal was numbered 651 in the Court of the District Judge, was heard by the District Judge and decided by him in favour of the appellant. Care was taken in the notice of appeal to make it clear that the appeal was brought only with regard to that portion of the decree which dealt with the question of proprietary title and it was said that a further appeal would be brought with regard to the other portions of the decree to the Commissioner's Court. I would merely point out that the plaintiff was by no means bound to carry out that intention, and bring an appeal from the rest of the decree if she had chosen to be satisfied with the decision of that portion. She might have contented herself by appealing from the order against her on the question of proprietary title. In that case it could not be denied that the proper Court to go to by way of appeal would be the District Judge. Under section 177 it is provided that the appeal shall lie to the District Judge in all suits in which a question of proprietary title has been in issue, but on the 13th of January 1916 by notice of appeal to the Commissioner's Court, which appeal subsequently became known as No. 63, she carried out her original intention of appealing against the other part of the decree. By paragraph 2 of her notice of appeal she made it quite clear that her appeal was confined to the decision against her with reference to the tenancy of the plots other than No. 2113. The Commissioner denied himself jurisdiction to hear that appeal and referred the matter to this Court upon the ground that it was impossible to bifurcate an appeal, and he gave as his reason that it would be obviously undesirable if parties dissatisfied with the decision against them upon a particular subject-matter appealed to Court A on some ground or another, and to Court B on some other ground. But that is not this case. The sum and substance of this case is that the plaintiff had two decisions against her neither of which she liked. Each of them related to a totally different plot of land and each of them raised absolutely distinct and inconsistent questions of fact and law. It seems to me that where that occurs it is just as though the suits were two distinct suits, although for the purpose of convenience and economy the procedure of the Code permits them to be tried and decided as one. In my opinion we are bound by, or if not bound by it, speaking for myself I am disposed to follow, especially as I was a party to it, a decision of this Court which is reported as Gurraj Mati Tewarin v. Shami

MUJULURI SIVARAMAYYA v. SINGUMAHANTI BHUJANGA RAO.

Nath (1). The decision there was that where a decree has been passed against several defendants including some absent ones, ex parte and there has been an appeal by those who were present at the original hearing of the suit, so that as regards these defendants the decree has become merged in a subsequent decree of an Appellate Court, nonetheless the absent defendants against whom a decree had been passed ex parte, if they wished to get the decree set aside, must apply in the original Court which determined the suit against them. The effect of that is, of course, that as between separate parties to the same suit a decree is severable and there is a long and exhaustive judgment of Mr. Justice Sundar Lal on the subject referring to all the principal authorities and pointing out the inconvenience of holding otherwise. To my mind that case determined the question of principle, namely whether a decree is severable. We think it is and we think that this decree ought to be treated as a decree on two separate subject-matters, an appeal as to the one which raised the question of proprietary title lying to the Civil Court, the appeal as to the other subject-matter which raised no such question, lying to the Commissioner. It is only necessary to add that it is important to bear in mind that this decision relates only to the special facts and procedure in this particular case. The result is that the order of the Court will be to send the case back to the learned Commissioner with directions to entertain the appeal in appeal No. 63 and hear it according to law. The same order will be passed with regard to appeal No. 64, which is also referred to us under the name of suit No. 543.

STUART, J.—The procedure adopted by the appellant is open to no objection. With regard to the plots in respect of which the other side asserted a proprietary title, she was obliged to contest the decision in the Court of the District Judge, who alone could determine the question of proprietary title, but with regard to the remaining plots where no such assertion was made, the District Judge was not invested with the power to determine the points raised in the suit. There is nothing in the language of the Act which prohibits an appeal as to one portion of the subject-matter being decided by one Court and an appeal as to the other portion being decided by another Court. I agree to the order proposed.

Answer accordingly.

*Provincial Insolvency Act (111 of 1907), s. 22—
'Aggrieved person,' meaning of—Order directing Receiver

A 'person aggrieved', within the meaning of section 22 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, means a person against whom a decision has been pronounced, which wrongfully deprives him of something or wrongfully refuses him something or wrongfully affects his title to something. The decision should be such as to affect the right claimed, not merely to impede the person concerned in his assertion of it. [p. 775, col. 1.]

On 6th October 1913, B applied to the Court to give leave to the Receiver to execute a release deed. The Court passed the order as prayed for. In an appeal by C, the 10th creditor, who held a mortgage over this property but with notice of agreement to convey in favour of B made by A:

Held, (1) that the order was passed without jurisdiction, being unauthorized by section 22 or any other provision of the Provincial Insolvency Act; as the application to execute a release deed was made to the Court, and not to the Receiver in whom the insolvent's estate vested and who alone was competent to

(3) that the order was not justified even under the Court's general powers of superintendence over the Receiver, as the Receiver was neither asked to explain nor to adduce evidence. [p. 775, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—One Veeraraghava Row having been adjudicated insolvent, his property vested in the Official Receiver of Godavari District. Veeraraghava Row had on 24th May 1908 executed in favour of his father, the respondent, a promissory note and an agreement, Exhibit E, the latter providing that, in case the former were not discharged within a year, it should be discharged by the conveyance of certain property. On 6th October 1913 respondent moved the lower Court to grant leave to the Receiver to execute a release deed to him in respect of this property, as it had been treated as vesting with the insolvent's other property in consequence of the order of adjudication. The lower Court dealt with this petition first in circumstances referred to in this Court's order of remand in Appeal against Order No. 155 of 1914. On re-hearing it, it passed the order, against which 10th creditor, who alleges that he holds a mortgage over the property subsequent to Exhibit E, appeals.

The main objection to this order is that it was passed without jurisdiction, being unauthorized by section 22 or any other provision of the Provincial Insolvency Act. It is accordingly necessary to go further into the circumstances. The petition of 6th October 1913 did not ask that any act or decision of the Receiver should be set aside, but it was accompanied by an affidavit, setting forth that (1) on 22nd December 1911 respondent filed an affidavit, reciting the facts and praying for the execution of a conveyance by the Court or the Receiver; (2) as the Court passed no orders and time for suing would begin to run (meaning presumably—"would expire") on 24th May 1912, he filed a petition on 8th April 1912 under section 16 (b) of the Act, asking for permission to sue the Receiver on Exhibit E, (3) as no orders had been passed on either his affidavit or petition, he now asked the Court to order the Receiver to execute the necessary conveyance. It appears from the evidence of respondent and from the affidavit to be referred to later that this affidavit and this petition, the only ones referred to in the petition, on which the order under appeal was passed, were filed in the Court and that the former was withdrawn, as the right to sue for execution of a document was barred, before it came on for orders. In the judgment under appeal the lower Court has, as I understand it, found that the mortgage to appellant was for consideration, but was taken with notice of respondent's agreement, Exhibit E, which, therefore, prevailed against it as regards all three items of the property in dispute. There is, however, nothing regarding respondent's prayer for a conveyance, the only relief granted being that the property was exempted from sale; that is, as appears from the formal order drawn up, from "sale by the Receiver of the insolvent's assets." The form of the order is to some extent intelligible on reference to a petition and affidavit dated 18th November 1913, which we have found in the record and in which respondent again asked for a document and also for a stay of the sale, which the Receiver was about to hold of the property. The petition of 18th November 1913, however, it should be noted, was not statedly disposed of or even referred to in the lower Court's order and is presumably still pending. The application of 6th October 1913, with which the lower Court dealt in the order under appeal, was, therefore, founded on the failure of respondent's petition to the Court and not to the Receiver, in whom the insolvent's estate vested and who alone was competent to give him the conveyance he required.

Attempts have been made to support the lower Court's order on two grounds. First, it is urged that it should be treated as passed under section 22 of the Act, because respondent is a creditor or a person aggrieved by the Receiver's omission to give a conveyance in accordance with Exhibit E. One objection to this is that an application under section 22 must be founded on an act or decision of the Receiver, and none is alleged in the petition. For his mere omission to give a conveyance, when no request to him is mentioned, cannot be treated as an act or decision; and the suggestion that an averment, which we have found only in the petition above referred to of 18th November 1913, of a request to the Receiver on 1st October 1913 can be treated as having been made in the petition of 6th October 1913 cannot be accepted. There is, however, a broader objection, which must in any case prevail, that section 22 would even so not cover the application which respondent made, because he was not entitled to apply under it, as a creditor or person aggrieved. He is no doubt described as a creditor. But that is only because the insolvent so described him in his petition, his debt in fact having been discharged, when under Exhibit E his right to the insolvent's property matured. The question is then whether he was "a person aggrieved" within the meaning of the section.

In the leading authority on the subject, Ex parte Sidebotham, In re Sidebotham (1), which has been followed in Thiruvengkatachariar v. Thangayi Ammal (2) and other Indian cases, a person aggrieved was defined as "a man against whom a decision has been pronounced, which wrongfully deprived him of something or wrongfully refused him something or wrongfully affected his title to something;" and this definition may be accepted for the purpose of the present case, the material point being that the decision in question shall have been such as to affect the right claimed, not merely to impede the person concerned in his assertion of it. That is the view taken in Haneswar Ghosh v. Rakhal Das Ghose (3) and a case recently decided in this Court, Kumarappa Chettiar v. Murugappa Chettiar (4). To apply it to the facts before us, respondent attempted to obtain from the Receiver through the Court a recognition of his alleged rights and a conveyance in pursuance of it; but if the Receiver's failure to grant either implied his refusal to do so, that refusal was in no way a binding adjudication on that right and affected neither it nor respondent's remedy by suit. In these circumstances respondent was not entitled to apply to the lower Court under section 22 and the lower Court had no jurisdiction to deal with his application thereunder.

Section 22 failing and it not having been suggested that any other is relevant, respondent's remaining contention is that the lower Court was competent to make its order without reference to any provision of law and in the exercise of its general powers of superintendence over the Receiver, its officer. And no doubt in Haneswar Ghosh v. Rakhal Das Ghose (3), already referred to, though the Court's order was set aside as unsustainable with reference to section 22, the case was remanded in order that these powers might be exercised and an enquiry be held. So also in In re Rassul Haji Cassum (5), the Court itself held an enquiry, though it recognized that the ultimate remedy by suit of the petitioner before it would be unaffected by the result. That, however, was not the nature of the enquiry held in this case by the lower Court, as appears from the facts that neither it nor the respondent originally made the Receiver a party and that when he had been made a party, though he apparently did not attempt to justify his conduct, the proceedings were continued on the evidence adduced by the 10th creditor, the present appellant. It is accordingly impossible to support the lower Court's jurisdiction as resting on this foundation.

The result is that the order under appeal must be set aside as passed without Dewan Bahadur L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar (with him Messrs. K. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar and W. Chakrapani Naidu), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We think that under the circumstances, this is a case in which the plaintiff's conduct practically amounted to a waiver by acquiescence of performance of the contract to sell. Admittedly there was an oral understanding that the sale-deed should be executed by April 30th, 1908. On May 1st the plaintiff wrote that the sale-price was ready and asked 1st defendant to come to Dharapuram where plaintiff lived, execute the sale-deed and receive the money. On May 7th, 1st defendant having come to Dharapuram gave notice to the plaintiff that he had been waiting from April 17th to 21st and from May 5th to 7th and that he would give him time till the 10th to conclude the sale. The plaintiff received this notice on the 8th but did nothing towards performing his part of the contract. On the 13th, the 1st defendant intimated to the plaintiff that the contract had been put an end to. Nearly three years afterwards, viz., on April 29th, 1911, the plaintiff instituted this suit to enforce specific performance. The facts thus resemble the facts in Nawab Begam v. A. H. Creet (1), where it was held that when plaintiffs had notice that the contract was at an end and yet did nothing till nearly three years later when they filed a suit for enforcing performance, the Court had sufficient reason in the exercise of its discretion to refuse relief. In Jamshed Khodaram Irani v. Burjorji Dhunjabhai (2) the Privy Council observe that equity will not assist when there has been undue delay on the part of one party to the contract and the other has given him reasonable notice that he must complete within a definite time. We are asked to say that the time from May 8th to the 10th was not reasonable, but seeing that on May 1st plaintiff announced that he had the money ready and seeing that the Registration Office was in the same village where plaintiff resided and whither the 1st defendant had come, we are not prepared to say that he should have been given any more time.

Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar argued that there was no obligation on his client to produce the money until the defendant produced the sale-deed ready for registration, as this was part of the agreement, but the plaint shows that the cost of the stamp was admittedly to be borne by the plaintiff and it appears from 1st defendant's evidence, which has been believed by both Courts, that plaintiff had not even the money for the purchase of the stamp and it does not appear that he took any step to signify his willingness to accept the performance of the contract when performance was offered.

It is further contended that the Courts below were in error in dismissing the suit without finding that time was of the essence of the contract, but we do not find there was any contention on this point in the pleadings. The parties went to trial on the footing that there had been a breach of the contract on one side or the other and the 1st issue in the case was, therefore, directed to discovering which party was responsible for non-performance.

Even in a case where time is not of the essence of the contract, if the vendor rescinds after the agreed time, it is, as observed by the Chief Justice in Natesa Aiyar v. Apparu Padayachi (3), for the purchaser to show that he was ready and willing to perform the contract within a reasonable time after the agreed date.

We, therefore, think that the lower Courts were justified in refusing to decree specific performance after the lapse of time that had occurred.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs (one set between the legal representatives of 1st defendant and the 2nd defendant and the 6th defendant).

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which the present appeal arises was for the ejectment of the defendant-respondent from a house and for arrears of rent due from him. The suit was brought by two brothers, Pandit Bishambar Nath and Niranjana Nath. While the suit was pending Bishambar Nath died and no application to bring his legal representatives on the record was made within the statutory period. The suit as regards Bishambar Nath, therefore, abated under Order XXII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code. The first Court held that the suit abated as a whole, because the right to sue was joint and could not be separated. The lower Appellate Court agreed with the view of the first Court and dismissed the appeal, and Niranjana Nath has filed a second appeal to this Court.

The question whether the order appealed against was a decree was referred to a Full Bench, which has decided it in the affirmative. We now proceed to decide the appeal on the merits. It is admitted before us that the original plaintiffs were not members of a joint Hindu family, but it was contended that each of them had a specific share in the property in dispute. Appellant's Counsel urges that the suit could proceed as regards his client's share. The Full Bench in its order laid down that if the suit was of such a nature that it cannot proceed in the absence of the deceased's legal representative, the partial abatement will result in the total abatement or dismissal of the suit. We have, therefore, to consider whether the present suit could proceed in the absence of Bishambar Nath's legal representative. If it could not so proceed then the order of the lower Court is correct. Rulings such as Hadu v. Lala (1) do not help us much in the present case. The facts of the present case are distinguishable from those of that case. In the latter the shares of the parties in the joint property had to be determined and it was held that the Court must have all the co-sharers before it. It was also pointed out that the suit could not have been instituted and prosecuted until all the co-sharers had been made parties. In the present case if Niranjan Nath is a co-sharer in the property in dispute, we see no reason why the suit cannot proceed as regards his share. Suppose in the first instance his brother Bishambar Nath deceased had not joined him in suing, it cannot be held that Niranjan Nath could not have sued alone. In our opinion he could certainly have sued as regards his share in the property, although the Court would have probably ordered his brother to be made a defendant. Proceeding with the suit in the absence of Bishambar Nath's legal representative will not prejudice the defendant in any way. No doubt Niranjan Nath cannot get a decree for ejectment of the defendant from the whole of the house in dispute, but he can get a decree declaring his own rights such as would entitle him subsequently to sue for partition of his share.

We, therefore, accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the lower Courts remand the case to the Court of first instance for decision on the merits. Stamp in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court will be refunded and other costs will be costs in the cause.

Appeal accepted: Suit remanded.

Mortgage—Redemption—Payment of mortgage-debt, whether extinguishes sub-mortgage—Notice.

A sub-mortgage is extinguished by the payment of the mortgage-debt by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, if the former has no notice or knowledge of the sub-mortgage and acts in good faith. [p. 779, col. 1.]

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Appellant.
The Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Sarmu and Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, who is a sub-mortgagee of the 1st defendant's mortgage-interests in the property of 2nd and 3rd defendants, has been given a personal decree against the 1st defendant's legal representative, but he appeals on the ground that the lower Courts have refused his claim to enforce his security against the mortgaged property. The original mortgage was redeemed before plaintiff instituted this suit.

Plaintiff neither alleged nor proved that the mortgagors had notice of his sub-mortgage before the redemption took place. His Vakil now argues that the lower Appellate Court should not have found against the fact of notice without an issue on the point, but we cannot allow this objection to be raised when the plaintiff himself was responsible for this defect, if any.

We have no hesitation in confirming the view taken by the lower Courts on the point of law that a sub-mortgage is extinguished by the payment of the mortgage-debt by the mortgagor, if he had no notice or knowledge of the sub-mortgage and acts in good faith. An observation to this effect occurs in Narayana Mudali v. Raghavammal (1) and we have not been referred to any authority for the contrary view. Sahadev Ravji Bagade v. Shekh Papa Miya (2) is to the same effect. The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs (one set of costs.)

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, rr. 2, 3—Mortgage—Decree for foreclosure—Computation of time for payment—Appellate decree, effect of.

In a decree for foreclosure the period of time allowed to the mortgagor to redeem runs from the date of the decree of the Court of first instance, unless in an appeal from the decree the Appellate Court enlarges the time. [p. 780, col. 1.]

Bhola Nath Bhuttacharjee v. Kanti Chundra Bhuttacharjee, 25 C. 311; 1 C. W. N. 671; 13 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 209 Faijuddi Sardar v. Asimuddi Biswas, 11 C. W. N. 679, referred to.

The Trial Court cannot in the exercise of its discretion under Order XXXIV, rule 3 (2), accept payment after the final decree has been passed. [p. 780, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Sub-Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 30th November 1915, reversing that of the Munsif, Iswarganj, dated the 5th June 1915.

FACTS of the case will appear from the judgment,

Babu Birendra Kumar De, for the Appellant.—The first question in this case is whether the six months' time allowed by the first Court for redeeming the mortgage should run from the date of the first Court's decree or from the date of the Appellate Court's decree. The authorities are clear on this point, vide Bhola Nath Bhuttacharjee v. Kanti Chundra Bhuttacharjee (1), Faijuddi Sardar v. Asimuddi Biswas (2).

Secondly, a final decree was passed on the 11th February 1915 and thereafter the Munsif had no power to enlarge the time and to accept the deposit. A decree absolute for foreclosure discharges the mortgage-debt and the mortgagee becomes the absolute owner of the property, vide Order XXXIV, rule 3, clause (3).

As a rule foreclosure cannot be re-opened.

Babu Surendra Nath Das Gupta, for the Respondent.—In this case the learned Munsif accepted the deposit and no objection was raised by the decree-holder at the time. The decree-holder ought to have made a formal petition to set aside the Munsif's order.

The appellant's Vakil was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—The decree-holder, who is the appellant in this case, obtained a decree for foreclosure upon a mortgage. The decree gave six months' time to the mortgagor to redeem. The latter preferred an appeal. The appeal was dismissed and there was no direction in the decree of the Appellate Court that the six months' time would run from the date of that decree. The date of the original decree was 27th August 1913 and the appeal against that decree was dismissed on 1st December 1914. On 11th February 1915, the decree-holder applied for the decree being made absolute, and a final decree was passed. Subsequently on 24th May the mortgagor deposited the money in Court and that was accepted by the Munsif. Subsequently that order was set aside at the instance of the decree-holder, when it was pointed out to the Court that the final decree had already been passed.

(2) 11 C. W. N. 679.

MAUNG CHIT MAUNG v. MA YAIT.

The order of the Munsif was set aside by the lower Appellate Court, on the ground that the six months' time had run from the date of the Appellate Court's decree. We think that the view taken by the lower Appellate Court is erroneous. In the absence of any direction in the decree of the lower Appellate Court, the period of six months would run from the date of the decree of the Court of first instance. See Bhola Nath Bhattacharjee v. Kanti Chandra Bhattacharjee (1) and Faijuaai Sardar v. Asimuddi Biswas (2). It is true that the Court has the power, under Order XXXIV, rule 3, proviso, to enlarge the time for redemption. But the final decree had been passed before the judgment-debtor deposited the money. Under the circumstances, we do not think that the Court had any power to accept the money long after the expiry of the time within which the judgment-debtor was to put in the money. The appeal must accordingly be allowed, the order of the lower Appellate Court set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored. Each party will bear its own costs in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

In order that Hindu Law should apply to a person it is not necessary that he should have been born a Hindu. [p 782, col 1.]

The word 'Hindu' in section 13 of the Burma Laws Act bears the same meaning as it does in section 331 of the Succession Act and section 2 of the Probate and Administration Act and does not necessarily mean an orthodox Hindu or one who is a member of one of the four castes. [p. 781, col 2.]

Hindu Law is applicable to a Hindu until he definitely renounces or abandons his religion. [p 783, col. 1.]

Per Ormond, J.—Where an enactment speaks only of the three communities, viz, Hindu, Muhammadan and Buddhist, it is intended to embrace all communities which have a religion which is an offshoot of any one of these three religions. Thus the term "Hindu" includes all who are called Hindus in common parlance. [p. 78, col. 2.]

Per Twomey, J.—It is not within the province of Civil Courts to determine questions of orthodoxy. [p. 783, col. 1.]

In order to determine whether a certain person is a Hindu, it is immaterial whether he is recognised as a Hindu by the orthodox caste Hindus, the only question being whether he himself adheres to some form of Brahminical worship and belief. [p. 785, col. 1.]

Caste regulations do not constitute Hinduism though they flourish among Hindus. [p. 788, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

ORMOND, J.—Maung Ohn Ghine, C. I. E., a prominent citizen of Rangoon, died on 10th June 1911. On 15th December 1913 his eldest son Maung Chit Maung filed a suit against the widow Ma Yait, administratrix, for the administration of the estate; and another suit against Ma Yait and the eldest daughter Ma Nao, trustees of a settlement executed by Ohn Ghine on 5th May 1908, for a declaration that such settlement was void.

In both cases the question arose as to what law was applicable under section 13 of the Burma Laws Act, XIII of 1895. That section is as follows:—

1. Where in any suit or other proceeding in Burma it is necessary for the Court to decide any question regarding succession, inheritance, marriage or caste, or any religious usage or institution,

(a) the Buddhist Law in cases where the parties are Buddhists,

(b) the Muhammadan Law in cases where the parties are Muhammadans, and

MAUNG CHIT MAUNG v. MA YAIT.

(c) the Hindu Law in the cases where the parties are Hindus, shall form the rule of decision, except in so far as such law has by enactment been altered or abolished, or is opposed to any custom having the force of law.

2. Subject to the provisions of sub-section (1) and of any other enactment for the time being in force, all questions arising in civil cases instituted in the Courts of Rangoon shall be dealt with and determined according to the law for the time being administered by the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction.

3. In cases not provided for by sub-section 1 or sub-section 2, or by any other enactment for the time being in force, the decision shall be according to justice, equity and good conscience.

The learned Judge on the Original Side has held that Ohn Ghine was neither a Hindu nor a Buddhist within the meaning of that section, and that the cases must be decided according to justice, equity and good conscience.

The plaintiff appeals in both cases and contends that Ohn Ghine was a Hindu. It is agreed that the decision of this question shall govern both cases; and that if Ohn Ghine was not at the time of his death a Hindu, within the meaning of the above section, the Succession Act and the Transfer of Property Act apply to the two cases respectively.

Mr. Giles for the appellant contends that a Hindu, within the meaning of the section, is one who professes the Hindu religion; and that it is not for the Court to enquire whether such person is orthodox or not.

Mr. Cowasjee for the respondent contends that a 'Hindu' must be a Hindu both by birth and by religion and must belong to one of the four recognised castes; and that Ohn Ghine fulfilled no one of these conditions.

Unless a Hindu is recognised by the members of a caste as a caste-fellow, he cannot be said to belong to that caste. It is clear that Ohn Ghine was not recognised by Hindus as belonging to any one of the four castes; and it is not now contended that he did.

In the case of Anamalai Pillay v. Po Lan (1) it is stated that a fifth caste is not known to orthodox Hinduism; and a person who is outside the four recognised castes is not within the pale of Hinduism, according to the orthodox tenets of the Hindu faith. The case decided that the Hindu caste law relating to marriage does not apply to a person who is outside the four recognised castes. It does not decide that such a person cannot be a Hindu within the meaning of section 13.

The learned Judge on the Original Side has apparently relied on the case of Raj Bahadur v. Bishen Dayal (2), where it was held that the parties were neither orthodox Hindus nor Muhammadans and that under section 24 of the Bengal Civil Courts Act VII of 1871, the case must be governed by the rules of justice, equity and good conscience. But in the case of Bhagwan Koer v. Bose, J. C. (3) it was held by the Privy Council that a Sikh, who has no caste and is certainly not an orthodox Hindu, is a Hindu within the meaning of section 331 of the Succession Act and section 2 of the Probate and Administration Act and that a Sikh who became a Brahmo, would not necessarily cease to be a Hindu. The word "Hindu" in section 13 of the Burma Laws Act bears the same meaning that it does in section 331 of the Succession Act and section 2 of the Probate and Administration Act.

Section 13 itself seems to expressly contemplate the case of unorthodox Hindus: for it provides, as I understand the section, that where Hindus have so far departed from Hinduism proper, as to set up customs which are opposed to the orthodox rules of Hindu Law, they shall still be governed by Hindu Law so far as it has not been thus departed from by custom.

In my opinion the word "Hindu" in section 13 does not necessarily mean an orthodox Hindu or one who is a member of one of the four castes.

The next question is, must he be a Hindu by birth? Mr. Cowasjee relied upon Charlotte

MAUNG CHIT MAUNG v. MA YAIT.

Abraham v. Francis Abraham (4), where it is said that the Regulations which prescribe that Hindu Law shall be applied to Hindus, must be understood to refer to Hindus "not by birth merely, but by religion also." In that case their Lordships were dealing with the succession to the property of a Protestant native of India, whose ancestors had for several generations been Christians, and who is described by their Lordships as "by birth a Hindu of pure native blood, being descended from a family of Hindus." What is meant by the above passage is that it is not sufficient to be of a Hindu race or stock, but that the person must be a Hindu by religion. The word "also," is, I think, inserted by mistake; the passage does not, in my opinion, mean that for Hindu Law to be applicable, the person must be a Hindu by birth: for at page 238 their Lordships refer with approval to the case of a Hindu converted to Muhammadanism, where it is said the devolution of his property would be governed by the Hindu Law as regards all the property that the deceased had at the time of his conversion, and by the Muhammadan Law as to all subsequently acquired property; the deceased in such a case could not be said to have been a Muhammadan by birth in any sense of the word.

It is contended for the respondent that Ohn Ghine cannot be a Hindu; because his paternal grandfather, who is said to have belonged to the twice-born class, married a Talaing lady; and by Hindu Law such a marriage is void. It is unnecessary to decide whether that marriage was void or not under Hindu Law proper. As I understand the argument, it means that no one can be a Hindu within the meaning of section 13, whose ancestors were not all born in lawful wedlock and were not all of pure Indian or rather Hindu blood—a startling proposition which could be very far-reaching and unsettling in its effect. No authorities have been cited which support such a proposition. The case of Lingappa Goundan v. Esudasan (5) only decides that the illegitimate child of a Hindu by a native Christian woman was not a Hindu by birth, i.e., was not "by birth, a Hindu by religion;" and, therefore, could not recover maintenance against his father under Hindu Law. The question there was whether Hindu Law applied at the time when the claim to maintenance arose, i.e., when the child was born; and it was decided that the child was not a Hindu by religion at the time of his birth. In the case of Myna Boyee v. Ootaram (6) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the illegitimate children of an Englishman by a Brahmin woman—who were brought up as Hindus—should be governed by Hindu Law. Hindu Law unlike English Law recognises the relationship of an illegitimate child to its father; and in some cases the illegitimate son of a Hindu father has a right of inheritance to his father, Meenakshi Anni v. Appakutti (7). The children, therefore, of an English father by a Brahmin woman could not be Hindus by birth. The case of Myna Boyee v. Ootaram (6) is, therefore, an authority to show that a person may be a "Hindu" within the meaning of section 13, although he is illegitimate and not a Hindu by birth, and is not of pure Hindu blood, provided he is a Hindu by religion.

On the other hand the Sikh case (3) cited above shows that a person can be a "Hindu" for the purposes of the present case, even though he does not profess the Hindu religion. The case is instructive: it shews that where an enactment speaks only of the three communities viz., Hindu, Mahomedan and Buddhist, it is intended to embrace all communities which have a religion which is an offshoot of any one of these three religions. Thus the term "Hindu" includes a Sikh; and all who are called Hindus in common parlance. The case also decided that a Sikh or Hindu, by becoming a Brahmo, did not necessarily cease to belong to the community in which he was born i.e., cease to be a Hindu—not because the Brahmo religion was an offshoot of, or was in any way connected with, the Hindu religion, but because of the relation of the principles and the organisation of the Brahmos to the Hindu system.

Now if a Hindu, can become a Brahmo, which is a monotheistic religion, and still be a Hindu; I see no reason why a Hindu should not adopt Buddhism, a religion or philosophy from which all theism is simply absent, and still remain a "Hindu." He would not become a Buddhist within the meanings of section 13, until he has definitely renounced or abandoned Hinduism; and until he has done so, Hindu Law would be applicable to him: otherwise, during the transition stage of becoming a Buddhist and before he becomes subject to Buddhist Law, he would lose the benefits of section 13, which was clearly not intended.

Ohn Ghine was known in Burma as a "Kalai": which, according to Mr. Cowasjee, means the offspring of a Hindu and Burmese woman and their descendants.

Ohn Ghine's parents are both said to have been Kalais, his paternal grandfather was a Hindu and is said to have married a Talaing lady; and Ohn Ghine married a Kalai.

A Hindu temple in Phayre Street which has the images of Ganesh and Krishna was built by the Kalais; the priest is the son of a Brahmin by Ohn Ghine's sister and Ohn Ghine was a trustee of the temple up to the time of his death. Ohn Ghine and his family, and his family before him, visited that temple twice a year on certain occasions; and once a year they visited the Kalai temple in Fraser Street. The temple in Phayre Street is known as the Kalai temple. It is contended that the Kalai temple is not an orthodox Hindu temple; but it is admitted that the temple in Fraser Street is a proper Hindu temple. Ohn Ghine and his family adopted Burmese names, dress and customs; but they also had Hindu names given to them according to Hindu rites and they were married with Hindu ceremonies. Ohn Ghine was cremated according to Hindu rites and his ashes were sent to Benares. He refused to eat beef and refused to have his sons shinbuey because they were being brought up as Hindus. An image of Buddha and Ganesh were kept in the house close together, but the Buddha is said to have been placed on a higher level than Ganesh. Ohn Ghine and his wife Ma Yait stated on oath they were Hindus in Ma Nu's case in 1906—a criminal prosecution for the abduction of their daughter Ma Nu. The widow and daughter filed affidavits and petitions in connection with their application for Letters of Administration to Ohn Ghine's estate, from September 12th to February 14th, in which they stated in the first affidavits that Ohn Ghine was a Hindu and in later ones that he was a Hindu by religion only. In the written statements in these suits filed on 18th February 1914 Ohn Ghine is said to have been "a Kalai and professed the Hindu religion and also observed Buddhist rites," and in the amended written statements filed on 15th November 1914, he is stated to have been a "Kalai who was not a Hindu and he professed both the Hindu and Buddhist religions." It is admitted, therefore, in the pleadings that Ohn Ghine had not ceased to be a Hindu by religion.

Ohn Ghine no doubt built a kyaung and a zayat. He is said to have observed the Buddhist fasts, to have worshipped at the pagoda, to have said prayers in Buddhist fashion and he had a Buddhist spiritual adviser. In 1907 he sent a printed post-card of Buddhist precepts to his son in London and in 1910 he went to Moulmein to attend his son's marriage with a Burmese lady. In petitions to Government he posed as a leader and co-religionist of the Burmese Buddhists in Rangoon and he was a Vice-President of the Buddha Gya Missionary Society, which collected funds for a suit against a Mohunt in India in order to safeguard Buddhists' rights. On the other hand U Po Tha, a witness for the defence and an elder among the Burmese community, says that because Ohn Ghine was a Hindu he was not elected a trustee of the Shwedegon Pagoda. Ohn Ghine was known as a Kalai and not as a Buddhist and "Kalai", according to Stevenson's Burmese Dictionary, means a Hindu without caste.

The defence in these two cases is not that Ohn Ghine was a Buddhist, but that he was a Kalai and professed both the Hindu and Buddhist religions and was, therefore, not a Hindu within the meaning of section 13.

Ohn Ghine came of a Hindu stock and neither he nor his forefathers had given up Hinduism. The Hindu Law which governed the family must, in my opinion, continue to govern Ohn Ghine's estate. Costs of both sides to come out of the estate, ten gold mohurs for each day of hearing, five days on each side.

TWOMEY, J.—The question in this appeal is whether the deceased Maung Ohn Ghine, a wealthy resident of Rangoon, was a Hindu within the meaning of section 13, Burma Laws Act, 1898, so that under the section, the Hindu Law should form the rule of decision regarding succession or inheritance to his estate. The contending parties are his son Maung Chit Maung on the one hand and his widow Ma Yait and daughter Ma Nu on the other, the former maintaining that Ohn Ghine was a Hindu while the latter deny it and claim that he professed both the Hindu and the Buddhist religions and that the Hindu Law is inapplicable to his estate.

Ohn Ghine belonged to a community known as Kalais formed by the descendants of Hindu immigrants, mostly of the lower orders from Madras, who made permanent alliances with women of Burma. The frequency of these alliances is mentioned in the case of Anamalai Pillay v. Po Lan (1), in which it was held that the ordinary presumption of marriage should be applied to these alliances, though they would not be treated as valid marriages according to the caste regulations of the recognised Hindu castes. The Settlement Reports and the Gazetteers give no information about the Kalais. The word Kalai in Stevenson's Dictionary is translated "Hindu", with the added explanation "Hindu Kalai race, without caste." The fact that the Kalais are of mixed Hindu and Burmese (or Talaing) origin is not mentioned in the dictionary but there is no dispute as to this. The exact status of persons belonging to the Kalai community is now for the first time the subject of judicial consideration. They are mostly persons of small means and any questions of inheritance have been decided by agreement or arbitration among themselves. That they are a well-recognised community is shown by the fact that they have been allotted a separate burial ground by the Municipality. They speak the Burmese language and they dress and live like Burmese, but the evidence shows that they profess the Hindu religion though in a modified and perhaps attenuated form. The Kalais of Rangoon have their own temple to Krishna and they also worship at the Kalai temple in Fraser Street. In their marriages they usually follow Hindu rites, though instances are given of Kalais marrying according to the Burmese fashion. When they die their bodies are cremated and in families that can afford the expense, the ashes are sent to Benares to be thrown into the river Ganges. They have Hindu names as well as Burmese names, though the Hindu names appear to be brought out only on religious occasions. In matters of diet they appear to be more tolerant than ordinary Hindus. They eat with Burmese and eschew only beef. Ordinary Hindus do not associate with them, though the evidence shows that ordinary Hindus do worship at the Kalai temple. Re-marriage of widows is allowed and Kalais intermarry freely with the women of the country, though there appears to be a tendency to seek wives among the Kalai community. As might be expected in a community formed by the admixture of Hindus with Buddhists, the Kalais or many of them, side by side with their Hindu observances, follow many practices of the surrounding Buddhist population. They worship at the pagodas, make offerings of food to the phongyis and observe the Buddhist lent. But it appears to be very unusual for a Kalai to put his sons through the crucial Buddhist ceremony of shinbui or initiation into the Sacred Order. Where a Kalai has gone to this length in his adoption of Buddhist practices it would perhaps be difficult to regard him as a Hindu any longer. There are probably Kalais whose Hinduism has become so attenuated by successive intermarriages with Buddhists for several generations that they cannot properly be regarded as professing Hindus at all. But, on the other hand, it is clear that up to the time of this litigation the Kalai community generally have been regarded as a Hindu community.

We may regard the Kalais as Hindus without caste (as the Dictionary describes them) or they may be looked upon as a new sect or caste formed by the intermarriage of MAUNG CHIT MAUNG U. MA YAIT.

Madrasi Hindu immigrants with women of this province. On the former assumption it would not follow that a Kalai would be beyond the scope of the term Hindu in section 13. For it is nowhere laid down that a man cannot be a Hindu unless he belongs to one of the recognised castes and conforms to caste regulations as to marriage, etc. A learned Hindu Judge of the Madras High Court (Sankaran Nair, J.), in Muthusami Mudaliar v. Masilamani (8), speaking of marriages among Hindus, said: "There is nothing to prevent a man from giving up his caste or community. He is bound by the caste rules only on account of his voluntary submission and, therefore, if the marriage is valid under the ordinary Hindu Law they will be legally married even if such marriage is opposed to the rules of the caste or community to which they belong." In the same judgment it is said that Hindu Law means the law of the Dharmasastras as distinguished from caste rules or the caste law. In the Bombay case of Dagree v. Pacotti San Jao (9). Parsons, J., accepted the definition of Hindu in Stokes' Anglo Indian Codes, Volume I, page 483, as a theological term denoting any person professing any form of the Brahminical religion or the religion of the Puranas. It would seem, therefore, immaterial whether the Kalais are recognised as Hindus by caste-Hindus from India, the only question being whether they themselves adhere to some form of Brahminical worship and belief. It appears beyond doubt that the Kalais comply with this requirement, however much they may have relaxed the restrictions imposed by Indian caste regulations as to intermarriage and domestic life.

It may be permissible as an alternative to regard the Kalais as forming a distinct caste or sect of their own. The formation of new castes by migration is noticed in the Imperial Gazetteer of India, Volume I, page 319, from which the following passage is taken:—"If the members of a caste leave their original habitat and settle permanently in another part of India, they tend to develop into a distinct caste. The stages of the process are readily traced. In the first instance it is assumed that people who live in foreign parts must of necessity eat forbidden food, worship alien gods, and enter into relations with strange women. Consequently when they wish to take wives from among their own people, they find that their social status has been lowered and that they must pay for the privilege of marrying within the parent group. This luxury grows more and more expensive, and in course of time the emigrants marry only among themselves and thus become a sub-caste, usually distinguished by a territorial name, such as Jaunpuria, Tiruhutia, Barendra, and the like."

It appears, therefore, that the Kalais are not the only instance in the Indian Empire of Hindus migrating to distant parts and establishing a new community by intermarriage with the women of the country, and every member in such a new community would presumably retain the personal status of the founder of his family as a Hindu. In fact the restrictions of caste appear to disappear gradually when Hindus migrate to a non-Hindu country, and there is a further illustration by another passage from the same work, page 330, which informs us that in Baluchistan which is like Burma a non-Hindu country, even now a Hindu when asked to what caste he belongs will often describe himself by the name of the tribal group i. e., the Baluchi tribe to which he holds himself attached.

The Kalai community being a Hindu community and Maung Ohn Ghine having been a member thereof, it follows that he was prima facie a Hindu. In his daughter Ma Nu's abduction case 1906 he swore that he was a Hindu. He said: "I am a Hindu. I am a trustee of the Hindu temple. My Hindu name is Muthusami Pillay. Ma Nu's name is Chellama. We were married by Brahmins by Hindu rites. I was married in that way. We do not recognise marriage with non-Hindus. If a member of our class married a non-Hindu I won't eat with him." He had a strong motive for making himself out to be a Hindu in that case and he certainly exaggerated his Hindu exclusiveness. But apart from this open profession of faith the evidence in the present case furnishes strong grounds for regarding him as a Hindu by religion. He admittedly professed that religion throughout his life and was a trustee of the Kalai Hindu temple to Krishna in Phayre Street, of which temple he was one of the founders. He was married according to Hindu rites and his wife is also a Kalai. His daughter Ma Mya was married to another Kalai according to the Hindu rites. After his death his body was cremated. The funeral ceremony was performed according to Hindu rites and his ashes together with the ashes of his daughter Ma Mya were sent to Benares to be thrown into the Ganges. In matter of dress, diet and social intercourse he followed the ordinary practice of the Kalai community. Like other members of the community he did not associate with Hindus from India, having more in common with his Burmese fellow-townsmen than with Indians. Although the more stalwart witnesses called by Ma Yait state that Ohn Ghine was a Burmese Buddhist, Ma Yait herself described him as a Hindu up to the time of the present litigation and also said that she herself was a Hindu, and she admitted that none of their sons were shinbuey because they were brought up as Hindus. Although in this case she said that she "professed the Buddhist religion as well as the Kalai religion," she also admitted that she worshipped periodically at the Kalai temple. She said that Ohn Ghine had an image of Ganesh in his house as well as an image of Buddha. She said that the only ceremony performed at Ohn Ghine's funeral was the Hindu ceremony and this statement is borne out by the newspaper account of the ceremony (Exhibit H). In various affidavits Ma Yait and her daughter Ma Nu described themselves as Hindus and made solemn affirmations instead of being sworn like Buddhists. Ma Yait's father and grandfather were Kalais. It was only on the suggestion of a lawyer and in connection with the litigation that she began to describe herself and her husband as Kalais instead of Hindus, the object clearly being to give colour to any doubts that might arise as to the application of Hindu Law to Ohn Ghine's estate.

In the first written statement in the present case Ma Yait said that "Ohn Ghine was a Kalai and professed the Hindu religion and also observed Buddhist rites," but in an amended written statement this was altered to "Ohn Ghine was a Kalai and was not a Hindu and he professed both Hindu and Buddhist religions."

It is not contended now that Ohn Ghine was a Buddhist by religion. But it is argued that his Hinduism was so overlaid and interlaced with Buddhist practices and beliefs that he cannot properly be regarded as a Hindu for the purposes of section 13. A large portion of the evidence, oral and documentary, is directed to establishing this contention. It shows that Ohn Ghine like other Kalais had strong leanings towards Buddhism. He built a Buddhist Paya-kayaung or image house and placed a figure of Buddha in it. He received regular visits from a Buddhist Sayadaw, U Kawthala, D. W. No. 11, who says that Ohn Ghine was a Buddhist. This witness says he knows that Ohn Ghine was a Buddhist because he was Ohn Ghine's religious preceptor and Ohn Ghine did what he told him. He admits that Ohn Ghine rejected his advice to have his sons shinbuey. He tries to explain Ohn Ghine's worship of Ganesh Maha peinne as a sort of nat worship. Ohn Ghine knew Buddhist prayers and recited them. He used to feed pongyis. Pongyis attended the funeral ceremonies of his family and preached the Buddhist law to those who were present. Ohn Ghine observed the Buddhist fasts. He asked U Kawthala "to teach his sons what they should do while in England and he, i.e., the pongyi instructed them according to the Buddhist religion." Exhibit 7 is a printed card of "advice to my son." Most of the precepts in it are such as a father of any religion might send to his son but it includes an admonition to think daily of the Buddha, the law and the congregation and to repeat certain Pali prayers, and this is, of course, a purely Buddhist admonition. Ohn Ghine used to send cards like this to his son who was being educated in England. U Kawthala like certain other witnesses for the defence tries to prove too much, for he says that Ohn Ghine professed Buddhism and nothing else.

Ohn Ghine was a Municipal Commissioner of Rangoon. He was one of the Burmese representatives but no religious qualifications are required for that. In matters of daily life apart from his religion, Ohn Ghine was hardly distinguishable from the Burmese community in general and it appears that it was as a prominent member of the Burmese community that he was sent to England at the time of King Edward's Coronation. Great stress has been laid on the leading part taken by Ohn Ghine in supporting various important Buddhist interests. In 1900 he wrote to the Governor of Madras (Exhibit 4), urging that certain Buddhist relics lying in the Madras Museum should be made over to him to be placed in a shrine which he was preparing at Rangoon and he referred in this letter to his Buddhist co-religionists. In a letter dated 18th February 1901 to the Colonial Secretary, Ceylon, Exhibit 1-A, he joined with several others in advocating the cause of the Burmese Buddhist pilgrims to the Buddhist temple of the sacred tooth relic at Kandy, and the writers of this letter describe themselves as "Burmese pilgrims now on a visit to Ceylon." As one of the community of the Buddha Gaya Missionary Society, Exhibit 6, he also championed the cause of the Burmese Buddhists against the Mohunt of a Hindu temple at Gaya with reference to a certain zayat erected there by King Mindon for the use of Burmese pilgrims. He was one of the residents of Rangoon who presented an address on behalf of the Buddhist community to the Viceroy Lord Curzon on his visit to Rangoon in 1901.

At first sight these incidents in his career appear to support the contention that Ohn Ghine was as much a Buddhist as a Hindu. To understand their real meaning it is necessary to look at Ohn Ghine's career and aspirations as a whole. He was a man of ambition who had amassed a considerable fortune by his business capacity and industry. Sprung from an obscure class he had little prospect of taking a leading place so long as he was identified merely with the Kalais. Caste prejudices kept Indian Hindus aloof from him and would prevent him from any kind of leadership among the Hindus generally. But by throwing in his lot with the tolerant Burmese who formed the bulk of the population of the province, he could hope to attain some distinction. He was as much Burmese as Indian by blood, and in dress, language and manner of life he was more Burmese than Indian. He admired the Buddhist doctrines and found much that was attractive in Buddhist religious practices. Material interests chimed in with his inclinations and Ohn Ghine stood forth as a representative of the Burmese. He received more than one mark of distinction from Government and probably hoped for more. In these circumstances no special significance can be attached to his posing as a member of the Burmese Buddhist community, by associating with which he had achieved most of his success in life. His readiness to figure as a co-religionist of Buddhists in 1901 may be compared with his attitude of conservative Hinduism in Ma Nu's case five years later. On each occasion there was exaggeration with a purpose, and neither incident affords a safe guide to Ohn Ghine's actual religious status. The evidence shows that he never renounced or repudiated his membership of the Kalai community and in spite of his liberality to Buddhist monks and his liking for Buddhist prayers and practices he drew the line at having his sons shinbuey. He continued his Hindu worship at the Kalai temple and when he died, it did not occur to his family to have his obsequies conducted according to any rites except those of the Hindus, and his ashes were sent to Benares. The marriage of his son Chit Maung with a Burmese girl (see Exhibit 8) according to Burmese custom in 1910 was no doubt a serious lapse from rectitude for a Hindu, but this incident can only be regarded as an example of the general laxity of the marriage customs of the Kalai community as compared with those of the recognised Hindu castes. I, therefore, think that there can be no doubt that Ohn Ghine was a Hindu by religion.

It has been argued that in their use of the term "Hindu" in section 13 the Legislature contemplated that the person whose estate is the subject of the litigation should be of the Hindu religion not only by actual profession but by birth also, i.e., that he should be the lawful issue of a Hindu marriage, and that Ohn Ghine was not a Hindu by birth because his Hindu grandfather was not united in lawful wedlock to his Talaing wife and, therefore, that Ohn Ghine's father was illegitimate and was not born a Hindu.

My learned colleague in his judgment has shown that the passage in Charlotte Abraham v. Francis Abraham (4), on which this argument rests, is incapable of the interpretation which the respondent's Counsel seeks to put upon it and that it is not necessary for a man to have been born a Hindu in order to have the Hindu Law applied to him. But even assuming that the term Hindu should be restricted to persons who are born Hindus, I think this condition is satisfied in Ohn Ghine's case. The validity of his grandfather's marriage was never questioned till this litigation began. It may have infringed the caste regulations to which he was subject in India, but caste regulations do not constitute Hinduism though they flourish among Hindus. Apart from caste regulations there is nothing to show that the marriage was invalid. It was presumably recognised as a good marriage by the class in which Ohn Ghine's grandfather lived in this country and I think it would be preposterous for the Courts to stigmatise it now as invalid according to Hindu Law. The ordinary presumption of validity should prevail.

The learned Judge on the Original Side accepted the view that section 13 is applicable only to orthodox Hindus and he decided that Ohn Ghine's observance of Buddhist practices was inconsistent with orthodox Hinduism. It would be an invidious, not to say an impossible, task for the Civil Courts to determine questions of orthodoxy. If the learned Judge's decision on this point were to prevail, the Courts would become the arena of warring sects and schools and would scarcely ever be free from the odium theologicum. But it is happily beyond doubt that the Courts have not to concern themselves with such abstruse matters. In the case of Bhagwan Koer v. Bose, J. C. (3) their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down that "mere departures from orthodoxy in matters of diet and ceremonial observances could not have the effect of excluding from the category of Hindu one who was born within it and who never became otherwise separated from the religious communion in which he was born." When we find a member of a dissenting sect such as the Sikhs included authoritatively within the term Hindu even when the Sikh has gone a step further and has joined the Brahmo Samaj, we need have no compunction in applying the term Hindu to people like the Kalias who in spite of their Buddhist leanings are certainly of Hindu stock and worship the Hindu gods and have never renounced the faith of their fathers.

I, therefore, agree with my learned colleague in holding that Maung Ohn Ghine was a Hindu as contemplated in section 13. I also concur in the proposed order as to costs.

SUNDAR V. NAG.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are set forth in the order of remand made by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Chevis on the 2nd of May 1914. The learned Judge, after holding that the plaintiffs, who claimed the right to work a water-mill on the land of the defendants, had failed to establish a grant, directed further enquiry into the point whether they had worked the mill as an easement, and as of right, without interruption for twenty years. Now, the report submitted by the Munsif shows that the plaintiffs have been enjoying the right for nearly fifty years, but the question is whether all the conditions laid down by section 26 of the Indian Limitation Act as to the acquisition of an easement by prescription have been fulfilled.

It is a firmly established doctrine that the enjoyment of the right on the part of the dominant owner should be nec vi, nec clam, nec precario, that is, should be peaceable, open and as of right. From the facts proved in this case it may be safely inferred that the user was neither forcible nor clandestine; but can it be said that it was not precarious? Now the plaintiffs in their plaint allege, and to the same effect is the evidence given by their witnesses, that they have been paying Rs. 1 per annum in lieu of the privilege of working the water-mill. This payment leaves no doubt whatever that the enjoyment was not as of right. The words "as of right" connote that the person claiming the easement must have exercised it as if he had been the true owner, without permission or license from any one. The enjoyment in this case depended, not on right, but on the will of the servient owner. As observed by Farwell, J., in Burrows v. Lang (1), "If the servient owner can... whether the dominant owner likes it or not—put a stop to the easement, there is really no easement, because the very idea of right which necessarily underlies an easement is negatived."

The payment made periodically may be evidence that the user of the alleged easement was not user as of right, but with the license of the owner of the servient tenement. "One of the most common modes of preventing such a user growing into a right," observed Lord Halsbury in Gardner v. Hodgson's Kingston Brewery Company, Limited (2), "is to insist upon a small periodical payment, and if such evidence as we have here were permitted to be evidence of a right, not only to the user upon terms of payment, but of a right to make the payment and continue the user in perpetuity, it would be a very formidable innovation indeed. Those who drafted the Prescription Act knew well what they were about when, in dealing with the consequences which have to follow from long-continued user, they used the words 'as of right,'"

"I cannot help thinking there has been a certain play upon words in commenting upon them. In a certain sense a man has a right to enjoy what he has paid for, and, therefore, if the appellant here at any time during the year when she had paid for the right to use this way had been hindered, she would have had a right to complain that what I will call her contract had been broken, and that during the year she had a right to use the way. I do not think that this would have established a right in the proper sense, because, being but a parole license, it might be withdrawn, and her action would be for damages, but she would have no right to the way. And in no sense could the right be the right contemplated by the Act. That right means a right to exercise the right claimed against the will of the person over whose property it is sought to be exercised. It does not and cannot mean an user enjoyed from time to time at the will and pleasure of the owner of the property over which the user is sought."

The fact of payment is fatal to the plaintiffs' case. They have certainly proved that their enjoyment has not been either vi or clam, but they have failed to establish that it has not been precario. Accordingly I accept the appeal, and setting aside the decrees of the Courts below dismiss the suit. In view of all the circumstances I leave the parties to bear their own costs in all the Courts.

Land Revenue Sales Act (XI B.O. of 1859), s. 36, object of—Benami purchase, right of third party to raise question of—Appeal, dismissal of—Discussion of matters affecting respondents, propriety of.

The object of section 36 of Act XI of 1859 is to prevent the true owner from disputing the title of his benamidar (certified purchaser), and not to preclude a third party from enforcing his claim against the true owner in respect of the benami property. [p. 791, col. 1.]

Therefore, in a suit by a third party to enforce his right in respect of property sold under Act XI of 1859, the question whether the defendant purchased the property benami is not excluded from the consideration of the Court by reason of section 36 of the Act. [p. 791, col. 1.]

Chundra Kaminy Debea v. Ram Ruttun Pattuck, 12 C. 302; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 205, referred to.

In an appeal by a defendant in which he is found to be a mere benamidar, it is not open to the Court to go into other matters that affect the rights of the respondents. [p. 791, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeals against the decrees of the District Judge, Chittagong, dated the 13th November 1914, modifying that of the Munsif, 1st Court, at Satkhira, dated the 17th July 1913.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Prabodh Kumar Das, for the Plaintiff. Appellant.—It has been found by the learned Judge that the defendant No. 2 was merely a benamidar for the defendant No. 1 and that he had no interest in the subject-matter in dispute. This has been found in the appeal to the District Judge, which was preferred only by the defendant No. 1. My submission is that in that appeal it was not competent to the learned Judge to adjust the respective rights of the respondents, viz., the plaintiff and the defendant No. 1. My next point is that the appeal by the defendant No. 2 to the lower Appellate Court was not competent.

Babu Khitish Chandra Sen, for the Defendant-Respondent.—Having regard to section 36 of Act XI of 1859 under which the estate was sold for arrears of revenue, the plaintiff was not competent to bring a suit to oust a certified purchaser at a revenue sale on the ground that he was a benamidar for somebody else. So the learned Judge was not competent to come to a finding that the defendant No. 2 was a benamidar for somebody else. Section 36 is a complete bar to the plaintiff's suit.

Babu Probodh Kumar Das, in reply.—Section 36 of Act XI of 1859 does not at all affect the present suit.

The object of section 36 is to prevent the true owner from disputing the title of his benamidar. It does not preclude the plaintiff, a third party, from enforcing his claim against the true owner as regards the benami property. See section 53 of Act XI of 1859; Chundra Kaminy Debea v. Ram Ruttun Pattuck (1).

JUDGMENT.—These are two appeals preferred against a decision of the learned District Judge of Chittagong, dated the 13th February 1914, reversing the decision of the Munsif of Satkhira. The plaintiffs brought the suit to recover a share in a certain revenue-paying estate sold at a revenue sale for arrears of revenue and said to have been purchased by the defendant No. 1 in the benami name of the defendant No. 2 and alternatively he asked that if the sale was a valid sale, he might be given his share in the surplus sale-proceeds which had been withdrawn from the Collectorate by the defendant No. 1. The case came on for trial before the Munsif who found, first of all, that the defendant No. 2 was a benamidar of the defendant No. 1 and that the real purchaser was, in fact, the defendant No. 1. The learned Munsif also found, for reasons which commended themselves to him, that as between the plaintiff and the defendant No. 1, the plaintiff was entitled to recover the share he sued for, less a particular share which the plaintiff alleged he acquired title to by a document called a mukh- tiarnama. Against that decision the defendant No. 2 appealed to the learned District Judge. The learned District Judge on hearing the appeal agreed with the finding of the Munsif that the defendant No. 2 was a benamidar of the defendant No. 1, and that, therefore, he had no interest in the property. Prima facie, therefore, directly the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that the defendant No. 2 had no interest in the property, provided the point was capable of being entered into in the suit, the rest of his judgment was unnecessary and improper because no appeal had been filed by the defendant No. 1, and having come to a clear conclusion that the defendant No. 2 had no interest in the property, it was not necessary for the Judge to enquire into the other matters in order to adjust the rights of the parties before him. The case that has been made before us is that the finding as to the defendant No. 2 being a benamidar was a matter which was excluded from the consideration of the Court, having regard to section 36 of Act XI of 1859, under which these revenue-paying estates are sold for arrears of revenue. That section is in these terms: "Any suit brought to oust the certified purchaser as aforesaid on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of another person not the certified purchaser or on behalf partly of himself and partly of another person, though by agreement the name of the certified purchaser was used, shall be dismissed with costs." The matter has been the subject of judicial decisions and the matter is concluded so far as this Court is concerned. In the case of Okundra Kamini De'ea v. Ram Ruttun Puttuck (1) it was held that section 36 of Act XI of 1859 was passed in order to prevent the true owner from disputing the title of his benamidar (certified purchaser), and not to preclude a third party from enforcing his claim against the true owner in respect of the benami property. That is exactly the case here. Section 36 is, therefore, no bar to the plaintiff's right in the present suit. That being so, directly the Judge came to the conclusion on the appeal before him that the defendant No. 2 had no interest in the subject-matter in dispute and was merely a benamidar, it was not open to him in that appeal to go into the other matters that affected purely the rights of the respondents in that appeal and to vary the judgment of the first Court in the manner he has done in the course of his judgment. The result, therefore, is that the appeal of the plaintiff, namely Appeal No. 324 of 1915, must be allowed with costs and the appeal of the defendant No. 2, that is, Appeal No. 337 of 1915 must be dismissed with costs; that is to say, the decree of the Munsif will be restored with costs to the plaintiff in all Courts.

Appeal No. 324 allowed;
Appeal No. 337 dismissed.

Mr. Herbert, for the Appellants,
Mr. Gullu Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit by the respondents against the Amritsar National Banking Company, Limited, was instituted on the 13th of January 1916, after an order directing the liquidation of the company subject to the supervision of the Court had been passed by this Court. There can be no manner of doubt that under section 171 read with section 225 of the Indian Companies Act, VII of 1913, no suit or other legal proceeding could be commenced against the company except by leave of the Court, and it is manifest that no such leave was obtained by the respondents prior to the institution of their suit. The order of the Additional Judge grants them leave to proceed with their suit, but the question whether it should have been instituted has never been determined by the Liquidation Court.

It appears that the object of the suit is to obtain a declaration that the respondents did not in the eye of law become share-holders of the company. This is, however, a matter which can be satisfactorily determined in the winding-up, and no action is necessary for the purpose. Indeed, the settlement of the list of contributories is an important function of the Liquidation Court, and the business of winding-up would come to a standstill, if each contributory were allowed to institute a regular suit for the determination of his liability.

It is true that the Appellate Court does not ordinarily interfere with the discretion of the lower Court in the matter of granting leave to continue an action, vide Thames Plate Glass Company v. Land and Sea Telegraph Construction Company (1), but the order of the Additional Judge in this case is wholly wrong, and cannot be sustained. The Legislature never contemplated that the persons alleged to be the contributories of the company should, after the order of winding-up, be allowed to have recourse to an action for the purpose of having an adjudication upon their liability to pay calls on their shares. Such a matter is peculiarly within the jurisdiction of the Court conducting the liquidation, and cannot be decided by any other Court.

Accordingly I accept the appeal, and revoking the leave granted by the Additional Judge I remit the case to the lower Court, with the direction that it should call upon the respondents to show cause why their names should not be placed upon the list of contributories. The Court should allow both the parties to adduce their proof and disproof and then adjudicate upon the liability of the respondents. I make no order as to costs in this Court.

Appeal accepted; Case remitted.

The consignment of a larger quantity of goods than that ordered will not entitle the person ordering to refuse to take delivery of the consignment altogether, when the goods ordered can be easily separated from the quantity consigned. [p. 793, col. 1.]

Defendant wrote to plaintiff on 17th October 1909 to send 15 or 20 bags of areca nuts "at once." Plaintiff replied on 28th October 1909 that he would send the goods "within 15 or 20 days." On 1st December 1909 plaintiff, without waiting for a reply, sent 25 bags of areca nuts, which the defendant refused to accept. In a suit for damages for breach of contract:

Held, that under section 119 of the Contract Act, defendant was not justified in refusing to take delivery as the separation of 5 bags from the main consignment was not attended with risk or trouble. [p. 793, col. 2.]

Held, also, that the plaintiff's letter dated 20th October 1909 was in effect a counter-proposal, the defendant's omission to reply to it did not amount to its acceptance and there was no binding contract between the parties. [p. 793, col. 2; p. 794, col. 1.]

Appeal, under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar, dated the 7th August 1914, in Civil Revision Petition No. 347 of 1913, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Palghat, in R. S. C. S. No. 765 of 1910.

Mr. T. Prakasam, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. V. Parameswara Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant wrote to the plaintiff on the 17th of October 1909 to Palghat, where the latter was permanently residing, to send 15 or 20 bags of areca nuts "at once". The letter also stated that the plaintiff should attend to other business only after sending this consignment. The plaintiff, who had left Palghat owing to plague, wrote on the 28th October that he would send the goods "within 15 or 20 days." No reply was admittedly received from the defendant in answer to this suggestion. 25 bags of nuts were finally sent by the plaintiff on the 1st of December. The defendant refused to take delivery of them. Hence this suit for damages for breach of contract. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. In revision, the learned Judge of this Court awarded damages to the plaintiff. We agree with the learned Judge that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that because 25 bags were sent instead of 15 or 20 bags, the defendant was justified in refusing to take delivery. Under section 119 of the Contract Act, the test is whether the separation of the 5 or 20 bags from the main consignment was attended with "risk or trouble." We fail to see how the acceptance of 20 bags consigned would be risky or troublesome. On one other ground on which the Subordinate Judge's judgment proceeds, namely, that goods of cheaper value were not sent, we are in agreement with the learned Judge that the lower Court has not correctly understood the letter asking for goods.

On the main question whether there was a completed contract, we are constrained to differ from the learned Judge. The proposal of the defendant that there should be an immediate consignment was not accepted by the plaintiff. He apparently understood that time was of the essence of the contract, because he wrote back to say that he could send the goods only in 15 or 20 days. The acceptance was not absolute and unqualified as required by section 7, clause (1), of the Contract Act. According to the authorities both in England and in this country, the letter of the plaintiff promising to send the goods within the time specified by him amounted to a counter-proposal: Haji Mahomed Haji Jiva v. Spinner (1); per Jessel M. R. in Crossley v. Maycock, (2) and Jones v. Daniel (3); also Jordan v. Norton (4).

The remaining question is whether this counter-proposal of the plaintiff was accepted by the defendant. It is true that under section 3 of the Contract Act, the conduct of the acceptor or 'an omission' on his part to communicate may under certain circumstances amount to an acceptance. But to imply such an acceptance, the counter-proposal must have conveyed at least an intimation that silence would be regarded as an acceptance of the proposal. Reading section 3 and section 7, clause (2), together, it appears to us clear that a mere failure to reply to a counter-proposal would not per se amount to an acceptance of it. Willes, J., in Felthouse v. Bindley (5) went the length of saying that a person making a counter-proposal "had no right to put upon the nephew (acceptor) that he should consider his offer accepted, if he did not write." It may be open to argument whether under section 7 (2) read with section 3, an intimation of the kind referred to by the learned Judge, when not replied to, may not amount to an acceptance. However that may be, in the present case there was no such intimation in the counter-proposal as rendered it obligatory on the defendant to reply to it. We are, therefore, of opinion that neither the first proposal nor the counter-one was accepted by the respective parties so as to establish a binding contract between them. In this view, the refusal of the defendant to take delivery was not wrongful. We reverse the decree of the learned Judge and restore that of the Court below with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 65 (a).—Secondary evidence—Original document in possession of defendant—Adverse possession—Pleadings—Burden of proof.

Semble.—Where an original document is in the possession of the defendant who knows from the plaint that he would be required to produce it but does not produce it, and the plaintiff's evidence that he searched for it remains uncontradicted, the latter is entitled to give secondary evidence of the contents of the document under section 65 (a) of the Evidence Act. [p. 796, col. 2.]

In a suit for declaration of title upon the allegation that the defendant had repudiated it, the onus is on the defendant both to plead and to prove adverse possession for the statutory period. [p. 797, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Azamgarh, dated the 17th September 1914.

FACTS.—This was a suit for a declaration that the house in dispute belonged jointly to the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 4 to 6 and that defendant No. 3 was in possession thereof as a tenant.

The plaintiffs came into Court on the allegation that the house in dispute belonged to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who sold it to Farhat Ali, the predecessor-in-title of plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 4 to 6, by means of a registered sale-deed dated the 26th of November 1901, and that the said document was in possession of defendants Nos. 4 to 6. The plaintiffs further alleged that the house in dispute was given on rent by Farhat Ali to defendant No. 3, who now denied the plaintiffs' title.

Defendant No. 3 alone contested the suit and contended inter alia that the house in dispute belonged to him, and that he was not in possession thereof as a tenant.

Besides other evidence, oral and documentary, the plaintiffs produced in evidence a certified copy of the sale-deed dated the 26th of March 1901. The learned Munsif held that the plaintiffs had proved that the original sale-deed was missing and admitted the certified copy in evidence, and relying upon it and other evidence produced by the plaintiffs decreed the suit. On appeal by defendant No. 3, the learned District Judge held that the evidence adduced by the plaintiffs to prove the loss of the original sale-deed was not convincing and as they had not issued any notice to defendants Nos. 4 to 6 calling upon them to produce the original sale-deed, the certified copy was inadmissible in evidence. He further held that the plaintiffs had failed to prove their possession over the house in dispute within twelve years prior to the institution of the suit, and on these findings he allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit.

MUHAMMAD KAMIL v. HABIBULLAH.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellants.—The plaintiffs' allegation was that the original sale deed was in the possession of defendants Nos. 4 to 6, and as from the nature of the case they must have known that they would be required to produce it, it was not at all necessary for the plaintiffs to give a notice to the said defendants to produce the original. [He referred to sub-clause 2 of the proviso to section 66 of the Evidence Act.] Moreover no objection should have been allowed to be taken in the lower Appellate Court as to the admissibility of a copy of a document which was admitted in evidence by the Court of first instance without any objection: Kishori Lal Goswami v. Rakhal Das Banerjee (1).

Therefore the copy produced by the plaintiffs should not have been rejected as inadmissible in evidence. Again, the finding of the Court of first instance, that title was with the plaintiffs, was based not only upon the copy of the sale-deed, but upon other evidence as well, which the learned Judge in the Court below had neither discussed nor disbelieved. The mere fact that the copy of the sale-deed was admissible in evidence was no ground for reversing the decree of the first Court, as independently of the said document there was sufficient evidence upon the record to justify the decision of that Court.

He relied on section 167 of the Evidence Act.

The cardinal point to be decided in the case was, whether or not defendant No. 3 came in possession of the house in dispute as the plaintiffs' tenant. If he did, section 116 of the Evidence Act was in his way, and he was estopped from denying the plaintiffs' title, and the question whether or not the plaintiffs were really the owners of the house in dispute was absolutely immaterial for the decision of the case.

No question of limitation arose in the case. It was common ground that physical possession was with the defendant, but the plaintiffs' case was that the possession of the defendant was in the capacity of a tenant. Moreover, if the plaintiffs were originally the owners of the house in dispute, they need not have proved their possession within twelve years prior to the institution of the suit. The burden of proving that the plaintiffs' title had been extinguished by reason of adverse possession of the defendant was upon the defendant-respondent: Secretary of State v. Chelikani Rama Rao (2).

The numerous cases in India that laid down that at the date of the suit the plaintiff must prove what was termed as subsisting title, had been inferentially overruled by the said decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council.

Mr. S. M. Y. Hasan, for the Respondent.—The plaintiffs were not originally the owners of the house in dispute. They asserted that they had purchased the house from the original owner. Under these circumstances it lay upon them to prove the sale-deed alleged by them. It was for the plaintiffs to prove that the original sale-deed was missing before they could adduce secondary evidence of the sale-deed. According to the finding of the Court below, this the plaintiffs had failed to do. Therefore, the copy of the sale-deed was rightly rejected by the learned Judge in the Court below.

The finding of the Court below that the plaintiffs had failed to prove their possession within the statutory period was a finding of fact based upon evidence and was fatal to the plaintiffs' case.

It was for the plaintiffs to prove that they had a subsisting title not extinguished by the operation of limitation before the defendant could be called upon to substantiate a plea of adverse possession. He relied on Inayat Husein v. Ali Husein (3).

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad was not heard in reply.

JUDGMENT.—This is an action brought for a declaration of title, possession and arrears of rent of a certain house and trees. The plaintiffs alleged that they, together with the defendants Nos. 4 to 7, who have been made pro forma defendants, are the heirs of Sheikh Farhat Husain, that the said property was sold by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to the said Farhat Husain for Rs. 99-15-0 by a sale-deed dated the 26th of March 1901, that the defendant No. 3 was a tenant at Rs. 1-8-0, that no rent had been paid since April 1913 and that the defendant No. 3 repudiated the plaintiffs' title on the 15th of April 1914. They further alleged that the defendant No. 1 had brought a collusive suit against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 to which the plaintiffs were no party, and by which defendant No. 3 obtained in March 1914 a decision in his favour that he was the owner. They further alleged that the original sale-deed was in the possession of defendants Nos. 4 to 7. The defence of the defendant No. 3 in substance denied the plaintiffs' title and alleged that he himself was the owner. No other written statement appears on the record. There was no plea of adverse possession nor was any question pleaded as to the Statute of Limitation. So far the dispute appears to be a very ordinary and a simple one of title. The Munsif found that the original sale-deed was missing and that the plaintiffs were entitled to put in a certified copy, which is not suggested to be otherwise than genuine. The Munsif found that it was genuine and that it transferred title to the property in question to the plaintiffs' father. He also found that the defendant No. 3 was a tenant, that he had received a notice to quit from the plaintiffs' father in 1904, that the said notice was sent on a post card which was traced to the possession of the defendant on the 15th of June 1914, and that the defendant, when questioned about the same, denied all knowledge of it. He found also that the defendant was put back in possession by the plaintiffs' father on promising to pay rent regularly, that the plaintiffs had been realising rents and although the defendant was able to produce receipts for payment of house-tax, he could produce none for 1904, the year when he had been ejected. He found himself unable to believe the relevant evidence called on the defendant's behalf, most of which was irrelevant. Under the circumstances it is not surprising that the Munsif gave judgment for the plaintiffs. It is difficult to see what else he could have done. On appeal the District Judge said that two questions arose: the first, one of title, and the second, whether the plaintiffs had been in possession within the last twelve years. No such question as the second arose at all. It was not pleaded and it was not raised in the memorandum of appeal.

On the question of title, he held that the copy of the sale-deed was inadmissible. In this I think he was wrong. Even if paragraph 8 of the plaint, alleging that the defendants Nos. 4 to 7 had got the original, was not a sufficient notice to produce, their possession of it as co-heirs would be both lawful and natural and the uncontradicted testimony of the plaintiffs that they had searched for it seems to me sufficient to entitle the plaintiffs to put in their copy. The plaintiffs' position would no doubt be stronger, if they could show who last had it and if they had summoned them as witnesses to produce it. But I think the copy was admissible under section 65 (a) of the Indian Evidence Act, inasmuch as the original appears to be in the possession of the defendants Nos. 4 to 7 who knew from the plaint that they would be required to produce it. This, however, is of no importance. The District Judge clearly overlooked the provisions of section 167 of the Evidence Act. There was abundant evidence if the lower Appellate Court believed it (the Munsif had already believed it) to justify the decision. The District Judge appears to have ignored it. At any rate he has come to no decision upon it.

It was, however, argued before me that there was a finding of fact which was fatal to the plaintiffs' case, namely, that the plaintiffs had not been in possession within limitation. I have no idea what this finding means. If it was intended to be a finding that the defendant had been in adverse possession for more than twelve years, it was not competent for the Judge to find it. The point was never raised by the defendant who pleaded his own title. But before the point can in any case be decided, it is necessary first to dispose of the question of the plaintiffs' title. If that failed, the suit failed. If the plaintiffs succeed in establishing their title, the question, if raised by the defendant, would then arise whether the plaintiffs had been dispossessed and whether the defendant No. 3 was their tenant, and whether his possession had become adverse and, if so, how and when. If the District Judge meant physical possession the finding is irrelevant. It was common ground that the defendant No. 3 was in physical possession. The plaintiffs alleged that they had been in receipt of rent up to April 1913 and that in 1904 their father was in actual physical possession. The District Judge has not addressed his mind to this point at all, nor has he dealt with the very clear finding of the Munsif. If the District Judge meant that even if the plaintiffs proved title they had still to prove what has been called "subsisting title" within twelve years, I find myself unable to agree with him. The plaintiffs did not allege that they had been dispossessed. They claimed a declaration of title upon the allegation that the defendant had repudiated it. If they established their title, the onus was on the defendant both to plead and to prove adverse possession for the statutory period. This has always been the law in England, and was recently re-affirmed by the Privy Council in the case referred to by Mr. Iqbal Ahmad and reported as Secretary of State v. Chelikani Rama Rao (2). The relevant passages are to be found at page 1126*. It overruled four decisions of the Madras High Court, and the cases in this country which have laid down the contrary must be taken to be no longer the law. When a plaintiff admits dispossession, different considerations arise. I am of opinion that the expression in the judgment of the District Judge relied upon by the respondent before me is not a finding of fact at all. It is a mistaken statement of fact and law founded upon a misdirection upon a point which was not before him. I have no alternative but to refer issues to the lower Appellate Court in order that final findings may be arrived at. I was asked to remand the whole case; but I see no real advantage to the parties in doing so. It is an unfortunate result. The whole value of the property in dispute is below Rs. 100. The case raised by the pleadings and decided by the Munsif appears to have been a simple and straightforward one. The plaint was filed nearly three years ago. This is the third Court in which it has been litigated. The costs must already exceed the whole value of the property and there are still issues of fact undecided. I refer the following issues:—

(1). Does it appear that the original sale-deed was in the possession of the defendants Nos. 4 to 7, or one or other and which of them?

(2). Have the plaintiffs made all reasonable search for the original?

(3). Is the original sale-deed lost, or have the plaintiffs been prevented for any reason, not arising from their own default or neglect, from producing it before the Munsif?

(4). Did the defendant No. 3 become the tenant of the plaintiffs' father sometime before 1904 at a rent of Rs. 1-8-0 or at some other and what rent?

(5). Was the defendant No. 3 ejected by the plaintiffs' father in or about the year 1904?

(6). Did the defendant No. 3 become the tenant of the plaintiffs' father at any and what time after 1904?

(7). Did the defendant No. 3 pay rent of Rs. 1-8-0 or any other and what rent to the plaintiffs' father or to the plaintiffs or any of them at any and what time after 1904?

(8). Is there sufficient evidence to establish the plaintiffs' title independently of the certified copy of the sale-deed?

The parties will be at liberty to tender any additional evidence on these issues. On return of the findings ten days will be allowed for objections.

Issues remitted.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 29, scope of—Compromise decree enhancing rent more than two annas in rupee, validity of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 95—Suit to set aside decree obtained by fraud—Limitation.

MOHAMAD JAN V. COMMISSIONER OF PATNA

Section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies only to the case of a money rent of an occupancy raiyyat and not to that of a tenant at fixed rate. There is nothing in that section or in any other provision of the Act to prevent a landlord or tenant from entering into any agreement whereby the status of the tenant is raised from an occupancy raiyyat to that of a tenant at fixed rate, and as a consideration by the tenant for acquiring a higher status the rent is enhanced more than two annas in the rupee. [p. 798, col. 2.]

A suit to set aside a compromise decree alleged to have been obtained by fraud is governed by Article 95 of the Limitation Act Schedule I and must be brought within three years from the date of the knowledge of such fraudulent decree. [p. 799, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Darbhanga, dated the 29th August 1911, reversing the decree of the Munsif, 2nd Court, Darbhanga, dated the 29th August 1910.

Mr. Lachmi Narain Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. Fakhruddin, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants in this case are the tenants in respect of a holding of 13 bighas and odd in Mauza Barhampore. The Record of Rights recorded the holding in the name of the ancestor of the appellants, who was entered as a tenant at fixed rate with a rental of Rs. 16. The record was finally published in June 1900. About a year after, in May 1901, the landlord brought a suit for a declaration that the tenant was only an occupancy raiyyat and that the rental was Rs. 25-5-6.

The suit was decided on the basis of a compromise entered into between the parties, whereby the status of the tenant was declared to be that of a tenant at fixed rate and the rental was fixed at Rs. 25-5-6. This compromise decree is dated the 8th of July 1901. The estate of the landlord subsequently came under the Court of Wards of the District of Patna.

In 1905 a certificate for arrears of rent was issued and enforced against the tenant. The tenant, that is the ancestor of the appellants, brought a suit, out of which this appeal arises, in the Court of the Munsif of Patna on the 10th of July 1909 for a declaration that he was a tenant at fixed rate and that the rental was Rs. 16 as entered in the finally published Record of Rights, and that the compromise decree of July 1901 referred to above was not binding upon him and was null and void.

As a result of the above declarations, if found in his favour, the plaintiff prayed that the compromise decree of July 1901 be set aside as having been obtained by fraud.

In the plaint it is alleged that the plaintiff came to know of the fraudulent compromise decree on the 25th of November 1907, on which date it is said the cause of action for this suit arose.

The Munsif decreed the suit of the plaintiff. The landlord appealed to the District Judge, who by his judgment dated the 29th August 1911 reversed the decision of the Munsif and dismissed the suit brought by the plaintiff. The appellants, as heirs of the original tenant-plaintiff, have preferred this appeal against the said decree of the District Judge.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the compromise decree is void, inasmuch as it has contravened the provisions of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act in enhancing the rent from Rs. 16 to Rs. 25-5-6, that is, more than two annas in the rupee.

In the compromise decree the status of the tenant has been declared to be that of a tenant at fixed rate and the rental has been fixed to be Rs. 25-5-6. The landlord had claimed in that suit that the tenant was only an occupancy raiyyat, but by the compromise the status of the tenant has been altered from an occupancy raiyyat to that of a tenant at fixed rate. There is nothing in section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, or under any other provision of the Act, to prevent a landlord or tenant from entering into any agreement whereby the status is raised from an occupancy raiyyat to that of a tenant at fixed rate and the rent is altered from Rs. 16 to Rs. 25, that is, more than two annas in the rupee as a consideration by the tenant for acquiring a higher status in the land. Moreover as by the terms of the compromise the status has been declared to be that of a tenant at fixed rate, section 29 of the Act, which applies only to the case of a money rent of an occupancy raiyyat, does not at all apply to this case. Nor does section 147-A in any way affect the compromise lawfully entered into by the landlord and tenant. There was a dispute between the parties both as to the status of the tenant and the rent payable by him. The parties were at liberty to settle by agreement their dispute in the manner in which they have done in the compromise petition on the basis of which the decree was passed.

The contention on behalf of the respondent in this case is that upon the findings of the lower Appellate Court the suit is clearly barred. The suit virtually is a suit to set aside a compromise decree alleged to have been obtained by fraud. The setting aside of the decree is the essence and substance of the action. Hence Article 95 of the Limitation Act will apply to this case and the suit should have been brought within three years from the date of the knowledge of the fraudulent decree. No doubt in the plaint this date of knowledge is alleged to be on the 8th of July 1901. The lower Appellate Court has held as a matter of fact that the summons was properly served upon the defendant in the first suit and that the compromise was entered into by him and that actually the defendant was a party to that compromise. The compromise petition is dated the 1st July 1901 and the decree was passed on the 8th July 1901 on the basis of that compromise petition. The plaintiff in this case, therefore, knew full well of the decree in 1901.

Upon these findings of the lower Appellate Court it is clear that the suit has been brought more than three years from the date of the knowledge of the fraudulent decree and as such is barred by Article 95 of the Limitation Act.

I, therefore, hold that the suit has been rightly dismissed by the lower Appellate Court. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 74—Compound interest, stipulation for—Penalty—Compensation in lieu of penalty, award of.

The addition of the words "or if the contract contains any other stipulation by way of penalty" to section 74 of the Contract Act by the Indian Contract (Amendment) Act of 1899 has considerably enlarged the scope of that section and has the effect of getting rid of all subtle technicalities on the application of the equitable principle regulating the duty of the Court to relieve against penalties. [p. 800, col. 2.]

In contracts stipulating for payment of compound interest in default of payment of interest, there are generally two contracts, one primary and the other subsidiary, and wherever the intention of the parties appears to be that the object of the subsidiary stipulation is to enforce or secure the performance of the primary contract, that subsidiary stipulation will be regarded as a penalty. A provision for payment of interest on interest overdue may be a penalty within the meaning of section 74 of the Contract Act. And it makes no difference in principle whether the interest payable on default is a higher rate of interest or the same rate of interest. [p. 800, col. 2.]

Where the parties stipulated for payment of compound interest at 18 per cent. per annum in default of payment of interest each month, the rate on loans secured by an equitable mortgage of properties being also the same:

Held, that the provision for compound interest was penal and should be relieved against. [p. 8 col. .]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—There may be cases where enhanced interest is secured in contemplation of a possible loss or damage; in such cases it would not be penal; but where the object of the stipulation is to secure punctual payment the provision would ordinarily be regarded as penal. Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri, in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the Madras High Court, in Civil Suit No. 190 of 1912.

Mr. T. Ramachandra Rao, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Branson and Branson, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—In this appeal the only question is whether compound interest should not have been allowed on the debts due on the two promissory notes dated 1st October 1904. These two notes were executed for Rs. 14,500 and Rs. 15,000 respectively, payable with interest at 18 per cent., and on the dates of their execution two memoranda were drawn up by which it was stipulated, among other things, that in default of payment of interest each month, compound interest would be payable with monthly rests. The promissory notes themselves do not expressly provide that interest was payable every month. Exhibits H and J also contain other stipulations, among which is the stipulation that there will be an equitable mortgage on certain properties of the executants of the promissory notes.

Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri who tried the suit has disallowed compound interest, holding that the contract in this respect was brought about by undue influence. As I am clearly of opinion that the stipulation contained in the agreement Exhibits H and J as to the payment of compound interest is by way of penalty, I shall deal with it first, as it might become unnecessary that the question of undue influence should be gone into by us. The interest provided is at the rate of 18 per cent. per annum and as I have already mentioned, the money was also secured by equitable mortgage of immoveable property. It appears that about Rs. 20,000 has already been paid by the defendant and the decree given by the learned Judge is for Rs. 64,000, that is to say, the plaintiffs receive altogether Rs. 84,000 for Rs. 30,000 advanced by them. If compound interest at 18 per cent. be allowed as claimed by the appellants, that would increase the amount by another Rs. 62,000. Of course if they are entitled to receive compound interest according to the strict terms of the agreement, the mere fact that they have already received a large return for the money lent by them and their claim is for another very large sum, can make no difference.

The question is governed by section 74 of the Contract Act. That section has been considered in a number of cases and very fully by a recent Full Bench of this Court in Avathani Muthukrishniah v. Sankaralingam Pillai (1) and also by Mr. Justice Mookerjee, the learned Judge of the Calcutta High Court, in Khagaram Das v. Ram Sankar Das Pramanik (2). The addition of the words "or if the contract contains any other stipulation by way of penalty" to section 74 by the Indian Contract (Amendment) Act of 1899 has, undoubtedly, considerably enlarged the scope of that section and it has the effect, as has been pointed out by more than one learned Judge, of getting rid of all subtle technicalities in the application of the equitable principle regulating the duty of the Court to relieve against penalties. It is stated by Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar in the Full Bench case in Avathani Muthukrishniah v. Sankaralingam Pillai (1) that in cases of this character there are generally two contracts, one primary and the other subsidiary, and wherever the intention of the parties appears to be that the object of the subsidiary stipulation was to enforce or secure the performance of the primary contract, that subsidiary stipulation will be regarded as a penalty.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandrier, the learned Vakild for the appellants, has argued with great emphasis that no stipulation for payment of compound interest at the same rate as the original rate of interest should be treated as a penalty within the meaning of section 74 and he contends that this proposition is laid down by the Privy Council in Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen (3).

As I read that decision, there is no such proposition to be found there. All that the Judicial Committee held in that case was that a stipulation to pay compound interest at a higher rate than what was originally agreed upon might be regarded as penalty. They do not say that in no case the stipulation to pay compound interest, if at the same rate, can be regarded as penalty. The exact point has been exhaustively dealt with by Mr. Justice

VENKATARAMIAH PILLAI v. SURAMANI PILLAI.

Mookerjee in Khagaram Das v. Ram Sankar Das Pramanik (2), and I agree with him that having regard to the very general words of section 74, the Court can treat any stipulation, the object of which is to secure the performance of the main contract between the parties, as a penalty and a stipulation for payment of compound interest may be, though it need not always be, by way of penalty. In this case the promissory notes provide for the payment only of simple interest at the rate of 18 per cent. It is by an agreement arrived at between the parties, on the same day separately, that payment of compound interest with monthly rests is stipulated for in default of payment each month of the simple interest mentioned in the promissory notes. I am of opinion that in this case, applying the test laid down in Avathani Muthukrishniah v. Sankaralingam Pillai (1), the contract evidenced by the promissory notes was the primary contract and the contract in Exhibits H and J was intended to be a subsidiary stipulation or contract the object of which was to secure the due performance of the principal contract. All that section 74 says is: "When a contract has been broken, if the contract contains any other stipulation by way of penalty, the party complaining of the breach is entitled to receive reasonable compensation." Here it is perfectly clear to my mind that, having regard to the rate of interest originally provided for, the stipulation providing for compound interest was by way of penalty. No doubt, as pointed out by Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar, compound interest means interest payable on the amount of interest which has not been paid. That is the substance of such a contract. But I fail to see why the stipulation for payment of interest on interest in default of regular payments of interest, as contemplated by the parties in this case, cannot be considered 'by way of penalty' within the meaning of section 74 if the parties so intended it. I do not see any distinction in principle between such a case and a case where a higher rate of simple interest is provided for. Take another case; where compound interest is stipulated for in default of payment of interest regularly for one year, I fail to understand why such a stipulation must be excluded from the scope of section 74. Nor do I see any difference in principle between such a case and this.

The appellants are, however, entitled to some reasonable compensation under section 74. Having regard to the high rate of interest which is provided for by the promissory notes, I think that Rs. 100 would be ample and reasonable compensation. That amount will, therefore, be added to the decree passed by the learned Judge. Otherwise the appeal will be dismissed. I may mention that Dr. Pandalai, having regard to the view which we expressed as to the stipulation for compound interest being by way of penalty, did not raise the question of undue influence; and we have, therefore, thought it unnecessary to deal with it. The appellants must bear the costs of this appeal.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I entirely agree with the judgment of the learned Officiating Chief Justice. I wish to add a few words, as a recent judgment of Sadasiva Aiyar, J., and myself has been quoted in support of the proposition contended for by Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar. To my mind, it is clear that there is no distinction on principle between a provision for compound interest at the same rate as the original rate of interest and a provision for a higher rate of interest than the original rate. Under section 74 of the Contract Act the question in each case will be whether the stipulation is penal. The explanation to the section seems to cover this case. It is there provided that a stipulation for increased interest from date of default may be a stipulation by way of penalty. In the present case there is a provision in the promissory notes for payment at a particular rate of interest. The provision in the memoranda is that if this interest is not paid monthly, compound interest at 18 per cent. should be paid. This case, therefore, is covered by the explanation and consequently the provision to pay compound interest is penal. Very great reliance has been placed by the learned Vakil upon the decision in Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen (3); certain observations of the Judicial Committee have been quoted as deciding that if the rate of compound interest is the same as the original rate of interest it should not be regarded as a penalty. I do not think that the language employed by the Judicial Committee justifies the construction placed upon it. The observation commented upon is this: "Compound interest is, in itself, perfectly legal, but compound interest at a rate exceeding the rate of interest on the principal moneys, being in excess of and outside the ordinary and usual stipulation, may well be regarded as in the nature of a penalty." Lord Davey does not say that under no circumstances would compound interest at the same rate as simple interest be penal. The decision to which I was a party, namely Ghantasala Seetharamiah v. Tadepalli Pitchayya (4), lays down "that a provision for compound interest on default is not by itself penal, but a provision for compound interest at an appreciably higher rate than the rate mentioned as payable till default may be penal." In that case the original rate was 9 3/16 per cent.; the compound interest was at 12 per cent. and yet we regarded that stipulation as penal. In the present case it is 18 per cent. compound interest. Applying the test which we applied to the case of Ghantasala Seetharamiah v. Tadepalli Pitchayya (4), there can be no doubt that the stipulation is penal. As has been pointed out by the learned Chief Justice, this is not a case of simple loan for which there is no security. It is a loan which is secured upon immoveable property, and as held in Abdul Majid v. Ksheroode Chandra Pal (5), the Court might very well regard any stipulation, where there is security which secures more than 10 per cent. interest, as an exorbitant rate. One may not lay down definitely that whenever a secured debt is made payable with more than 10 per cent. interest, the stipulation will be penalty. But the observation of the learned Judges is entitled to great weight in construing contracts like the present one where interest at 18 per cent. with a stipulation to pay compound interest at the same rate is provided in favour of a person who has obtained security as well. The provision in the document to my mind is certainly penal. There may be cases where enhanced interest is secured in contemplation of a possible loss or damage; in that case it would not be penal, but where the object of the stipulation is to secure punctual payment, the provision would ordinarily be regarded as penal. That is the view taken by Mr. Justice Mookerjee in Khagaram Das v. Ram Sankar Das Pramanik (2). That is also the view taken by the Bombay High Court in Velchand Chhaganlal v. Flagg (6) and in Allahabad in Kutub-ud-din Ahmad v. Bashir-ud-din (7). The matter has been very fully considered, if I may say so with respect, in an exhaustive and lucid judgment of Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar in Avathani Muthukrishniah v. Sankaralingam Pillai (1). The forcible language employed by the learned Judge that the Court should, as far as possible, try to save needy persons from the clutches of money-lenders and that it is in the interests of public policy that this protection should be afforded, has my full support. Under these circumstances, I agree with the Officiating Chief Justice that more than Rs. 100 should not be given to the appellants as compensation. I also agree in the order proposed as to costs.

Appeal dismissed; Decree modified.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal from an order of the learned District Judge of Chittagong, dated the 12th August 1915, affirming the order of the Munsif of North Rouzan, dated the 8th April of the same year. The application out of which the present appeal arises was an application for a decree absolute in a suit for foreclosure. The first decree was made by consent on the 28th December 1909. The date for payment under the terms of that decree was February 1910 and it was provided that, unless payment was made before that date, the mortgagor would be debarred from the right to redeem the property. Subsequent to that, on the 13th January 1912, an application was made for substitution and execution of the decree. That application was dismissed as no affidavit of service was filed in Court. The present application was made on the 7th April 1915. As already stated, the application was made for a final decree in a suit for foreclosure. That is how the parties treated the matter and that is how the matter came before the Court. The learned Judges in both the lower Courts held that the application was barred under the provisions of Article 181 of the Indian Limitation Act. Against that decision the present appeal has been preferred.

The only point that has been argued in this appeal is that there was no preliminary decree for foreclosure but that the parties by consent agreed to a final decree for foreclosure, and that this is an application for execution coming under the provisions of Article 182 of the Indian Limitation Act. To that view, I am unable to assent. The decree that was drawn, namely, unless payment was made before February 1910 the mortgagor would be debarred from his right to redeem the property, was in the common form of a preliminary decree, for foreclosure; and subsequent to that, as is always done, there should be a final decree for foreclosure where it is made to appear to the Court that default has taken place in the payment of the decretal amount within the time limited by the preliminary decree. The decree in this case is clearly a preliminary decree to be followed under the provisions of the law, as it stands under the present Code, by a final decree for foreclosure. That being so, that final decree for foreclosure would have to be applied for under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code and, under Article 181 of the Indian Limitation Act, an application for such a decree must be made with the period of three years from the time when the right to apply accrues. The learned District Judge, following the observations made by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in the course of his judgment in the case of Amolak Chand Parak v. Sharat Chandra Mukherjee (1), came to the conclusion that this was an application for a final decree and not an application in execution. In that view I agree. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed. As nobody appears for the respondent, we make no order as to costs.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 16—Adjudication—Suit for declaration by decree-holder, maintainability of.

After a judgment-debtor has become an insolvent, the decree-holder has no longer the right to attach his property nor to sue for a declaration in respect of it without the leave of the adjudicating Court. [p. 804, col. 1.]

BANKU CHANDRA BOSE v. MARIUM BEGAM.

Mr. McDonnell, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. E. Lambert, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was put down as an application for an order to withhold payment of money out of Court; but by consent of parties the appeal has been heard. The plaintiff Chetty obtained a decree against one Maung Po Te and attached in July 1915 a house and land. The defendant applied for the removal of the attachment and succeeded. The plaintiff then filed a suit for a declaration that the house and land was the property of his judgment-debtor, Po Te, at the time of the attachment, and he succeeded in the Sub-Divisional Court. On appeal to the Divisional Court the defendant raised the point that under section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act this suit would not lie because the judgment-debtor had become an insolvent on the 5th June 1915, on which date his property vested in the Court or the Receiver, and without the leave of the Court the creditor could not take any remedies against the judgment-debtor's property.

It is contended for the plaintiff-appellant that in a suit against a third party for a declaration that the property was the property of the judgment-debtor, he is not taking any remedy against the judgment-debtor's property. On the face of it that is true; but the defendant is entitled to shew that even if the property belonged to the judgment-debtor, the plaintiff has no locus standi to bring this suit. A plaintiff cannot sue for a declaration in respect of another person's property unless he has an interest in the property. If he is a judgment-creditor he can bring a suit for a declaration that the property belonged to his judgment-debtor, only because he has the right to attach it. After his judgment-debtor has become an insolvent, he no longer has the right to attach his judgment-debtor's property and, therefore, he has no right to sue for a declaration in respect of his judgment-debtor's property. He cannot sue on behalf of the Court. The plaintiff-appellant was given an opportunity in the Divisional Court of obtaining leave from the District Court to proceed against the property of the judgment-debtor, but that was refused. This appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—I am of opinion that the preliminary point which Mr. Sarkar took on behalf of the respondents, the plaintiffs, is a good one.

The order is set out at pages 25 and 26 of the paper-book, and the material part of it is in these terms:—"It is ordered that upon the said Syed Ashrufuddin Ahmed within three weeks from the date hereof paying to the defendants' attorney Babu Birendra Nath Mitra the sum of Rs. 250 towards the defendants' costs of and incidental to this application on the said Babu Birendra

RASH BIHARI DAS v. KUNJABIHARI PATRA.

Nath Mitra undertaking to refund any surplus that may be found to have been paid in excess upon taxation of the said costs and within one month from the date hereof giving security for 2,500 to the satisfaction of the Registrar the said order in so far as it dismissed this suit for want of prosecution be set aside and this suit be restored to its file." Then, "it is further ordered that the said Syed Ashrufuddin Ahmed do pay to the defendants their costs of and incidental to this application to be taxed by the Taxing Officer of this Court." In pursuance of that order the Rs. 250 was paid by Ahmed to the defendants' Solicitor, and was accepted by him. It is said by the learned Counsel for the appellant that his client could not help himself, as under the order Ahmed was bound to pay the Rs. 250, and the defendants' Solicitor was bound to accept it. Well that may be; but personally, I cannot help thinking that the defendants would have been in a much better position if, upon that transaction, they had said, "we intend appealing against this order and we only accept this sum of Rs. 250, under protest, because the order contains a direction that it shall be paid, but we place on record our intention to appeal and we accept the money under protest." But I do not base my judgment upon that ground only, because I think that when the defendants took advantage of the order which directed the payment to the defendants of their costs of and incidental to the application, they precluded themselves from appealing against that order. The principle upon which cases such as this must be dealt with was laid down quite clearly by my learned brother Mr. Justice Mookerjee in the case which has been cited and which is reported as Mani Lal Guzrati v. Harendra Lal Roy (1), and the passage which I am about to read begins at the bottom of page 558*: "That principle is that a party who has adopted an order of the Court and acted under it, cannot, after he has enjoyed a benefit under the order, contend that it is valid for one purpose and invalid for another." In my judgment, when the defendants adopted the order for taxation and payment of the costs, they did take a benefit under it, because they having obtained the allocatur, as far as I understand at present, there was nothing to prevent them from issuing execution, upon that allocatur, against Ahmed; and, for this reason I am of opinion that they did adopt the order of the Court, and more than that, they acted under it and enjoyed the benefit of it. That being so, upon the principle laid down in the case cited, which is the principle which has been in existence for many years since the case of Tinkler v. Hilder (2), the defendants cannot adopt the order for one purpose and their claim to have it set aside for another purpose.

For this reason I think this appeal should be dismissed with costs; such costs may be set off against any costs which are recoverable against Ahmed.

A suit to enforce a mortgage executed to secure a loan of paddy repayable with interest as paddy is not a suit to enforce payment of money charged on immoveable property to which Article 132 of the Limitation Act applies. The suit is governed either by Article 116 or 120.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Bankura, dated the 7th February 1913, modifying that of the Munsif, Khatra, dated the 13th January 1912.

FACTS.—One K executed a mortgage bond to D. for return of certain quantity of paddy borrowed from the latter on 20th May 1896, stipulating to repay the same with interest in kind on 11th February 1899. The bond further recited that in default of payment of interest in Magh of each year the accumulated interest was to be added to the principal and interest paid on the total amount. On 11th February 1911, the mortgagee's representatives sued the representatives of the mortgagor for recovery of the amount due by sale of the mortgaged properties. The defendants were ex-parte, but representatives of one L, alleged to be the purchaser of the mortgaged property, were, on their application, added as defendants on 21st April 1911. They pleaded that the suit was barred as against them. The first Court dismissed the claim as barred. On appeal, the District Judge reversed the decision, holding that though the suit was barred as against the purchasers, the properties should be sold for the amount due to the plaintiffs. The contesting defendants appealed to the High Court.

Babus Bipin Bihari Ghosh and Bijaykumar Bhattacharyya, for the Appellants.

Babus Dwarkanath Chakrabarti and Nakuleswar Mookerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is not a suit to enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property and so Article 132 cannot apply. Whether it be Article 116 or Article 120 that governs makes no difference. In our opinion, the suit would be barred with a very large margin to the lead. At the same time we are unable to subscribe to the law expounded by the learned District Judge. In disposing of the case on the ground that Article 132 is not applicable, we must not be taken as accepting that the learned Judge's view was otherwise correct. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the Munsif restored with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XX, r. 14—

Pre-emption—Decree based on compromise, compliance with.

Plaintiff in a pre-emption suit was given a decree in terms of a compromise, according to which he was inter alia to separate off and give to defendant a certain area of land within one month from the date of the decree. Before the expiration of that period plaintiff ceased to cultivate the area mentioned in the decree, with the intention to let the defendant have possession of the land.

Held, (1) that inasmuch as the decree was based upon a compromise, it was not a decree in a pre-emption suit to which the provisions of rule 14, Order XX, of the Civil Procedure Code could apply; [p. 807, col. 1.]

(2) that even if it was a decree in a pre-emption suit, plaintiff had substantially complied with its terms. [p. 807, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Multan Division, dated the 19th May 1913, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st class, Muzaaffargarh, dated the 29th January 1913, accepting the application.

Dr. Muhammad Iqbal, for the Appellants.

Lala Hargopal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen out of execution proceedings relating to a decree for pre-emption, dated the 29th May 1912, which was passed in favour of the appellants against the respondent Goda Khan; and the sole question for decision in the appeal is, whether the terms of the decree were not complied with by the appellants within the period of one month mentioned in the decree, with the result that the decree became null and void and the suit stood dismissed with costs.

The facts are fully stated in the orders of the Courts below and it is unnecessary to repeat them. The decree was given to the appellants in terms of a compromise between the parties, according to which the appellants were to pay into Court, within one month from the date of the decree, Rs. 528-11-0, being part of the purchase-money, and also to separate off and give to the respondent Goda Khan within the same period of one month ten bighas of land on the eastern side of Patti Sera Wali. The contention on behalf of the respondent is that although the sum of money, Rs. 528-11-0, was paid into Court by the appellants within the period fixed, they did not separate off and hand over to the respondent possession of ten bighas on the eastern side of Patti Sera

MA SEIN MYA v. SWAMI.

Wali within the said period; and it has accordingly been urged that the decree, not having been complied with according to its terms, became void and the suit stood dismissed with costs.

It seems clear to us that since the decree was based upon, and was passed in accordance with, a compromise, strictly speaking, it was not a decree in a pre-emption suit to which the provisions of rule 14 of Order XX, Civil Procedure Code, are applicable, and that the appellants, who are decree-holders, cannot get the benefit of the consent decree in question unless they shew that its terms were duly carried out. Upon this view of the case, the appellants had to separate off and give up possession of ten bighas on the eastern side of Patti Sera Wali for the benefit of the respondent; and the only point for decision is whether this was done by the appellants or not. It is, no doubt, true that no notice through the executing Court was given by the appellants to the respondent within one month from the date of the decree asking the latter to take possession of the land in question, nor were any mutation proceedings started at the appellants' instance within the period fixed. But it appears from the record that before the period mentioned in the decree had expired, the appellants had ceased to cultivate the ten bighas situate on the eastern side of the patti, the clear intention being to let the respondent have possession of the land as agreed upon between the parties. The parties reside in the same village; in fact, respondent Goda Khan is landlord of the land sold and of the land in possession of the appellants in Patti Sera Wali, of which the appellants are occupancy tenants; and in the circumstances indicated above, the respondent was clearly in a position to take possession of the ten bighas in question which had been left vacant by the appellants. He, however, never moved in the matter, and omitted to take possession within one month from the date of the decree, and this omission was doubtless due to his desire to defeat by a technical plea the provisions of the decree which had been passed in favour of the appellants. We have no hesitation in holding that by leaving the land uncultivated within the period fixed in the decree, so as to enable the respondent Goda Khan to take possession of it, the appellants substantially complied with its terms; and that the decree has not become null and void.

We accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, send the case back with a direction that execution of the decree be proceeded with at the instance of the appellants. The appellants will get their costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, para. 15—Arbitration—Award—Arbitrators, authority of—Evidence, insufficiency of, whether ground for refusing to enforce award.

Unless otherwise restricted by the order of reference, arbitrators are the final judges of matters of fact and so long as they act within the authority conferred on them, with fairness, the parties are bound by their decision and it is not for a Court to say that in its opinion the evidence was not sufficient to establish the conclusion at which the arbitrators arrived. The mere fact that the Judge thought that the arbitrators had not given sufficient weight to the provisions of section 110, Evidence Act, is no ground for refusing to enforce an award. [p. 808, col. 2.]

In order to make out a case for impeaching an award on the ground that witnesses were not examined by the arbitrators, there must be evidence to shew that witnesses were distinctly tendered to them. [p. 808, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decision of the Divisional Judge, Hanthawaddy, reversing the decree of the Sub-Divisional Court, Insein.

Mr. Hay, for the Appellant.

Maung Po Thit, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the decision of the Divisional Judge of Hanthawaddy, reversing the decree of the Sub-Divisional Court, Insein, which gave effect to the award of certain arbitrators. The Divisional Judge held that the award ought not to be enforced, and after fixing further issues remanded the case for trial on its merits. He discussed the evidence recorded on remand and came to the conclusion that the mortgage to Swami had not been proved and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The appeal is based on the contention that the Divisional Judge was wrong in holding that the award was not valid, and that the mortgage had not been proved. The question of the arbitrators is binding on the parties. The facts that raise on the question may be briefly stated. The appellant Ma Sein Mya is the purchaser of the right, title and interest of Maung Aung Ban in a parcel of land measuring 12.95 acres, situated in the Nyaungtabin Kwin Circle, Hlegu Township. It is not disputed that the land originally belonged to Aung Ban. The case for the plaintiff is that this land was mortgaged by Aung Ban more than twenty years ago to his brother Shwe Zin for Rs. 100 and by Shwe Zin to Swami for the same sum. Aung Ban returned in 1913 to claim the right of redeeming the land. His right was disputed by Swami, and the parties by a written agreement, dated the 15th May 1913, referred the matter to the arbitration of eight elders. On the 25th May, these elders gave their award. They said that the land had been mortgaged and fixed the amount at which it was to be redeemed at Rs. 115.

Sawmi's case is that he bought the land from Aung Ban and his wife for Rs. 100 and only referred to arbitration the question whether the land was to be transferred to his name or not. He further contended (1) that the name of Maung Shwe Zin had been added as one of the parties to the arbitration against his consent, and that he had refused to continue the arbitration proceedings in consequence of this addition; (2) that the award was not in accordance with law; (3) that some of the arbitrators did not agree to it; (4) that some of them were not present; and (5) that the witnesses were not examined. Each of the parties examined three of the arbitrators as witnesses about the course of the arbitration proceedings. The Trial Judge disbelieved the evidence of Swami and his witnesses, and held that no grounds for not enforcing the award had been made out. The Divisional Judge discussed the evidence, but came to no definite finding as to whether Swami's witnesses were speaking the truth or not. He rejected the award on the grounds (1) that it was not the award of all the arbitrators appointed; (2) that it was unlikely that the award represented any agreement, as most of the arbitrators were partisans and (3) that the decision was not satisfactory, as in the opinion of the Judge it was based on insufficient evidence. The third ground given by the Divisional Judge for refusing to accept the award is not tenable in law. Unless otherwise restricted by the order of reference, arbitrators are the final judges of matters of fact and so long as they act within the authority conferred upon them, with fairness, the parties are bound by their decision, and it is not for a Court to say that in its opinion the evidence was not sufficient to establish the conclusion at which the arbitrators arrived. The mere fact that the Judge thought that the arbitrators had not given sufficient weight to the provisions of section 110, Evidence Act, is no ground for refusal to enforce an award.

In view of the fact that the plaintiff's case is that the absence of one of the arbitrators had been expressly waived by Swami and that all the other arbitrators had signed the award, it is of vital importance to come to a definite finding as to whether the award was the unanimous opinion of all the arbitrators except Maung Nyo, whose presence had been excused by Swami.

The story told by Swami and his witnesses is that at the second meeting, the arbitrators proposed to add Shwe Zin as a party, whereupon he protested, cancelled his agreement and left the house. The plaintiff's witnesses say that the two parties were examined on the first day of hearing, and that as Swami admitted that the land was sold by both Aung Ban and Shwe Zin, they deferred further proceedings to procure the attendance of Shwe Zin. At the second hearing Shwe Zin's statement was recorded and he then signed that he agreed to any order made by the arbitrators. The parties were asked whether they could produce any evidence, and the only evidence forthcoming was a paytbaing produced by Swami. The arbitrators then delivered their award, which was signed by all of them except Maung Nyo, and by Swami himself. The Trial Judge who had the advantage of seeing the witnesses rejected the evidence for the defence, and, in my opinion, he had good reason for doing so.

Swami denied that he had ever stated before the arbitrators that he had bought the land from Aung Ban and Shwe Zin, but his own witness Shwe Hmon contradicts him on this point. The reason for his denial is obvious; he is anxious to make out that Shwe Zin was imported into the proceedings at the second hearing, in spite of his objection. Myat San swears that no award was ever made, yet he has to admit that he signed it, and he is unable to explain how he came to do this. Po Ka, headman of Kannayingo, denied that he signed the award, but neither Court has believed him, and a comparison of the signatures on the award and his other signatures on the record leaves no room for doubt that Po Ka has given false evidence in denying his signatures. The Trial Judge made an unfavourable note on the way in which Swami's third witness gave his evidence. On the other hand two out of three witnesses examined by the plaintiff are village headmen who are not related to her; one of them was Swami's own nominee. They say that Swami agreed that the arbitration should proceed in the absence of Maung Nyo, that Shwe Zin was examined because it was found at the first hearing that he had been one of those who sold Swami the land, that the only evidence the parties had to produce was the paytbain, and that Shwe Zin signed the original agreement of reference merely to prevent further dispute. All the arbitrators with the exception of Maung Nyo then delivered and signed the award. Shwe Hmon had a sore hand, and was unable to sign. He, therefore, touched the pen. Shwe Hmon admits that he had a sore hand and pretends that this was the reason why his recollection of the proceeding is so vague. I have no doubt that the version of the plaintiff's witnesses represents the true facts of the case. Swami himself stated that he objected to the arbitration solely on the ground that Shwe Zin had been added as a party, and that he did not ask the arbitrators for an opportunity to produce evidence. After the lapse of so many years, it is improbable that any evidence was forthcoming about a small transaction of the kind in dispute in this case.

I shall now deal with each of the objections to the award seriatim. The first objection, that Shwe Zin had been added as a party, is frivolous. He merely agreed to abide by the award, and it was obviously to the interest of both parties that he should make this declaration. The second objection on the ground that all the arbitrators did not agree to the award and were not present, is also untenable. It was not even urged by Swami when he gave evidence. He has waived his objection on this ground all through the proceedings in arbitration and in Court. It is no longer open to him to repudiate the position he has deliberately taken up, Sheonoth v. Ramnath (1), Manindra Nath Mandal v. Mohanunda Roy (2). The third objection to the award on the ground that the witnesses were not examined, has no substance in it whatever. In order to make out a case for impeaching an award, there must be evidence to show that a witness was distinctly tendered to the arbitrators. There is no such evidence in this case, and I have no doubt that the arbitrators took all the evidence before them.

I am of opinion that the Trial Judge came to a right conclusion in holding that the award was binding on Swami. The decree of the Divisional Court is set aside and that of the Sub-Divisional Court restored with costs in all Courts.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 24 (4)—

SUKHA v. RAGHUNATH DAS.

"Court of Small Causes" interpretation of—Suit of Small Causes Court nature, transfer of, to Court not invested with Small Cause powers—Decision—Appeal.

The expression "a Court of Small Causes" in section 24 (4) of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, includes Courts invested with Small Cause Court jurisdiction as well as Courts constituted under Act IX of 1887. [p. 812, col. 2.]

Therefore, where a suit of Small Cause Court nature instituted in a Court lawfully empowered to try it as such is transferred by a District Judge under section 24 (4) of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, to a Court not invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes, the latter Court must, for the purposes of the suit, be deemed to be a Court of Small Causes and as such no appeal lies from its decision in such a case. [p. 811, col. 2.]

Civil revision against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Muttra, dated the 17th July 1915.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—This is an application in revision which has been referred to a Bench of two Judges owing to a difficulty of the point of law raised. The facts are given in the referring order of Mr. Justice Rafique. A suit was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Muttra. This was also a Court invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes, within the meaning of sections 32, 33, 34 and other sections of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887). The suit in question was of a Small Cause Court nature, that is to say, had it been tried in the Court in which it was originally instituted it would have been tried as a Small Cause Court suit by a Court lawfully empowered to try it as such, and would have been subject to the provisions of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act as to the right of appeal. The suit in question, however, along with certain others, was transferred by an order of the District Judge to the Court of the Munsif of Muttra for disposal. This was not at that time a Court invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes. In his order of transfer the learned District Judge makes an express reference to the provisions of section 24, clause (4), of the Code of Civil Procedure. There can be no doubt, therefore, that the Court which ordered the transfer understood that the provisions of this sub-section would apply to the case and deliberately intended that it should be tried by the learned Munsif as a Court of Small Causes. That Court having decreed the plaintiff's claim the defendants appealed to the District Judge and the appeal came up for disposal before the Subordinate Judge of Muttra. He held that, by reason of the provisions of section 24, clause (4), aforesaid, the suit had been tried by a Court which must, for the purpose of that suit, be deemed to have been a Court of Small Causes, and he accordingly held that no appeal lay. The defendants have brought the matter before this Court by means of an application for revision.

They contend that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong, that an appeal did lie to his Court and that he has erroneously refused to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him by law. It is worth while to quote the words of the sub-section with which we are dealing. Section 24 of the Code of Civil Procedure confers certain powers of transfer on the High Court or the District Court, and then in sub-section (4) it is enacted that "the Court trying any suit transferred or withdrawn under this section from a Court of Small Causes shall for purposes of such suit be deemed to be a Court of Small Causes." The question which we have to determine is, whether the words "a Court of Small Causes" as used in this sub-section mean only Courts constituted under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, or include also Courts exercising the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes under that Act. We have been referred to a good deal of case-law on the subject; but it is worth while to note at the very outset that many of the decided cases have no direct bearing on the question before us, because they do not involve any question as to the interpretation of section 24 of the present Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908) or of the corresponding section 25 of Act XIV of 1882. For instance, in Shyam Behari Lal v. Kali (1) and also in Sarju Prasad v. Mahadeo Pande (2), the questions to be determined had to do with the case of a Munsif not invested with Small Cause Court powers succeeding to the office of a Munsif who was so invested. No question arose in either of these cases as to the interpretation of section 24 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Again is Dulal Chandra Deb v. Ram Narain Deb (3), the question for determination was essentially similar to that in the above two cases, and the reference made to the provisions of section 24 of the Code of Civil Procedure can only be regarded as substantially obiter dicta. There is an older case of this Court, that of Mangal Sen v. Rup Chand (4), in which the facts were more nearly similar to those now before us and in which reference was made to the provisions of section 25 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882. The learned Judges do not base their decision entirely upon the consideration of the terms of this section; but the case has always been quoted as an authority for the proposition that the words a "Court of Small Causes" as used in section 24 (4) of the present Code of Civil Procedure, or in section 25 of Act XIV of 1882, do include Courts invested with Small Cause Court jurisdiction. The only decision directly to the contrary seems to be that of the Bombay High Court in *Ramchandra v. Ganes*h (5). It has been contended before us that the authority of the decision in Mangal Sen's case (4) has been shaken by the more recent pronouncements of this Court to which reference has been made, and that the authority of the decision of the Bombay High Court with the reasoning upon which that decision is based, as also the line of reasoning adopted by the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in Dulal Chandra Deb v. Ram Narain Deb (3), should prevail with us. The proposition contended for is that the words "a Court of Small Causes" in the sub-section in question mean a Court properly and strictly so called, and do not include a Court invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes. It seems to us that the plain prima facie meaning of the words as they appear in section 24 of the Code of Civil Procedure is against this contention, and that the burden lies on those who maintain it. The learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court lay great stress upon the argument that the Legislature cannot be held to have intended that the mere order of a District Judge should have the effect of investing the presiding officer of a particular Court with certain powers, when such powers can only be conferred ordinarily by an order of the Local Government. To this argument there seems to be a twofold answer. To begin with, the provisions of section 24, sub-section (4), of the Code of Civil Procedure, do mean something. On any interpretation, they do mean at least this, that if a suit is pending in a Court constituted under the provisions of the Small Cause Courts Act of 1887, the District Court has power to transfer that suit to another Court which is neither a Court constituted under that Act, nor a Court invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes, and that the Court to which the case is transferred will then be deemed, by virtue of the order of transfer, to be a Court of Small Causes for the purposes of that particular suit. It would seem, therefore, that the power which the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court consider to be "nothing else than disastrous" does in fact exist in certain cases, and the only question is whether it exists in others. In the second place, the provisions of sections 24 (4) of the Code of Civil Procedure are strictly limited in extent. Their operation is limited to particular cases transferred by special order of the High Court or of the District Court. It is not unreasonable to suppose that the Legislature felt considerable confidence in the District Courts, in consideration more particularly of the intimate acquaintance which such Courts are likely to possess with the personnel and the working of all Courts subordinate to them; so that it was not deemed improper to invest District Courts with powers of transfer in respect of suits of a Small Cause Court nature, and to permit that power to be exercised for the transfer of a case from a Court of Small Causes to a Court which is neither a Court of Small Causes constituted under Act IX of 1887, nor a Court invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes. It remains a matter of discretion with the District Court whether or not to pass an order of transfer in any suit; and the apparent intention of the Legislature was that, if a Small Cause Court suit is so transferred, it should not change its nature by reason of the transfer, but should continue to be tried as a Small Cause Court suit and subject to all the legal incidents of such a suit. We find there is one case directly in point which is in opposition to the view of the Bombay High Court and follows in principle the older decision of this Court in Mangal Sen's case (4). This is the case of Sankararama Aiyar v. Padmanabha Aiyar (6). The Bombay case of Ramachandra v. Ganesh (5) and the Calcutta case already referred to are therein expressly dissented from, and the principle laid down by the Allahabad High Court in Mangal Sen's case (4) is approved. The learned Judges of the Bombay High Court purport to base their decision upon a comparison of the wordings of certain sections in the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure now reproduced in sections 7 and 24 of Act V of 1908. They point out, truly enough, that Act IX of 1887 draws a clear distinction between Courts of Small Causes which are such exclusively and for all purposes, and Courts which are invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes. They then refer to the wording of section 5 of the former Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). That section refers to "Courts of Small Causes constituted under Act IX of 1887" and "all other Courts exercising the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes" as two different kinds or descriptions of Court. From this the learned Judges argue that when, in a later section, reference is made to "a Court of Small Causes," those words should be read as if the entire expression "a Court of Small Causes constituted under Act IX of 1887" had been used, and that the Legislature did not intend to include in that expression other Courts exercising the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes. The point is a fine one;

but it would certainly appear as if any force it may ever have possessed has been greatly weakened by a slight alteration in the wording of the present Code. The section corresponding to section 5 of Act XIV of 1882 is section 7 of Act V of 1908. Instead of speaking of "Courts of Small Causes constituted under Act IX of 1887," the new Code speaks of "Courts constituted under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, or Courts exercising the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes under that Act." If any inference is to be drawn from the wording of this section, one would rather be inclined to suppose that when, in a later section, i. e., section 24 (4), the general expression "a Court of Small Causes" is used, the intention of the Legislature was to make it an expression inclusive of the two classes of Courts referred to in section 7. On the whole, therefore, upon a consideration of the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure and of Act IX of 1887 and of all the various authorities to which reference has been made, we think that the view on which the learned Subordinate Judge acted in the present case was correct. We agree with the learned Judges of the Madras High Court in holding that the expression "a Court of Small Causes" in section 24 (4) of the Code of Civil Procedure does include Courts invested with Small Cause Court jurisdiction as well as Courts constituted under Act IX of 1887. The Legislature apparently intended that the District Court should have power to make an order of transfer, such as has been made in the present case, trusting to the discretion of that Court, and its knowledge of local conditions, not to make an order of transfer to a Court not competent to make a proper exercise of the special powers which an order of transfer carries with it in respect of particular cases so transferred. There seems, therefore, no foundation for the plea on which this revisional application is based and we dismiss it accordingly, but without costs, as the opposite side is not represented.

WALSH, J.—I want to add a few words. I think the Subordinate Judge put the case very well in the judgment which is before us and I adopt what he says. It is desirable to emphasize that we are dealing with a case of transfer and not with a case of succession on which most of the decided cases have turned, and we are not differing from the decisions in Shiam Behari Lal v. Kali (1) and Sarju Prasad v. Mahadeo Pande (2) referred to above. On a point of practice of this kind it is desirable to avoid differences. But as the Madras High Court has differed irretrievably from the Bombay High Court, it is impossible for us not to differ from one of them. It seems to me that the distinction between a Court of Small Causes and a Court invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes, which is preserved in the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, has no bearing upon the question of transfer at all. And it is to be observed that section 33 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, which was not referred to in argument because we had no argument on the other side, distinctly provides that a Court invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes with respect to the exercise of that jurisdiction and the same Court with respect to the exercise of its jurisdiction in suits of a civil nature which are not cognizable by a Court of Small Causes shall, for the purposes of that Act and the Code of Civil Procedure, be deemed to be different Courts. As there is no such distinction provided between a Court of Small Causes and a Court exercising the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court, the inference would be that they were not intended to be different Courts for the purpose of the Code of Civil Procedure. Finally one of the principal arguments addressed to us was that the result of our decision would be to invest a Court or rather an individual with jurisdiction to decide unappealable cases which the Legislature intended that he should not try. But that argument, which sounds plausible enough, deals with the question of a Court or person to whom a suit is to be transferred. The section we are construing deals with the Court from which a suit is to be transferred, and I am unable to see any reason, either in good sense or derived from an examination of the rest of the legislation on the subject, why in respect of this matter there should be any difference between a suit which is to be tried as a Small Cause Court suit by a Court invested with the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court and a suit which is to be tried by a Court of Small Causes constituted under the Act.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B U. of 1885), 103B 147B, 74—Record of Rights, presumption as to correctness of entries in—Katihari, whether legal charge—Illegal cess.

Where katihari is entered in the Record of Rights as payable by a tenant, the presumption is in favour of the charge being legal. [p. 814, col. 1.]

A katihari charge payable by a tenant to the zemindar in respect of looms worked by the latter in his house, is not an illegal cess within the meaning of section 74 of the Bengal Tenancy Act [p. 814, col. 1.]

Mohammad Abdul Hai v. Nathu, 27 A. 183, A. W. N. (1904) 204, relied upon.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Durbhanga, dated the 16th February 1916, confirming that of the Munsif, 1st Court, Durbhanga, dated the 20th July 1915.

Mr. Murari Prasad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Nirsu Narain Sinha, and Purendra Narain Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the appellant for recovery of a certain sum as katihari (a charge upon looms) from the defendant first party who is said to be a weaver. The suit is based upon the basis of the finally published Record of Rights. The lower Appellate Court has dismissed the suit. In the Record of Rights the defendants' predecessor has been recorded as holding three plots, namely, Nos. 929, 963 and 1065. No. 1065 is the kusht land of the defendant with an area of 4 kathas 7 dhoors. The rent shown in the khatian is Re. 1-2-3 besides cesses. The plot No. 963 as shown is a house with a sahan in the possession of the defendant and is belagan (without rent).

The lower Appellate Court says, "the fact that the rent is recorded in the Record of Rights separately from the katihari indicates that the katihari is demanded not in respect of land, but in respect of the defendants' trade. On the whole I am not satisfied that katihari is legally recoverable." No doubt the katihari has not been demanded in respect of the land in plot No. 1065 in the cultivation of the defendants, which has been separately recorded and separate rent has been shown against it. The charge of eight-annas a year for every loom when the defendant weaves is entered in the Record of Rights against the plot No. 963. The charge of katihari is demanded for the defendants' working the loom on the premises situate within the zamindari of the plaintiff. The charge is not in addition to the actual rent payable by the defendant in respect of the agricultural land held by him in plot No. 1065 and does not, therefore, come under section 74 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which prohibits an imposition of any abwab in addition to the actual rent, i. e., rent payable for the use or occupation of agricultural land. There is nothing, therefore, in the Bengal Tenancy Act or any other law to prevent the plaintiff from enforcing the payment of katihari in respect of the looms that the defendant works in his house in plot No. 963. The katihari has been entered in the Record of Rights as payable by the defendant. The presumption is in favour of the charge being legal. The record shows that the defendant is liable to Re. 1-2-3 as rent for the agricultural land in plot No. 1065 plus eight annas a year for every loom when he weaves in plot No. 963. The defendant is liable to pay what is entered in the Record of Rights unless the presumption raised by the entry is rebutted. Vide sections 103B and 147B of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Even if it be said that the katihari is a charge upon the trade carried on by the defendant or a tax upon weaving, it cannot be said that it is illegal and not recoverable from the defendant. The katihari or charge on loom has been recognized by the Settlement authorities, vide the Government edition of the Survey Guide and Glossary of 1907, page 12, and the Survey Settlement Guide by Nilmani De, pages 97-98. If it were an illegal cess it would not have been recognized and noted in the Record of Rights by the Survey authorities, for all illegal cesses and abwabs have been disallowed and are eliminated from the rents payable by tenants in the Record of Rights and are never shown in the entries in the Record of Rights. 'Mutharfa' rents under different denominations as distinguished from rents for agricultural or horticultural lands are in vogue in the Province of Behar and in other parts of the country and have been recognized by the Survey and other authorities. The ruling reported as Mohammad Abdul Hai v. Nathu (1) seems to me to be exactly on all fours with this case. 'Mutharfa' has been defined there as including a tax upon looms (as in this case), a trade tax, a tax upon certain occupations, and a tax upon tradesmen's shops. This ruling further shows that certain classes of people who occupy houses in the abadi and carry on the trade or profession of their caste in their houses pay 'mutharfa' to the zemindar, and that such 'mutharfas' are entered in the wajib-ul-arz of the village and are legally recoverable.

It is contended by the learned Vakil for the respondents that the katihari, a charge upon looms, would amount to a public tax which Government alone has a right to impose, and not private zemindars. It has not been shown, however, that katihari is prohibited by Government and that it is illegal for the landlord to impose or to realise it. I, therefore, differ from the view of the learned District Judge, and hold that the view taken by him is erroneous. The suit has been dismissed by him on the sole ground that the rent in respect of which the suit was brought is not legally recoverable. He has not, however, decided the other issue in the case, namely, "Does Mahbub Momin, the defendant in this case, weave cloths?" The defendant did not take up this plea in the written statement. The first Court came to the conclusion that the defendant does not weave cloths. In the grounds of appeal preferred before the District Judge a distinct objection to the finding of the first Court on this issue was taken. As the Court below held that the katihari was not legally recoverable, apparently it did not consider it necessary to go into the other question whether the defendant weaves cloths or not. But as the finding on the first issue has been upset in this Court, I think it necessary to have an adjudication by the Court below of the second issue upon the evidence on the record. If the Court below comes to the conclusion that the defendant did weave the cloths in the years in suit, the defendant will be clearly liable to pay the katihari claimed in the suit. If on the other hand the Court finds that the defendant did not weave cloths, the suit will be dismissed. With these remarks I remand the case to the lower Court for a finding upon the issue referred to above and to dispose of the appeal in accordance with the remarks made above. Cost will abide the result.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

JUDGMENT.

Fox, C. J.—The first ground urged in the second appeal is to the effect that the learned Divisional Judge erred in admitting the appeal to his Court since it was plainly barred by limitation, and there were no materials before him on which he could rightly be satisfied that the appellant had sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal within the period of limitation.

The suit was one for redemption of mortgaged land valued in the plaint at Rs. 4,500.

A decree for an account of what was due on the mortgage was made on the 27th June 1913. This judgment determined that the plaintiff was entitled to only a portion of what he claimed.

An appeal against such decree was open to the plaintiff and it lay to the Divisional Court. If no appeal from it was made, section 97 of the Code of Civil Procedure would preclude its correctness from being disputed in an appeal from the final decree. The period of limitation for it was sixty days and the time taken in obtaining copies of the judgment and decree.

Another judgment and decree based on the result of taking the account ordered was made on the 28th July 1913.

Application was made on that day for copies of both judgments and decrees. The copies were ready for delivery on the 13th August and were delivered on the 14th of the same month.

No appeal was presented to the Divisional Court against the decree of the 27th June, and counting the time taken in obtaining a copy of that decree and the judgment, an appeal would be barred if presented after the 13th September 1913.

An appeal was filed in this Court on the 18th November 1913, which was the first day on which the Court opened after the vacation. This appeal came on for hearing on the 24th March 1915. The plaintiff's Advocate then asked that the memorandum of appeal might be returned to him for presentation to the Divisional Court, on the ground that the appeal had been filed in this Court by inadvertence.

The appeal was valued at Rs. 5,500 in the memorandum. It is difficult to understand how this valuation could have been entered by inadvertence. Mr. R. N. Burjorjee says it was done under the instructions of the plaintiff. The memorandum was returned and was presented to the Divisional Court on the 27th March 1915. The appeal was admitted provisionally subject to decision on the question of limitation. This question was argued and the learned Judge admitted, heard and determined the appeal.

All he says about the admission of the appeal is: "I have admitted the appeal as, after argument, I am of opinion that the mistake in filing the appeal in the Chief Court instead of in this Court was due to an error about the value of the land on the part of Maung San Pe, Pleader, who instructed Mr. Burjorjee."

No evidence on oath either oral or by affidavit is on the record, but a letter from Maung San Pe to Mr. Burjorjee dated the 13th September 1913 is filed. In this Maung San Pe says: "I thought of filing the appeal in the Divisional Court but owing to my finding that the land was on the date of filing of the suit worth over Rs. 5,000 I send it round to you to be filed in the Chief Court."

Nowhere is it explained how Maung San Pe came or could come to find that the land had been worth over Rs. 5,000.

If he had examined the plaint as he should have done, he could not have made the mistake. If the plaintiff untruly told him that it was worth over Rs. 5,000 after having valued it at Rs. 4,500 in the plaint, such untrue statement should clearly not have afforded a ground for relaxation of the law of limitation in the plaintiff's favour.

Not only the initial delay of over a month in applying for a copy of the judgment of the 27th June had to be explained, the gross delay in remedying the mistake of filing the appeal in this Court called for explanation.

The record was received in this Court on the 18th December 1913. Mr. Burjorjee had from that date until the case came on for hearing on the 24th March 1915 in which to examine the record, even if it can be assumed that his client did not furnish him with a copy of the plaint. It was open to him at any time within the above period to make the application which he made on the 24th March 1915. A Judge has a discretion in admitting an appeal under section 5 of the Limitation Act, but the discretion must be judicially exercised and must be based on materials judicially cognizable. High Courts are loth to interfere with the exercise of a discretion given by law to a lower Court, but if the discretion has been exercised without appreciation and consideration of all the facts which are material for the purpose of enabling the Judge to exercise a judicial discretion and without the application of the right principle to those facts, interference is called for:—Kichilappa Naicker v. Ramanujam Pillai (1).

It has been held in some cases that a bona fide mistake of a Pleader affords sufficient cause for admitting an appeal after time, see Rakhal Chandra Ghosh v. Ashutosh Ghosh (2) and the cases referred to therein, but a bona fide mistake is one made in spite of due care and attention having been exercised.

In the present case there was nothing before the learned Judge to explain the plaintiff's apparent inaction up to or shortly before the time when an appeal from the decree of the 27th June 1913 would become barred, and there is nothing on the record to justify a finding that the plaintiff's Pleader's belief that an appeal lay to this Court was formed with due care and attention. This last alone would have justified refusal to admit the appeal after time, see Sarat Chandra Bose v. Saraswati Debi (3).

In addition, the very gross delay in taking any step to remedy a mistake which must have been obvious to any one who had taken the trouble to read the plaint was quite inexcusable.

The appeal should not have been admitted. This appeal is allowed, the decree of the Divisional Court is set aside and that of the District Court is restored.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 47—Documents, registration of, at different times—Priority of title.

As soon as a kabala is registered, it operates from the date of its execution and, therefore, the title created by it will have priority over that created by a later kabala executed in favour of another person in respect of the same property, notwithstanding its prior registration and the delivery of possession to that person. Appeal against the decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Backergunje, dated the 12th June 1914, affirming that of the Munsif, 5th Court, Barisal, dated the 27th November 1912.

FACTS.—Plaintiff purchased the disputed property from defendant No. 1 by a sale-deed which was executed on 27th April 1910, but was not registered before July 1910. In the meanwhile the defendant No. 1 again sold the property to defendant No. 2 by a sale-deed which was both executed and registered on 18th May 1910, and also delivered him possession of the property. Plaintiff's suit for recovery of possession on the strength of his sale-deed was dismissed by the lower Appellate Court, on the ground that the defendant No. 2 was a bona fide purchaser without notice of the prior sale-deed, and "the fact that that kabala was subsequently registered cannot have the effect of nullifying his purchase, which had been already forfeited by a kabala registered long before the date of the registration of that of the plaintiff and by delivery of possession of land in dispute."

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Babus Atul Chandra Gupta and Tarakeshwar Pal Chowdhury, for the Appellant.—The lower Appellate Court is wrong in holding that defendant No. 2, whose sale-deed was executed later but registered earlier than that of the plaintiff, had the preferential title. It has overlooked the provisions of section 47 of the Registration Act, which makes a registered document operate not from the date of its registration but from the date of its execution. See Narayan Venkap Shetti v. Laxuman Shantaya Kini (1) and Jadunandan Prosad Singha v. Koer Kallyan Singh (2). The fact that defendant No. 2 is found to be a bona fide purchaser without notice is immaterial, as in this case the competition is not between a registered and an unregistered document but between documents both of which are registered. So the principle of decisions like that reported as Abool Hossein v. Raghu Nath Sahu (3) has no application.

Babu Surendra Nath Guha, for the Respondent.—It has been found that the execution and registration of defendant's kabala were accompanied by delivery of possession, whereas the plaintiff obtained no possession. His title is, therefore, inferior to that of the defendant. See Hasha v. Ragho Ambo Gondhali (4).

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta, in reply.—The Bombay case cited proceeded on the peculiar view which obtained in the Bombay High Court that under Hindu Law delivery of possession is necessary for forfeiting title by sale. This view has since been overruled by the Privy Council in Kalidas Mullick v. Kanhaya Lal Pundit (5) and is no longer law even in the Bombay Presidency. See Narayan Venkap Shetti v. Laxuman Shantaya Kini (1).

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has been very clearly and ably argued by Babu Atul Chandra Gupta, Vakil for the appellant, and we are quite satisfied that the learned Judge below was wrong in dismissing the suit of the plaintiff.

The defendant No. 1 in this case executed a kabala in favour of the plaintiff on receipt of consideration. Thereafter he executed a second kabala in respect of the same property in favour of defendant No. 2 and had the latter document registered first and placed the second purchaser in possession. The learned Judge below has held that because the defendant No. 2 acquired the property without any notice of the previous title of the plaintiff, his title ought to prevail against the prior title of the plaintiff, which was registered later. This view is clearly in violation of section 47 of the Registration Act, which provides that a registered document shall operate from the time from which it would have commenced to operate if no registration thereof had been required or made, and not from the time of its registration.

As soon as the kabala of the plaintiff was registered, it operated from the date of its execution, and, therefore, the title of the plaintiff is prior notwithstanding the prior registration and delivery of possession to the defendant.

The learned Vakil for the respondent relied upon two cases in the Bombay High Court, namely Hasha v. Ragho Ambo Gondhali (4) and Santaya Mangarsaya v. Narayan (6).

These cases, however, are no longer law in the Presidency of Bombay, because we find from the cases of Narayan Venkap Shetti v. Laxuman Shantaya Kini (1) and Motichand Jivraj v. Sagun Jetharam (7) that a different view has been held in that Court in consequence of a decision of the Privy Council in the case of Kalidas Mullick v. Kanhaya Lal Pundit (5), which held that in order to complete title under the Hindu Law, delivery of possession was not a necessary ingredient.

The same view with regard to priority of title between competing registered documents was held in this Court also in the case of Jadunandan Prosad Singha v. Koer Kallyan Singh (2). We, therefore, think that the learned Judge was clearly wrong in his enunciation of law in this case.

This appeal, therefore, is decreed with costs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 150, 152, 153, 173, 177, 180—Settlement Officer—Resumption, suit for—Question of proprietary title raised—Appeal to District Judge, maintainability of—S. 158, scope of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Letters Patent Appeal—Delay in filing—Sufficient cause—Limitation.

An appeal lies from an order of a Settlement Officer, exercising the powers of a Collector, to the District Judge in a suit in which a question of proprietary title is raised by the defendant in the Court of first instance and is also involved in the appeal. [p. 820, col 2.]

Section 158 of the Agra Tenancy Act is not limited in its application to grants made subsequent to the passing of the Act. It confers certain rights upon certain individuals who have been in occupation of lands for the periods mentioned in the section, irrespective of when that occupation commenced. [p. 821, cols. 1 & 2.]

Plaintiff sued defendants for resumption of a rent-free grant in the Court of the Settlement Officer. The suit was decreed and the defendants appealed to the District Judge, who set aside the decree of the Settlement Officer and dismissed the suit. On an appeal by the plaintiff the High Court held that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal and directed that the memorandum of appeal to that Court be returned to the defendants for presentation to the proper Court. The Commissioner, before whom the appeal was next preferred, held that appeal lay to the District Judge. Defendants then applied to the High Court for review of its judgment, but their application was rejected. They then preferred a Letters Patent Appeal against the original order of the High Court, which was considerably beyond time.

Held, that there was sufficient cause for the delay in presenting the appeal, and that the appellants were entitled to the benefit of section 5 of the Limitation Act. [p. 820, col. 1.]

MAHABAT RAI v. BHARADDWAJ DAMODAR DAS.

Appeal, under section 10 of the Letters Patent, from the judgment of Justice Sir George Knox, dated the 20th of May 1915.

FACTS.—The plaintiff brought a suit against the defendants for resumption of a rent-free grant in the Court of Mr. E. S. Liddiard, who was described as the Record Officer. That gentleman heard the case and passed orders for resumption of the land. The defendants went in appeal to the Court of the Additional District Judge of Etawah, who held that the land was not resumable and that the defendants had acquired proprietary rights therein. The plaintiff then went in appeal to the High Court, on the ground that the Additional District Judge had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal as the order appealed against was one passed by a Record Officer. The High Court accepted this plea and ordered that the memorandum of appeal to the lower Appellate Court be returned to defendants for presentation to the proper Court.* The defendants presented it to the Court of the Commissioner. The Additional Commissioner held that though the Court of Mr. E. S. Liddiard was described as that of the Record Officer, it was actually the Court of the Settlement Officer. He further held that suits for resumption were maintainable only in a Revenue Court, viz., that of a Collector or Assistant Collector of the 1st class, except where a District was under Settlement (as Etawah was at the time after institution of the suit) when they had to be filed in the Court of the Settlement Officer who had the powers of a Collector for the purpose of trying such suits. (Section 152, Agra Tenancy Act, U. P. Act II of 1901.) He further held that appeals from the decrees of the Settlement Officer in such suits were governed by section 180 (1) of the Tenancy Act and lay under section 177 or 179 of the Act to the District Judge or to the Commissioner. He also held that Mr. Liddiard had decided a question of proprietary title in the case, and, therefore, an appeal properly lay to the District Judge. He thus came to the conclusion that no appeal lay in his Court and refused to admit the appeal. He directed that the party aggrieved might apply to the High Court to review its judgment. The defendants then applied to the High Court praying for review of judgment but their application was rejected. The defendants then filed a Letters Patent Appeal.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji (for Messrs. Abdul Raoof and Kailash Nath Katju), for the Appellants, submitted that from the judgment of the Additional Commissioner it was abundantly clear that an appeal lay to the District Judge and finally to this Court. The decision of this Court was incorrect and should be set aside.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Respondents, submitted that it was clear that an appeal from an order of the Record Officer lay before the Commissioner. Even if the order be taken to be that of the Settlement Officer no appeal lay before the District Judge. He referred to sections 175, 177 and 180 and submitted that under section 152 of the Tenancy Act the Settlement Officer had the powers of a Collector 'under the Chapter', but in Chapter X there was mention of the Collector's powers: Under section 177 an appeal lay to the District Judge from the decree of an Assistant Collector of the first class. Under section 180 an appeal lay from an original decree or order of a Collector in the same manner as one of an Assistant Collector, first class.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for resumption under sections 150 and 154 of the Tenancy Act. The case came before Mr. Liddiard, who was then "Record" and "Settlement" Officer. Section 152 provides that suits under section 150 should (when the local area in which the land is situate is under Settlement) be instituted in the Court of the "Settlement" Officer. Mr. Liddiard granted the plaintiff a decree. An appeal was taken to the District Judge, who held that the plaintiff was not entitled to resume the land and dismissed the suit. A second appeal was preferred to this Court, when a preliminary objection was taken that no appeal lay. The learned Judge of this Court upheld this plea and ordered the memorandum of appeal to be returned to the appellant, with a view to its being presented in the proper Court. It was accordingly presented in the Court of the Commissioner, who pointed out that an unfortunate error had arisen from the circumstance that Mr. Liddiard occupied the twofold office of Settlement Officer and Record Officer, and had described himself in his judgment as "Record" Officer. The learned Commissioner held that the appeal lay to the District Judge. Thereupon the defendants applied for a review of judgment to the learned Judge of this Court. This application was rejected, not on the merits, but because the learned Judge considered that the applicants had allowed too long a time to elapse between the decision of the Commissioner and the application for the review of judgment. A Letters Patent appeal has been preferred against the refusal of the learned Judge of this Court to entertain the application for a review of judgment. An appeal has also been preferred against the original decision of the learned Judge of this Court in which he held that no appeal lay to the District Judge. This last-mentioned appeal was filed beyond time and has been admitted subject to the objection of the other side, and the respondents now strongly object to the hearing of the appeal on the ground of limitation. We have considered this question. We think that there were certainly circumstances to explain the delay. Not unnaturally, this High Court, having decided against them, the defendants went to the Commissioner. After the Commissioner had pointed out how the error arose, it was not unnatural that the defendants should go to the learned Judge of this Court in review of judgment, hoping that when the error was pointed out he would allow the appeal to be considered on its merits. It was only when the learned Judge of this Court rejected the application for review that it became necessary to think of preferring an appeal against the original decision. Under all the circumstances of the case we consider that there is sufficient ground for admitting the appeal notwithstanding the delay, and we have accordingly decided to hear it.

*See Bharat Duaj Damodar Das v. Mahabbat, 29 Ind. Cas. 421.

MAHABAT RAI V. BHARADDWAJ DAMODAR DAS.

The first question for consideration is whether an appeal lay to the District Judge. Had it not been for the fact that the area in which the land was situate was under Settlement, the suit for resumption would have come before an Assistant

Collector of the first class. Undoubtedly a question of proprietary title was raised by the defendants in the Court of first instance and was also involved in the appeal. Therefore, it is quite clear that had it not been that the suit was instituted in the Court of the Settlement Officer, an appeal would have lain to the District Judge. We have no doubt that the suit must be considered as having been instituted before Mr. Liddiard as "Settlement" Officer and not as Record Officer. As Record Officer he would have had no jurisdiction of any kind to entertain the suit. Section 152 provides that the Settlement Officer shall have all the powers of the Collector. Section 173 provides that a Collector shall have all the powers conferred on an Assistant Collector of the first class and of a Collector. Section 177 provides that appeals shall lie from the decree of the Assistant Collector of the first class in different classes of cases, and amongst others in all suits in which a question of proprietary title has been in issue in the Court of first instance and is a matter in issue in the appeal. Section 180 provides that an appeal shall lie from an original decree or order of a Collector in the same manner and under the same conditions as from a decree or order of an Assistant Collector of the first class. Reading all these sections together we consider that an appeal lies from the Settlement Officer as if he was the Collector, to the District Judge. Mr. Agarwala has argued with great ingenuity that section 152 only provides that the Settlement Officer shall have the powers of a Collector under Chapter X, that is to say, he shall have only such powers as are conferred on the Collector by that Chapter. The drafting of the section is one more example of want of skill in the drawing up of the Tenancy Act. No powers of any kind are conferred upon the Collector by Chapter X. We must read it as if the words "under this Chapter" were either omitted altogether, or placed in another part of the section, or the words "who shall have the powers of a Collector" are read as in a parenthesis. We think that an appeal lay to the District Judge and that the learned

RADHA KISHUNJI THAKUR v. LALJI SAHA.

Judge of this Court ought to have heard the appeal on its merits. We proceed to do so.

The plaintiff came into Court alleging that he was entitled to resume the land because it was held at the pleasure of the grantor. Section 154 provides that land held rent-free shall be liable to resumption only when by the terms of the grant, or by local custom, it is held (a) at the pleasure of the grantor or (b) for the performance of some specific service, religious or secular, which the proprietor no longer requires, or conditional, or for a term, and the condition is broken or the term expires. Clause 2 provides that every suit for resumption shall be brought within twelve years from the date on which the right to resume first accrued. The section proceeds to prescribe when the right is deemed first to have accrued. There is a further provision that in cases where the grant was made for the performance of some specific service, notice in writing has to be given by the proprietor to the grantee that the service is no longer required. It is not pretended in the present case that the plaintiff was entitled to resume the land on any other ground than that it was held "at the pleasure of the grantor." That is the only ground upon which the plaintiff came into Court. It has been found that the land has been held free of rent for five generations and more than 50 years. There was no evidence that by the terms of the grant or local custom the grantee held at the will and pleasure of the grantor. Under these circumstances it seems to us that the plaintiff entirely failed to establish such facts as entitled him to a resumption of the land. Section 158 provides that land which is not liable to resumption under section 154, and which has been held rent-free for 50 years, and by two successors to the original grantee, shall be deemed to be held in proprietary right. It is contended that this section can only apply to grants made subsequent to the passing of the Tenancy Act. We do not think that this contention is correct. It is quite clear that the Legislature intended to confer such rights upon certain individuals who had been in occupation of the land for the periods mentioned in the section, irrespective of when that occupation commenced.

We think the view taken by the learned District Judge was correct and should be affirmed. We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the learned Judge of this Court and restore the decree of the District Judge with costs of both hearings in this Court.

Appeal allowed.

It is not open to a fractional co-sharer, who purchases a holding in execution of a rent decree which only amounts to a money decree, to raise the question of non-transferability of the holding, as a defence to an action by a mortgagee whom he has ousted from possession, especially when the mortgagee has long been in possession and no objection has been taken by any of the landlords. [p. 822, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Monghyr, dated the 28th February 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, First Court, Begusarai, dated the 24th of February 1915.

Mr. Syed Muhammad Tahir, for the Appellant

Mr. Ragho Pershad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant in this case was a fractional landlord of the land in suit. He brought a suit for recovery of arrears of rent against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 who are the tenants of the land, and obtained a rent decree. In execution of that decree he purchased the right, title and interest of defendants Nos. 2 and 3. As the decree under which the sale took place was that of a fractional landlord only, the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor passed and not the entire holding, as in the case of sale in execution of a rent decree by the entire body of landlords. The plaintiff-respondent was the usufructuary mortgagee of this holding from defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and had been in possession of the holding from 1889. The appellant, after his purchase, dispossessed the plaintiff from the land in suit in September 1912. The plaintiff has, therefore, brought this suit for a declaration of his title based on the usufructuary mortgage-bond executed by the father of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, and for recovery of possession of the land in suit. Both the Courts below gave the respondent a decree for possession of the land. The defendant No. 1 has appealed to this Court. The lower Appellate Court has held that the mortgage-bond in favour of the plaintiff is a genuine document and that the plaintiff was in possession of the land in suit on the strength of the bond till he was dispossessed by the defendant No. 1 in 1912. This finding is not disputed in appeal by the learned Vakil for the appellant. It is, however, contended by him that the lower Appellate Court has omitted to decide the issue raised in the case regarding the non-transferability of the holding. The contention is that the holding of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 was not transferable, and hence the plaintiff, who bases his claim on the mortgage-bond from the predecessor-interest of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, has derived no title to the land, and, therefore, the suit for possession does not lie. Reliance is placed upon Asmatunnessa Khatun v. Harendra Lal Biswas (1). In that case the question about the non-transferability of the holding was raised by the entire body of the landlords, and not, as in this case, by a fractional co-sharer, and on that ground the case was distinguished in Tulsi Singh v. Dayal Singh (2). I do not think that it is open to the defendant No. 1, a fractional co-sharer, who purchased the holding in execution of his rent decree which amounts to a money decree, to raise the question of the non-transferability of the holding. It is significant that the plaintiff was in possession of this holding, by virtue of the transfer from the predecessor of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, from the year 1889 and no objection was raised by the defendant No. 1 or by any of the landlords as to the non-transferability of the holding for such a length of time. In paragraph 2 of the plaint some previous transfers also of this very holding have been referred to.

All these facts and circumstances go conclusively to show that there is no substance at all in the contention of the appellant in this case regarding the non-transferability of the holding.

The defendant No. 1 himself recognised the transferable nature of the holding when he bought it in execution of his own decree. There does not appear to be any merit in the contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant regarding the non-transferability of the holding.

I, therefore, agree with the lower Courts and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Dr. Gokul Chand Narang, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sundar Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are these. One Chhuttan Lal was the owner of a garden in Mauza Bankoli, Tahsil Delhi. He agreed to sell the same to one Mul Chand and on the 25th September 1907 certain documents were executed which evidenced the said agreement. These documents are three in number and were written on the same day, and apparently about the same time. It is not clear in which order they were written, but judging from their contents it would seem that the first to be executed was a receipt for Rs. 1,500. In this receipt it is stated that Chhuttan Lal had sold the garden to Mul Chand for Rs. 4,500 and had received Rs. 1,500 as earnest money. It is stamped as a receipt and its execution is admitted.

This is followed by a letter from Mul Chand to Chhuttan Lal in which the fact of the sale is recited, as well as the payment of Rs. 1,500 as earnest-money, and an undertaking is given to pay the balance of Rs. 3,000 within two weeks and get the sale-deed executed.

The third document is another receipt executed by Chhuttan Lal in favour of Mul Chand, in which the fact of the sale is recited and the receipt of Rs. 200 as earnest-money is acknowledged. It goes on to say that the remaining sum will be taken "by getting the deed registered in favour of Ch. Mul Chand within a day or two."

In accordance with the agreement to sell a conveyance was drawn up and the draft has been placed on the record. It is not signed nor is it completed, the terms of the sale are recited, and the sale price is given as Rs. 4,500 and the following words occur: "I have received the entire sale-money as per details given below....." but no details are given at the end of the document. This conveyance was written by one Abdul Rashid (P. W.) and though it is not dated, there seems no doubt that it was written soon after the 25th September 1907.

The sale was not completed as one Pars Ram, a brother of Chhuttan Lal, claimed to have a share in the garden, and nothing could be done till that matter was settled. That there was such a dispute seems certain and, therefore, the fact that the money was not paid within the two weeks referred to in the letter of the 25th September 1907 is not really material.

In 1908 Chhuttan Lal brought a suit against Mul Chand asking for a declaration to the effect that the agreement of sale be held to be cancelled. In this suit it was alleged that the sale price was really Rs. 3,000 (the additional Rs. 1,500 being entered merely to stave off pre-emptors) and that only Rs. 200 had been received as earnest-money the receipt for Rs. 1,500 being fictitious though admittedly executed. It was further alleged that Mul Chand had failed to complete the transaction within the specified period and was avoiding payment of the balance and had, therefore, been guilty of a breach of contract.

Mul Chand traversed these allegations and maintained that he was, and always had been, ready to complete the sale, as far as he was concerned, but that owing to the dispute between the brothers Chhuttan Lal had been unable to give him a clear title.

This suit was ultimately decided on appeal by Mr. A. E. Martineau, Divisional Judge, on the 23rd March 1911, who held that there had been no breach of contract on the part of Mul Chand and that the agreement to sell was still subsisting.

CHHUTTAN LAL v. MUL CHAND.

Up to the end of 1911 nothing further seems to have been done by either party, and the garden was then acquired by Government in connection with the establishment of the new capital at Delhi.

In the course of the acquisition proceedings before Mr. Addison, Mul Chand advanced a claim for Rs. 1,700 alleging that he was a person interested. The date of this application by him is not traceable, but that it had been made prior to the 14th February 1913 is clear from an application of that date made by Chhuttan Lal, in which Mul Chand's application is clearly referred to.

The Special Land Acquisition Officer (Mr. Addison) gave his award in the matter on the 2nd July 1913, and on the 5th August 1913 on an application by Mul Chand passed an order referring the question of the apportionment of the compensation awarded for the garden in question to the Divisional Judge.

The parties appealed before the Divisional Judge and agreed that the statements of certain witnesses made in the Suit of 1910 (above referred to) should be treated as evidence in these proceedings.

Ultimately, the Divisional Judge awarded Rs. 1,700 to Mul Chand, holding that the two receipts sufficiently established the payment by him of that amount to Chhuttan Lal.

Against this decision Chhuttan Lal has preferred this appeal through Dr. G. C. Narang, and we have heard Mr. Sundar Das for Mul Chand.

The first point urged by Dr. Narang was that Mul Chand was not a "person interested" in the land within the meaning of section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, and had no right to be heard in the acquisition proceedings. The order of reference to the Divisional Judge and all subsequent proceedings thereon, it was contended, were without jurisdiction.

We were referred to sections 3 (b), 9 (3), 10 and 25 of the Land Acquisition Act as well as to Dunne, A. M. v. Nabo Krishna Mookerjee (1) and were asked to hold that the expression "person interested" meant a person having a permanent and transferable interest in the property acquired, and no other.

It was argued that the true test was whether the Government could have gone to Mul Chand, and purchased the garden from him without any recourse to the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act.

Mr. Sundar Das objected to such a narrow construction being placed on these words and urged that all that was required was a prima facie claim to be interested in the compensation awarded, and he referred us to Galstaun, J. C. v. Secretary of State (2) and Pestonji Jehangir, In re (3), which decisions certainly support his contention. We do not think that the point really needs any discussion. The expression "person interested" has been defined in section 3 (b) of the Land Acquisition Act as including all persons, claiming an interest in compensation to be awarded on account of the acquisition of land under the Act, and this definition, in our opinion, is wide enough to include the equitable interest that Mul Chand claimed to have in the present case.

It was next urged that whatever interest Mul Chand may have, at one time, had under the agreement to sell, had come to an end before the garden was acquired and that the reference was, for that reason, bad and against law.

As has been said above, it was held in March 1911 that Mul Chand had not committed a breach of contract upto that date, and that the agreement to sell was in force. Dr. Narang has been unable to bring to our notice any subsequent act on Mul Chand's part to warrant the conclusion that the contract to sell had terminated either by the operation of the Statute of Limitation (Article 113) or in any other way, and we accordingly hold that the reference was competent and was made in accordance with law.

Dr. Narang finally took us into the merits of the case, and while admitting that Chhuttan Lal had received Rs. 200 as earnest-money denied the receipt of the sum of Rs. 1,500. He adversely criticised the evidence and objected to the admissibility of the receipt for Rs. 1,500, on the ground that under section 17 (c) of the Indian Registration Act it required to be registered.

It was pointed out that the evidence shows that Rs. 1,500 were not paid in cash, but that ruqas to that extent executed by Chhuttan Lal in favour of Mul Chand were said to have been handed over by the latter to the former in lieu of the receipt for Rs. 1,500 and Dr. Narang urged that the absence of any reference to these ruqas in the receipt rendered the whole transaction extremely suspicious.

The fact that two receipts were executed at the same time was also referred to as a matter creating doubt as to the genuineness of the payments alleged to have been made.

Mr. Sundar Das contended that (1) the receipt was admissible for the collateral purpose of proving the payment, (2) that even if it be excluded the evidence produced by Mul Chand proved the payment, and (3) that there was no rebuttal of the evidence produced beyond the mere statement of Chhuttan Lal.

He referred us to Sharaf Ali Khan v. Jagandar Singh (4) in support of the admissibility of the receipt.

That decision is authority for holding that the letter and the receipt are admissible to prove the agreement to sell, and for the proposition that the payment of the earnest-money can be proved aliunde by virtue of section 91 of the Indian Evidence Act.

We are inclined to the opinion that in the present case the receipt is admissible in evidence to support the factum of payment, inasmuch as the claim advanced by Mul Chand amounts to one for a refund of money paid as earnest-money, and section 49, Registration Act, has no application, and we hold accordingly.

We then have a receipt admittedly executed by Chhuttan Lal for Rs. 1,500 and another for Rs. 200, and in addition there is the evidence of witnesses in support of the transaction. Neither of the parties are shopkeepers, so that account books could not be expected to be produced by either side.

There is nothing inherently improbable in a payment of Rs. 200 in cash and an adjustment of claims amounting to Rs. 1,500 by way of earnest-money, though possibly such a settlement is not usual. There is also some force in Mr. Sundar Dass' contention that the fact that the witnesses mention ruqas as having been made over by Mul Chand lends strength to the truth of the story. If the whole transaction relating to this sum of Rs. 1,500 were mythical, it would have been much simpler to have stated that the money had been paid in cash. In our opinion, the learned Divisional Judge was right in holding that the onus lay on Chhuttan Lal to prove non-receipt of this sum, and we agree with him in holding that he has failed to discharge this onus. At the same time while we feel constrained to decide the claim in favour of Mul Chand because of the weight of evidence in the case, we consider he is a good deal to blame for this litigation and, therefore, in dismissing the appeal we direct that the parties will bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. R. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. S. Narayanaswami Aiyar for Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff lands were attached in 1900 in execution of a decree against one Sambasiva Aiyar. In 1905 and 1906 the judgment-debtor sold the lands to defendants Nos 1 and 2 by private treaty. In 1908 the lands were sold in execution of the decree and purchased by the plaintiff. Objection was taken to the sale on the ground that the attachment, in pursuance of which the sale was held, was invalid, but this Court decided in Appeal Against Order No. 27 of 1908 that the judgment-debtor could not be allowed to question the proceedings to which his own conduct had led. Defendants now resist plaintiff's claim to the suit lands on the same ground as was taken by their vendor in the execution proceedings, and contend that they are entitled to do so, because section 64 of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to a case when the attachment is invalid, and that they are not estopped from raising the plea of invalidity, as the plaintiff is not the representative of the decree-holder within the meaning of section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act, and they rely on Nadamuni Narayana Iyengar v. Veerabhadra Pillai (1) and Vasanji Haribhai v. Lallu Akhu (2) as authorities for holding that the auction-purchaser is not the representative of the decree-holder. The former case is authority for the proposition only so far as section 244 (now section 47) of the Code of Civil Procedure is concerned, and the latter does not carry the case any further, but in Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha (3) it was held that when a party was estopped from denying the validity of the mortgage right possessed by a mortgagee, he and his transferees were equally estopped as against the auction-purchaser in a sale obtained on the mortgage. Following this decision it was held in Krishnabhupati Devu v. Vikrama Devu (4) that when the plea of estoppel is available to a decree-holder it is likewise available to the purchaser at the execution sale. The reasoning upon which the decision of the Judicial Committee in Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha (3) is based is that inasmuch as the party was estopped from denying the validity of the mortgagee's title, the title was good as against the person so estopped, and consequently the mortgagee could give a good title to the purchaser under a mortgage sale. Applying this principle to the present case, it would appear that inasmuch as the sale was valid so far as the decree-holder was concerned, it is equally valid so far as the auction-purchaser is concerned, for the decree-holder had a legal right to bring the property to sale and that right would enure for the benefit of the purchaser, so far as the judgment-debtor and his representatives are concerned. Defendants are, therefore, estopped from contending that plaintiff's purchase at the auction-sale was invalid. Apart from this question of law the finding of the lower Appellate Court is that the attachment in 1900 was not invalid. We see no reason why we should not accept this finding which is one of fact, and as a result the appeal must fail. The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

Fox, C. J.—On the 2nd September 1912 the plaintiff obtained a decree against the defendants for Rs. 3,068-12, costs and subsequent interest.

On the 8th October 1912 the plaintiff applied for execution by the issue of a prohibitory order to the Receiver of an estate in which the 1st defendant had an 11/48th share, enjoining the Receiver to withhold the share. An order under rule 52 of Order XXI issued to the Receiver: this order has a note on it that it was to be served on the defendants as well as on the Receiver. It was served on the latter, but the process-server reported he had failed to find the defendants. This is the first of many notices to the defendants which process servers have returned with reports that they have been unable to find the defendants. The defendants are husband and wife. In the plaint their residence is given as No. 75, Shwedaungdan Street, Rangoon; in an affidavit sworn by the 1st defendant on the 5th January 1916 his residence is given as No. 73, Oliphant Street, and he describes himself as Zegawng or Market Overseer of the Municipal Market in Strand Road, Rangoon. He must be a well known man, yet the bailiff whose duty it is to see that process-servers perform their duties properly has permitted them to make reports that they could not find a man whose ordinary whereabouts during the day could easily be ascertained.

The 1st defendant swears in his affidavit that no notices of the attachment or of the proclamation of sale or of the sale which he sought to have set aside were served on him, and he only came to know of the sale of his share on a date less than a month before the date of his affidavit.

His 11/48th share was in seven houses standing on Government leased land, consequently rule 41 was applicable and the procedure under that rule should have been followed under ordinary circumstances, but the property being in the hands of a Receiver appointed by the Court, the plaintiff was not at liberty to attach the property without first obtaining the leave of the Court.

On the 24th May 1913 the plaintiff applied that the bailiff might be ordered to sell the 11/48th share in the houses, and he asked for leave to bid at the sale.

Notice was issued to the parties under rule 66 of Order XXI, but it was not served personally on the defendants.

A proclamation was issued for sale of the share after 15 days instead of after 30 days. At the sale on the 6th September 1913 the share was bought by the plaintiff for Rs. 2,000.

The Receiver subsequently sold the houses for Rs. 29,200, and the 1st defendant's share of this amounted to Rs. 6,457-11-3.

The plaintiff claimed this as his under his purchase at the bailiff's sale.

The 1st defendant applied to have that sale set aside on the ground of the attachment having been illegal and of the irregularities in the procedure leading up to the sale. He also alleged that the plaintiff had fraudulently purchased the share for a grossly inadequate price. There is no ground for imputing fraud to the plaintiff.

The irregularities were mainly due to mistaken views taken by officers of the Court, and a too ready acceptance of reports and affidavits as to the defendants not being able to be found. It is not disputed that the irregularities were such as to justify the sale being set aside if the 1st defendant's application is within time. For the plaintiff it has been argued that the application falls within rule 90 of Order XXI and is governed by that alone, and consequently the defendant had only 30 days from the date of sale within which to make the application.

For the defendants it has been contended that they are not confined to the rule for a remedy, and that they have a right to have the question involved dealt with under section 47 of the Code, in which case the limitation applicable is three years.

No doubt some of the objections of the 1st defendant relate to material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, but they go further and include objections to the whole procedure starting with illegal attachment.

Under the circumstances we hold that the application was admissible under section 47 of the Code and that it was not time-barred.

The appeal is dismissed with costs, 3 gold mohurs allowed as Advocate's fee.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 5, 2 (7)—Appeal, delay in presenting—'Sufficient cause'—Appellant, duty of—"Good faith", meaning of.

In order to be entitled to the benefit of section 5 of the Limitation Act, an appellant must act in good faith, i.e., with due care and attention. [p. 828, col. 2.]

Where an appellant relied upon an unauthorised publication known as the "Legal Diary" and being misled as to the duration of the vacation of the Chief Court, presented his appeal beyond the period of limitation:

Held, that he had not acted with due care and attention and that the cause shown was not sufficient to entitle him to an extension of time under section 5 of the Limitation Act. [p. 828, col. 2.]

First appeal from the order of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 25th June 1913, directing the partition of the property.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, R.B., and Lala Gopal Chand, for the Appellant.

Messrs. C. Kirkpatrick and Mukand Lal Puri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appeal in this case has been admittedly filed beyond the prescribed period of limitation, and the question for determination is whether there is any sufficient reason for extending the time under section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act.

The last day for filing the appeal was the 10th October 1913; as a matter of fact the memorandum of appeal was presented on the 14th October 1913, insufficiently stamped and described as a miscellaneous appeal.

It was returned and re-presented on the 22nd October 1913 as a first appeal bearing a ten rupee stamp.

Even then the rules had not been complied with as the sum of Rs. 100, advance printing fee, had not been deposited.

The memorandum of appeal was again returned and this money was paid on the 27th October 1913, and the appeal was once more presented on the 30th October 1913. The reason advanced for the delay is that the appellant consulted a diary, known by the name of "The Legal Diary" and compiled by the clerk to an Advocate, in which the vacation is stated to be from the 15th August to the 15th October.

It has been urged that this constituted "sufficient cause" within the meaning of section 5 of the Limitation Act.

In this contention we are unable to concur. The diary in question is not an authorized publication, nor does it definitely state that the Chief Court would be in vacation from the date named to the 15th October.

It is obvious that it was the duty of the appellant to ascertain the precise duration of the vacation, and it is not even alleged that he attempted to obtain this information. He has not acted in good faith, i.e., with due care and attention [see section 2 (7), Indian Limitation Act] and we cannot hold that the "cause" shown is sufficient to warrant our extending the time as prayed for.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

RESPONDENTS.

Evidence—Batwara papers, admissibility of—Ejectment, suit for.

Batwara papers are not admissible in evidence against persons who were not parties to the batwara proceedings. [p. 829, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Bhagalpur, dated the 12th August 1914, affirming that of the Munsif, Bhagalpur, dated the 22nd January 1914.

Mr. Lal Mohan Ganguli, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Purendra Narain Sahe and Murari Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are the appellants in this case. They brought a suit in the Court of the Munsif of Bhagalpur for a declaration of their title to and for the recovery of possession over plots Nos. 488, 499, 502, 406, and 417 of the Record of Rights of Mouzah Deyalpur. These plots were recorded in the Survey Record of Rights as appertaining to the patti of the respondents in Touti No. 726. The lands in question consist of parti and dabar lands.

This is a suit in ejectment; the onus is upon the plaintiffs to prove their title to these lands. The entry in the Survey Record of Rights makes this onus heavier upon the plaintiffs, the presumption being in favour of the defendants. The plaintiff relies for his title upon certain batwara papers of 1877. The defendants were not parties to the said batwara proceedings and, therefore, these papers are not at all admissible in evidence against the defendants. There is no other document referred to in the judgment of the first Court or in that of the lower Appellate Court, which could identify these lands as being within the patti of the plaintiff. The lower Appellate Court has held that it is impossible to identify with absolute certainty these lands with respect to the ancient map of 1877. The plaintiff has, therefore, failed to prove his title to these lands.

The suit is for recovery of possession and admittedly, therefore, the plaintiff is out of possession of these lands. The plaintiff has been found by both the Courts below not to have been in possession of these lands at all, at least not within 12 years of the institution of the suit.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the lands being parti, their possession should be presumed to be with the rightful owner of these lands and should go with the title of these lands. But when the plaintiff has failed to prove his title to the lands it is immaterial whether the lands are parti or cultivated lands or such as are capable of user and possession. It is then contended that the first Court had held that the title in these lands was with the plaintiff in 1877 and the lower Appellate Court has not definitely recorded its finding upon the question of title, and the case should be remanded to the lower Appellate Court for a definite finding as to the title of the plaintiff over these lands. The first Court, while holding that the lands appertained to the patti of the plaintiff in 1877 on the report of the Commissioner, had forgotten that the batwara map of 1877 was not admissible at all in this case and could not at all be used as evidence of title in favour of the plaintiff in this case. The finding of the first Court on this point is obviously based upon a misconception of the admissibility of the batwara paper, which is a sheet anchor of the plaintiff's case. The lower Appellate Court, although it has not definitely recorded its finding as to the title, has sufficiently suggested in the first paragraph of the judgment that it is not possible to identify these lands by a comparison with the map of 1877. This amounts to a finding against the title of the plaintiff.

The appellants were called upon by me to state or to show if there was any evidence of title other than the batwara map of 1877 upon which the judgment of the first Court has been based. The learned Vakil for the appellants has failed to do so. The first Court's judgment, relied upon by the appellants, clearly states that the plaintiff's title is based upon the batwara map of 1877.

Upon the findings of the lower Appellate Court and in view of the absence of any evidence of the plaintiff's title, it is idle to suggest that the ends of justice would be met by a remand of the case to the lower Appellate Court.

I, therefore, hold that the appellants have not been able to prove their case. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 47, scope of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 71, applicability of—Insolvent's estate, sale of, by Receiver—Purchaser failing to deposit one-fourth of purchase-money, liability of—Proceeding, meaning of.

Section 47 of the Provincial Insolvency Act does not operate so as to confer upon a District Judge all the powers and to impose upon him all the duties in connection with the sale of an insolvent's property by a Receiver, which are provided by Order XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure in connection with the execution of decrees of Civil Courts. [p. 830, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, the highest bidder at the auction of an insolvent's property sold by the Receiver fails to deposit the one-fourth of the purchase-money and the property is thereafter sold at a loss, the Receiver cannot realize the loss from the bidder under Order XXI, rule 71 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. [p. 831, col. 1.]

Per Walsh, J.—The word "proceeding" as used in the Provincial Insolvency Act means a proceeding in Court. [p. 831, col. 2.]

A sale by a Receiver is an act of the Receiver and not a proceeding. There is no proceeding under the Provincial Insolvency Act to enable an Insolvency Court to call upon a stranger to the bankruptcy to show cause why he should not pay a sum which may or may not be due from him. [p. 831, col. 2.]

for the Appellant.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Piggott, J.—This is an appeal against an order passed by the District Judge of Bareilly, in the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction. One Kanhai Lal had been adjudicated insolvent. He owned a shop in the town of Bareilly. This shop became vested in the Receiver appointed by the Court, one Babu Sri Ram. Under the direction of the Court the Receiver proceeded to sell the shop by auction. Cheda Lal, who is the appellant before us, bid up to Rs. 8,700; but on being called upon to deposit one-fourth of the purchase-money failed immediately to do so. The Receiver then put up the property for sale again and it was purchased by another person for Rs. 7,320. These matters having been reported to the Court, the learned District Judge has ordered execution to issue against Cheda Lal for the sum of Rs. 1,380. His order purports to have been passed under Order XXI, rule 71 of the Code of Civil Procedure, read with section 47 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. It is contended before us in appeal that the District Judge had no authority to pass the order complained of and that the Receiver's remedy, if any, for the tort alleged to have been committed by Cheda Lal is by a suit for damages. The question is whether section 47 of the Provincial Insolvency Act operates so as to confer upon a District Judge all powers and to impose upon him all duties in connection with the sale of an insolvent's property by a Receiver, which are provided by Order XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure in connection with the execution of decrees of Civil Courts. So far as I am concerned, I have already expressed a contrary view in the case of Mool Chand v. Murari Lal (1). I have there held that the provisions of Order XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure do not apply to sales by a Receiver in bankruptcy. The point has been re-argued to-day with much keenness and ability by Mr. Agarwala on behalf of the respondents; but, apart from the question of applying the principle of stare decisis, I am not satisfied that the view taken by me in the reported case is erroneous. I think that the powers conferred upon a Court and the duties imposed upon a Court by Order XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure have to do with the execution of Civil Court decrees, the foundation of which is a decree for sale or an attachment duly effected in accordance with the provisions of the Order itself. The position of the Receiver is that of a man in whom certain property has become vested. It has no doubt vested in him as a trustee for other persons; but for all that he is in law the owner of the property. He has authority under the Provincial Insolvency Act, section 20, to sell the same, and his power of sale cannot be limited by the provisions of Order XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure, as it would have to be if the contention for the respondents now before us were correct. Except that the Receiver is bound to act under the directions given him by the Court and that any person aggrieved by any act or decision of the Receiver has a right of appeal to the Court under section 22 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the position of the Receiver is simply that of a private person owning certain property who is under the necessity to convert the same into cash as readily as possible. I think the consequences which would follow from fettering the Receiver by all the details of procedure which Order XXI of Act V of 1908 provides for execution of Civil Court decrees would be undesirable, and that there is nothing in section 47 of the Provincial Insolvency Act which compels us to take such a view. If, however, the Court, or the Receiver acting under orders of the Court, is not bound to follow all the procedure laid down by Order XXI aforesaid, including the necessity for attaching the property sought to be realized, for issuing a proclamation of sale, for hearing objections preferred as to ownership of the property or the like, neither can it be held that the Court becomes invested with special powers such as those conferred upon an execution Court by Order XXI, rule 71, of the Code of Civil Procedure. I think, therefore, that this appeal must be allowed and I would decree it accordingly, setting aside, so much of the order of the Court below dated the 25th February 1916, which has directed that the deficiency in the sale proceeds to the extent of Rs. 1,380 be realized from Cheda Lal under Order XXI, rule 71, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The appellant is entitled to his costs in this and in the lower Court. The costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale. This may be paid by the Receiver out of the insolvent's estate.

CHEDA LAL v. LACHMAN PARSHAD.

WALSH, J.—I entirely agree. I think a sale by the Receiver is an act of the Receiver and not a proceeding at all. All the places where the word "proceeding" occurs in this Act indicate that a proceeding in Court is intended. I think that view is strengthened by comparing sub-section (1) of section 47 with sub-section (2). Sub-section (1) clearly deals with a proceeding under this Act before the Court itself, and provides that the Court in regard to proceedings under this Act (that is, before itself) shall follow the same procedure as in the exercise of original civil jurisdiction. Sub-section (2) deals with High Courts and District Courts and in regard to proceedings under this Act, not before the Court itself but brought before it from a Court subordinate to it. From this, it is abundantly clear that a proceeding under section 47 is a proceeding in the ordinary meaning of the word. There is no proceeding under the Provincial Insolvency Act to enable an Insolvency Court to call upon a stranger to the bankruptcy to show cause why he should not pay a sum which may or may not be due from him. Our decision in no way prevents the Receiver from bringing an action for such loss as he has sustained owing to the breach of contract on the part of the appellant, if there was one.

By THE COURT.—The appeal is allowed and so much of the order of the Court below dated the 25th of February 1916 as directed that the deficiency in the sale proceeds to the extent of Rs. 1,380 be realized from Cheda Lal appellant under Order XXI, rule 71, of the Code of Civil Procedure is set aside. The appellant will have his costs here and in the Court below and the costs of this Court will include fees on the higher scale. It may be paid by the Receiver out of the insolvent's estate.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 109—Appeal to Privy Council—Final order passed in appeal—Order rejecting application for restoration of appeal dismissed for default—Decree.

An order of a High Court rejecting an application for restoration of an appeal dismissed for default is not appealable to His Majesty in Council, inasmuch as it is not a decree or final order passed in appeal nor an order passed in the exercise of the original civil jurisdiction of the High Court.

Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

FACTS material for the purposes of this report are as follows:—

Hira Lal and others brought a suit against Musammât Bismillah Begam on foot of a mortgage and got a decree for over Rs. 10,000. From this decree Musammât Bismillah Begam filed an appeal in the High Court and engaged Counsel to conduct it. On 27th January 1916, the appeal was dismissed for default. The applicant then applied for the restoration of the appeal but this application was also dismissed on 29th April 1916. Musammât Bismillah Begam then applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the order refusing to restore the appeal.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Applicant.—An order refusing to re-admit an appeal dismissed for default is a final order and an appeal lies from such an order under the provisions of Order XLIII, rule 1 (t). Though Order XLIII is not applicable in the case of appeals to His Majesty in Council, still the order in question is a "final order" within the meaning of section 109, Civil Procedure Code. In ordinary cases an appeal will lie from such an order and if the words "final order" in this section be interpreted in a narrow and limited sense, the applicant will be without any remedy. The value of the subject-matter of the proposed appeal is over Rs. 10,000.

Dr. Sunder Lal, for the Respondents, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—This application arises under the following circumstances. A suit was brought on a mortgage. The defendants pleaded (inter alia) part payment of an amount below Rs. 10,000. The Court of first instance held that the part payment had not been proved. If it had been held otherwise the claim of the plaintiffs would have been reduced by a certain amount for principal and interest. The defendants preferred an appeal to the High Court. On the case being called on, the learned gentleman who appeared in the case stated that they had no instructions to proceed with the appeal and the same was accordingly dismissed on the 27th of January 1916. On the 25th of March 1916 Counsel, (not the same gentleman who had appeared on the previous occasion) applied for restoration under the provisions of Order XLI, rule 19, of the Code. This application was grounded on an affidavit. The Bench which heard this application considered that no sufficient cause had been shown for the non-appearance of the appellant at the hearing, and accordingly summarily rejected the application without issuing notice to the other side. The order of the Court was dated the 29th of April 1916. The present application is one for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from this order rejecting the application for restoration. It is argued that an appeal lies as of right to His Majesty in Council under the provisions of section 109 (a) or (b). Section 109 (a) provides for an appeal from any decree or final order passed "on appeal" by a High Court. It is quite clear that the order rejecting the application for restoration was not a decree or final order passed "on appeal." Clause (b) provides for an appeal from any decree or final order passed by a High Court in exercise of original civil jurisdiction. It is equally clear that the order rejecting the application for restoration was not an order passed in the exercise of the "original civil jurisdiction" of this Court. If an appeal lay and it were necessary that we should certify that the case was "otherwise" a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council, we would be unable to give the necessary certificate. We reject the application with costs.

Application rejected.

JUDGMENT.

CHAMIER, C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit against a decree of the District Judge of Saran, whereby the suit was dismissed with costs. Three of the plaintiffs are sons of one Bhagwat Saran. The 4th plaintiff is a son of Harihar Saran. Bhagwat Saran, Harihar Saran and Shankar Saran were three brothers, being the sons of one Pundeo Narain Tewari. On January 1st, 1890, Pundeo Tewari mortgaged the three properties now in question to the father of defendants Nos. 1—4 and to Gopi Chand defendant No. 5. In 1903 the mortgagees brought a suit for sale of the mortgaged property. They impleaded as defendants three of the sons of Pundeo Narain Tewari and also other persons who claimed interests in the property, but they did not implead any of the present plaintiffs. It has been found, and it is now admitted, that the plaintiffs Nos. 2, 3 and 4 may be disregarded as they were not alive at the date of the institution of the suit on the mortgage and that the plaintiffs' statement to the contrary in the plaint is false. Plaintiff No. 1 appears to have been about ten years of age when the suit on the mortgage was instituted and the mortgagees did not implead him as a defendant. There is a conflict of evidence on the question whether the mortgagees were aware, when they brought their suit, of the existence of plaintiff No. 1. For the purpose of my judgment I am prepared to assume that the mortgagees were aware of his existence or might have become aware of it if they had made any enquiry. A decree was passed in that suit in April 1904 which was confirmed on appeal in August 1904. Execution proceedings followed and the property was put up for sale and was purchased by the mortgagees themselves in August 1903. Possession was delivered to the purchasers in October 1909. The present suit was instituted in January 1911. The Court below in dismissing the claim has held, as I understand its judgment, that the plaintiffs or at least plaintiff No. 1, not having been made a party to the former suit, would have been entitled to redeem the family property, had it not been proved that the property passed out of the possession of the family at various auction-sales which are referred to in its judgment.

As regards the village Bareja it is now common ground that the 1st plaintiff had not at the date of the present suit any subsisting interest in it. Therefore the suit as to Bareja was rightly dismissed.

As regards the village Shahbazpur I am of opinion that the District Judge was clearly right in holding that plaintiff No. 1 had at the date of this suit no subsisting interest in this village. It is true that the exact means by which Abdur Rahman became proprietor of this village has not been proved by direct evidence, but it has been shown that he was in possession of the village for many years and was recognized as proprietor by the Land Registration Department. The plaintiffs in the present case have totally failed to prove that any of them had any subsisting interest in Shahbazpur when this suit was brought.

The position as regards the third village Habibnagar is not quite so clear, but here again I am of opinion that the District Judge's decision is correct. As already stated, the suit on the mortgage was instituted and decided in 1904 and the execution sale took place in 1908. It appears that in 1907 Habibnagar was put up for sale to satisfy a public demand and was purchased by Sheikh Bulaki who by his purchase acquired the right, title and interest of all the members of the mortgagor's family in the village. Nine months later the property was put up for sale again on account of arrears of land revenue and was purchased by one Ujagir Tewari who for the purposes of this judgment may be assumed to have been a farzidar for Harihar Saran or for the family of which he and the plaintiffs were members. The purchase made by Sheikh Bulaki and also the purchase made in the name of Ujagir were, of course, made subject to the decree for sale which had been passed. The plaintiffs in the present case sue not by reason of any title which they have acquired through the purchase effected in the name of Ujagir but by virtue of the right which they had as members of a joint family before the property was sold to Sheikh Bulaki. It appears to me quite clear that whatever right the plaintiffs had in the property was wiped out by the purchase effected by Bulaki and that on this ground the present suit should be dismissed as regards Habibnagar.

Lastly I am of opinion that on the authorities the present suit is not maintainable at all in the absence of proof on the part of the plaintiffs that the debt for the recovery of which the property was brought to sale was not one for which they or their property were liable. It has never been suggested that the debt on account of which the mortgage was made was not binding on the family as a whole. On the contrary it has been proved that the money was borrowed for the purpose of paying Government revenue and it is quite clear that the interests of all the members of the family were liable for that debt. It is said that plaintiff No. 1 is entitled to redeem the property because he though then alive was not made a party to the suit by the mortgagees. In my opinion this is not a sufficient ground on which to base such a suit as this. I need only refer to the decisions in Jaddo Kuar v. Sheo Shanker Ram (1) confirmed on appeal by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sheo Shankar Ram v. Jaddo Kunwar (2), Bulwant Singh v. Aman Singh (3) and Kehri Singh v. Churni Lal (4). In some of these cases it was found that the mortgagees when suing upon their mortgage had no notice of the existence of the persons who subsequently sued to redeem the property and that was so in the suit decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council. The real ground of the decisions in all the cases referred to was that the plaintiffs seeking to redeem the mortgage and avoid the sale were effectively represented by the other members of the family in the suit brought upon the mortgage. Their Lordships of the Privy Council say: "There seems to be no doubt upon the Indian decisions (from which their Lordships see no reason to dissent) that there are occasions including foreclosure actions when the managers of a joint Hindu family so effectively represent all other members of the family that the family as a whole is bound. It is quite clear from the facts of this case and the findings of the Courts upon them that this is a case where this principle ought to be applied. There is not the slightest ground for suggesting that the managers of the joint family did not act in every way in the interests of the family itself." Every word of this passage applies to the present case. In my opinion on this ground also the present suit is liable to dismissal. If the cases of Bhola Jha v. Kali Prasad (5) and Ram Taran Goswami v. Rameswar Malia (6) were rightly decided it would appear that the present suit is also barred by limitation but it is unnecessary to go into this matter. I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This Rule was issued calling on the opposite party to show cause why the order of the District Judge complained of should not be set aside on the ground that no appeal lay to him. The plaintiffs brought a suit to enforce a mortgage security, and obtained an ex parte decree. Under the provisions of Order IX, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code, the defendant No. 2 applied to have the ex parte decrees set aside. That application was rejected on the ground that the said defendants did not appear in support of it. Against that order of rejection, the defendant No. 2 appealed to the District Judge. The District Judge set aside the order rejecting the application and directed the Court of first instance to hear it on its merits. The present Rule was obtained on the ground that the learned District Judge had no jurisdiction to hear an appeal from an order rejecting an application made under Order IX, rule 13, of the Code when it was dismissed for default. No such limitation can be placed upon the right of appeal given by Order XLIII, rule 1 (d), Civil Procedure Code, in the case of the rejection of an application made under Order IX, rule 13. It seems to me that the learned District Judge clearly had jurisdiction to hear and dispose of the appeal. This Rule, therefore, must

Second Additional Subordinate Judge,
Gorakhpur, dated the 11th July 1914.

FACTS.—The case came up originally for hearing before Knox, J. On the 2nd of November 1916 when a preliminary objection was raised on behalf of the respondents to the effect that as the suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted by Kalpu Rai and Gobind Dial Rai and during the pendency of the appeal Kalpu Rai died and no one was brought on record as his legal representative and his name was expunged and also as the name of one of the respondents who also died during the same time was expunged, this appeal abated in the case of both. As the other appellant was found to be the manager of the joint Hindu family the preliminary objection to him was disallowed relying on Hori Lal v. Nimman Kunwar (1), but as to the respondent there was no finding that another respondent was the manager of the joint family consisting of him and the deceased respondent. An issue was, therefore, remitted to the effect whether Mathura Sahu was the manager of a joint Hindu family consisting of the respondents. On the return of a finding to the effect that Mathura Sahu was the manager of a family consisting of himself and some other respondents, the case came up for final hearing before Knox, J.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellants.

Mr. Jung Bahadur Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question argued before me in this second appeal is whether the document which purports to be a deed of sale was in fact a deed of sale or whether it should be read with other documents and be held to be a mortgage-deed. On the 24th of June 1856, Gajadhar Rai executed a deed, No. 39C on the record, in favour of Bhola Sahu and others, and indubitably if this were the only deed, there can be no question that there was a deed of sale in favour of Bhola Sahu and others. There is, however, another deed, No. 35C, dated 25th June 1856, and the further fact that on that date Bhola Sahu and others instituted a suit against Gajadhar Rai for possession. A deed of compromise was filed the same day, and the suit was decided in accordance with the compromise. The main condition in the last deed was that if by Jeth Sudi 15, 1266 Fasli the defendant paid in the amount mentioned in the first of the deeds, then that deed and the decree passed in the case were to be set aside; if not, that deed and the decree were to be affirmed. The amount mentioned in the so-called deed of sale was not paid into Court by Jeth Sudi 15, 1266 Fasli, and it was not until the 22nd of November 1913 that the suit, out of which this second appeal has arisen, was instituted in the Court of the Munsif of Basti with a prayer that a decree might issue in favour of the plaintiffs for redemption of the property to which these deeds relate and the plaintiffs be put in possession on payment of Rs. 426, the amount entered in the sale-deed as the price for which the property was sold by Gajadhar Rai and purchased by Bhola Sahu and others. The lower Appellate Court held that it was not established that the transaction between the parties was really a mortgage transaction and dismissed the claim. I have heard all the arguments which could be urged on either side, and I have considered the documents. It has been held and must be deemed beyond dispute now that the intention of the parties must be gathered from the documents or from the language of the documents viewed in the light of the surrounding circumstances, see Jhanda Singh v. Wahid-ud-din (2). The language used in the deed of sale is very positive, and while there is much in favour of the contention put forward on behalf of the appellants that the surrounding circumstances are similar to the procedure which was at that time in force with reference to the deeds of conditional sale, there is also the circumstance which cannot be overlooked that more than fifty years had elapsed between Jeth Sudi 15, 1266 Fasli and the date on which the suit out of which this second appeal has arisen was instituted. It was laid down by Lord Chancellor Cranworth in Alderson v. White (3) accepted by Sir Barnes Peacock in Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (4) and cited and approved by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Jhanda Singh v. Wahid-ud-din (2) that "the Court after a lapse of thirty years ought to require cogent evidence to induce it to hold that an instrument is not what it purports to be." A fortiori when a Court is to interpret after a lapse of more than fifty years. I accept the view taken by the lower Appellate Court and I dismiss this appeal with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI

CHIDAMBARAM CHETTIAR V. KRISHNA VATHIYAR.

r. 2, O. XX, r. 11—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 244—Agreement for stay of execution before decree, whether adjustment of decree—Execution—Agreement, plea of, in bar.

Per Curiam—Order XXI, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, which speaks of a decree being 'adjusted in whole or in part, assumes the existence of the decree at the time of adjustment. It has no application to cases in which the alleged adjustment was by virtue of an agreement entered into between the parties before the passing of the decree. [p. 838, col. 2; p. 839, col. 1; p. 840, col. 2.]

Per Abdur Rahim, Offg. C. J., (Seshagiri Aiyar, J., dubitante and Phillips, J., dissenting).—An agreement between the parties to a suit made before the passing of a decree, by which the decree is not to be executed for a certain time, is a matter to be enquired into and decided by the executing Court within the meaning of section 47, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 838, col. 2.]

Authorities reviewed.

Per Abdur Rahim, Offg. C. J.—The Court which can postpone execution of a decree under Order XX, rule 11, Civil Procedure Code, is the Court which passed the decree and the section does not define the powers of the executing Court. The power of the executing Court to grant postponement is derived from the language of section 47, which is very wide. [p. 839, col. 1.]

The omission of the words 'stay of execution' in section 47 of the Code of 1908, which were embodied in section 244 of the Code of 1882, was not intended to exclude questions relating to stay of execution from the powers of the executing Court. The language of section 47 is comprehensive enough to include such questions. Under this section, questions relating to execution are not necessarily confined to those arising subsequent to the decree. [p. 839, col. 1.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—In matters of procedure, the principle of consistency and adherence to established practice will conduce to justice more than a strict adherence to logic. On a question of substantive law, the existence of a course of decisions may not be as effective an answer as in the case of procedural law. In the latter class of cases, litigants should be enabled to rely on a settled practice. [p. 839, col. 2.]

Per Phillips, J.—It is very doubtful whether a question relating to the stay of execution of a decree can be said to be a question relating to its execution. The omission of the words 'stay of execution' in section 47, of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, must have been deliberate and consequently importance should be attached to it. [p. 841, cols. 1 & 2.]

An agreement for stay of execution made before the passing of a decree which was not brought to the notice of the Court when it passed the decree, is not a question which can be gone into by the executing Court for it impeaches the validity of the decree. The decree must be executed as it stands and the executing Court cannot go behind its terms. A further ground for excluding such an agreement from consideration is that the conduct of the parties amounts to an abuse of process of the Court, for they have collusively induced the Court to pass a decree which, according to their agreement, was never to have effect. [p. 841, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeals against the orders of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tinnevely, in R. E. P. No. 123 of 1914 and in Miscellaneous Petition No. 1502 of 1914 respectively, in Original Suit No. 159 of 1913.

These appeals coming on for hearing on 27th and 28th March 1916, upon perusing the petitions of appeals, the orders of the lower Court and the records in the case and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Appellant in both the appeals and of Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the 1st Respondent in Appeal against Order No. 51 of 1915, and the respondent in Appeal against Order No. 93 of 1915 and the 2nd respondent in Appeal against Order No. 51 of 1915 not appearing in person or by Pleader, the Court (Oldfield and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

On 16th July 1914, the parties to these appeals entered into an agreement, set out in paragraph 2 of appellant's counter affidavit, that he should submit to a decree in a suit by respondent then pending against him, that the former should make an arrangement for satisfaction of such decree within a fixed date and that the latter should not before that date execute or transfer it. A decree was passed against appellant accordingly. After it, on 1st October 1914, he is alleged to have again made a similar agreement with the respondent. Both these agreements are relied on here as barring respondent's right to execute his decree.

We can deal shortly with the argument based on the agreement of 1st October 1914. It is not referred to specifically in the grounds of appeal to this Court, and it is not mentioned in the lower Court's order, which deals with the appellant's contention as based exclusively on the agreement before decree. In these circumstances we are led to infer that the later agreement was not relied on until the hearing before us, and we are fortified in this conclusion by appellant's admission that only oral evidence is available in support of it and the fact that respondent denies it. We, therefore, consider it no further,

CHIDAMBARAM CHETTIAR v. KRISHNA VATHIYAR.

The question is then whether the agreement of 16th July 1914 can be relied on; and, apart from authority we should be reluctant to answer it in the affirmative, because, in our opinion, such agreements, made without the knowledge of the Courts, result in evasions of Order XXI, rule 2 (3), of the Civil Procedure Code, if not in other circumstances. Authority, however, in this Presidency to some extent authorises them, Krishnamachariar v. Rukmani Ammal (1) and Rukmani Ammal v. Krishnamachari (2). In the first, however, of these cases the question was dealt with rather as one of evidence than of procedure and without detailed discussion of the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, whilst in the second the distinction between an agreement for stay of execution and one barring execution in toto was drawn, but does not appear to have received effect. On the other hand there is the case of Benode Lal Pakrashi v. Brajendra Kumar Saha (3) in the authorised reports, in which the right to rely on such an agreement as that before us was negatived. In these circumstances we refer for the decision of a Full Bench the question:—

“Whether it is open to appellant to rely on the agreement dated 16th July 1914 and referred to in paragraph 2 of his counter-affidavit in execution proceedings?”

These appeals coming on for hearing on the 3rd and 4th August 1916 on the question referred for the decision of the Full Bench, upon perusing the said order of reference and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Iyer for the Appellant in both the appeals and of M. C. V. Anantharishna Aiyar for the 1st respondent in Appeal against Order No. 51 of 1915 and the respondent in Appeal against Order No. 93 of 1915 and the 2nd respondent in Appeal against Order No. 51 of 1915 not appearing in person or by Pleader and the cases having stood over for consideration till this day the Court expressed the following

OPINION.

ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG., C. J.—I would answer the question referred to the Full Bench in the affirmative. Order XXI, rule 2, which speaks of a decree being adjusted in whole or in part assumes the existence of the decree at the time of adjustment. But it has no application to cases in which the alleged adjustment was by virtue of an agreement entered into between the parties before the passing of the decree. See Rama Ayyan v. Sreenivasa Pattar (4). Then it is said that it is the duty of the executing Court to enforce the decree as it stands and it has no power to stay proceedings in execution because of an agreement made while the suit was still pending and in contemplation of a decree being passed in favour of the plaintiff. Order XX, rule 11, says that after a decree for money—which is the nature of the decree in this case—has been made, the Court can postpone payment of the amount decreed only with the consent of the decree-holder. But the Court here referred to is apparently the Court which passed the decree, and this section does not seem to define the powers of the executing Court. The powers of the Court executing a decree are laid down in section 47, the terms of which are extremely wide. It says: “All questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit.” By a long course of decisions in this Presidency it has been held that an agreement made before the passing of the decree, by which the decree was not to be executed for a certain time, is a matter to be enquired into and decided by the executing Court. See Rama Ayyan v. Sreenivasa Pattar (4), Rukmani Ammal v. Krishnamachari (2), Krishnamachariar v. Rukmani Ammal (1) Subramania Pillai v. Kumaravelu Ambalam (5). A similar view was adopted in Bombay and in Allahabad. See Laldas Narandas v. Kishordas Devidas (6) and Gauri Singh v. Gajadhar Das (7). But in the Calcutta High Court a different view has prevailed. See Benode Lal Pakrashi v. Brajendra Kumar Saha (3), Hassan Ali v. Gauzi Ali Mir (8), Ohhoti Narain Singh v. Musammam Rameshwar Koer (9). I am unable to hold that the very comprehensive terms of section 47 do not include questions like the one raised before us. I may mention that the language of section 244 of the Code of 1882, with reference to which the case in Rama Ayyan v. Sreenivasa Pattar (4), which has been always followed in this Presidency was decided, was not perhaps as comprehensive as that of section 47. No doubt section 244 of the Code of 1882 specifically mentions 'stay of execution' as a question to be decided by the Court executing the decree but the scheme of the corresponding section 47 of the present Code is not to specify any particular questions at all but to include all questions relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree as being within its scope. There is undoubtedly a great deal to be said in favour of the view taken in Calcutta and perhaps it would, in some cases, be embarrassing to the executing Court to enquire into agreements made before the passing of a decree and modifying its operation. On the other hand, the Court executing the decree has been by section 47 given such large powers that it is in quite as good a position as any other Court to decide upon controversies of this character. I do not think we should be justified in saying, as held in Calcutta, that under section 47 questions relating to execution are necessarily confined to those arising subsequent to the decree and thus upsetting the practice which has so long obtained in this Presidency.

SESHAGIRI AYYAR, J.—I do not propose to say much in this case. What has mainly influenced me in answering the question in the affirmative is the fact that for over twenty years this Court has acted on the principle that agreements like the one in question can be pleaded in execution proceedings. Rama Ayyan v. Sreenivasa Pattar (4) was not disputed for a long time. It was followed in Rukmani Ammal v. Krishnamachari (2), in Krishnamachariar v. Rukmani Ammal (1) and in Subramania Pillai v. Kumaravelu Ambalam (5). In Bombay such agreements are dealt with by the Court executing the decree, Laldass Naranda v. Kishor-das Devidas (6). So also in Allahabad, Gauri Singh v. Gajadhar Das (7) (three out of the four Judges held that the agreement should be enquired into by the executing Court.) It is true that the view of the Calcutta Judges has been uniformly and consistently against this position. Sheo Golam Lall v. Beni Prosad (10), Thakoor Dyal Singh v. Sarju Pershad Misser (11) and Durga Prasad Banerjee v. Lalit Mohan Singh Roy (12). In this state of the law, I do not think it desirable or proper, that we should upset a practice which has been prevalent for a long period of time in this Presidency. I have always held that in matters of procedure, the principle of consistency will conduce to justice more than a strict adherence to logic. What, after all, is the change advocated? It is that the validity of the agreement should be separately litigated upon, and should not be enquired into in execution. This means further litigation and expense to the parties. I am, therefore against overruling the long course of practice in the Presidency and the decisions commencing with Rama Ayyan v. Sreenivasa Pattar (4). On a question of substantive law, the existence of a course of decisions may not be as effective an answer as in the case of procedural law. In the latter class of cases, litigants should be enabled to rely upon a settled practice.

I, therefore, do not propose to examine the case-law on the question at any length. The agreement in question is not an adjustment within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 2. The adjustment presupposes an existing decree, Ladd Govindoss v.

Ramdoss Vishnadoss (13), Ponnusami Nadar v. Letchmanan Chettiar (14) and Futeh Muham-mad v. Gopal Das (15). Therefore, the agreement is not obnoxious to Order XXI, rule 2.

Nor is the executing Court debarred from enquiring into it by virtue of the language of section 47. The decision in Sakharam Ramchandra v. Govind Vaman (16) was passed with reference to the language of the Code of 1861, which in material points is different from that of the present Code.

The real difficulty arises, as pointed out by the learned Officiating Chief Justice in the course of the argument, with reference to Order XX, rule 11. Under sub-clause (2) of that rule, the postponement of execution shall be made only on the consent of the parties. I am convinced that this consent must be subsisting at the time the executing Court is asked to pass the order; but it is open to argument whether the clause lays down that without that consent the Court has no jurisdiction to stay execution for a time. I agree that it is of the essence of the rights under a decree that a decree-holder should have prompt execution, and that the Court should have no option to put him off against his will. It may be that the effect of postponing execution will be virtually to vary the terms of the decree. These are weighty considerations in favour of the view that an agreement prior to decree which the decree-holder refuses to stand by should not be enquired into in execution, however reprehensible the conduct of the decree-holder may be in resiling from his position. If the matter were res integra, I would have hesitated a great deal before allowing such a course to be adopted in execution; but as I said before, no question of the substantial violation of rights is involved in holding that the question should be litigated in execution rather than by a separate suit; and as the practice has been otherwise in this Presidency, I would answer the reference in the affirmative.

PHILLIPS, J.—The agreement of 16th July 1914 referred to in the question of reference runs as follows:—

That the defendant should remain ex parte without pressing the defence, that the plaintiff should obtain a decree for the full amount, that this defendant should deposit Rs. 2,500 in the South India Bank, Tinnevely, on or before 15th October 1914, that the plaintiff should assign the decree to this defendant or his nominee and after executing the assignment deed should recover the money from the Bank, and that the plaintiff should not transfer or execute the decree till then.

It is an agreement entered into before the decree was obtained and the question for consideration is whether it can be pleaded in proceedings taken in execution of that decree.

The first point that has to be decided is whether the agreement amounts to an adjustment of the decree within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 2, for, if it is, it cannot be pleaded as it has not been certified to Court. I think, however, that the agreement does not come within the provisions of Order XXI, rule 2, for at the time it was made no decree was in existence nor could the parties be certain that any decree would be passed in the suit. The decree was not, therefore, adjusted by the agreement, which at most was an agreement to adjust the decree in the future.

The next point for determination is whether such an agreement can be pleaded in execution proceedings. The question has been answered in the affirmative by the Bombay High Court in Lalidas Narandas v. Kishordas Devidas (6) and in the negative by the Calcutta High Court in Chhoti Narain Singh v. Musammat Rameshwar Koer (9), Hassan Ali v. Gauri Ali Mir (8) and Benode Lal Pakrashi v. Bajendra Kumar Saha (3) and in this Court the views are conflicting [Rukmani Ammal v. Krishnamachari (2) and Ladd Govindoss v. Ramdoss Vishnadoss (13)]. The case reported as Rama Ayyan v. Sreenivasa Pattar (4) relates to an agreement after decree, and in Krishnamachariar v. Rukmani Ammal (1) the question whether an agreement before decree can be pleaded in execution proceedings is not discussed.] In Laldas Narandas v. Kishordas Devidas (6), the cases of Chenvirappa v. Puttappa (17) and Mukund Harshet v. Haridas Khemji (18) were dissented from and Ranade, J., gave as one of the reasons for disagreeing with West, J.'s decision in Chenvirappa v. Puttappa (17) that section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code had been since amended by the addition of the words "and stay of execution" and that the addition had not been brought to Sir C. Sargent's notice in Mukund Harshet v. Haridas Khemji (18). These words are now omitted in the Code of 1908. It is very doubtful whether a question relating to the stay of execution of a decree can be said to be a question relating to its execution and although in Subramania Pillai v. Kumaravelu Ambalam (5), a Bench of this Court has held that the omission of the words from section 47 has no effect, because they were mere surplusages in the old section 244, I must with all deference differ, for the words were added to section 244 by an amendment to the Code of 1882, passed in 1888. When, therefore, the words were added the Legislature deemed them to be of importance, and not mere surplusage. Their omission, therefore, from Act V of 1908, must have been deliberate, and consequently I think importance should be attached to it. However that may be, I think the matter can also be decided on another ground. The agreement sought to be pleaded could have been brought to the notice of the Court which passed the decree, and the Court might have been asked to pass a decree in accordance with its terms. The defendant allowed a decree to be passed, and, now that execution is sought, wants to go behind the decree and substitute another arrangement in its place. This does not appear to me to be a question which can be gone into by the Court executing the decree, for it impeaches the validity of the decree. It is a well settled principle, for which no authority is now required, that a decree must be executed as it stands, and the executing Court cannot go behind the terms of the decree.

(17) 11 B. 708; 12 Ind. Jur. 102; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 466.

(18) 17 B. 23; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 15.

The Legislature has enacted certain provisions which enable the Courts to recognise agreements between the parties after the decree has been passed, for instance, adjustments under Order XXI, rule 2, postponement of payment or payment by instalments under Order XX, rule 11 (2), but in order that these modifications may be enforced certain special procedure is prescribed. Again, a Court has no inherent power to stay execution of a decree, and the various circumstances in which stay can be granted are duly set forth in the Civil Procedure Code. None of those circumstances exists in the present case. Otherwise under Order XXI, rule 17 (4), a Court shall execute a decree upon application, provided certain rules have been complied with by the applicant. For this reason there is ground for holding that the words "and stay of execution" have been deliberately omitted by the Legislature with a view to excluding questions relating exclusively to stay of execution from the jurisdiction of the executing Court. A further ground for excluding an agreement like the present from consideration in execution proceedings is that the conduct of the parties amounts to an abuse of process of the Court, for they have collusively induced the Court to pass a decree, which according to their agreement was never to have effect.

This seems to be a case in which the principle of stare decisis need not be too strictly applied, for it relates only to a question of procedure, and an alteration in procedure will not materially affect existing rights for the rights are not taken away, but the method of enforcing them is changed. Practically all the cases in which the plea was allowed in execution were decided under the Code of 1882, and now that that Code has been altered by the Legislature, there appears to be no reason why, if the proper interpretation of the Statute necessitates an alteration in procedure, effect should not be given to such interpretation.

I would, therefore, answer the question referred in the negative.

By THE COURT -- The answer to the question referred to us will be in the affirmative.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B C. of 1885), s. 73—Rent, suit for—Parties, necessary—Transferee of tenant, liability of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 33—Appellate Court, power of, to pass decree against co-defendant against whom no appeal has been preferred.

Under section 73 of the Bengal Tenancy Act a landlord has a right to make both the tenant and his transferees jointly liable for the rent. [p 842, col. 2.]

Under rule 33 of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code, an Appellate Court has power, in an appeal from a decree passed against one or more co-defendants, to pass a decree against any or all of them. [p. 843, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Patna, dated the 22nd August 1914, reversing that of the Munsif, 4th Court, Patna; dated the 16th April 1914.

Mr. Ganesh Dutt Singh, for the Appellant

Messrs. Abani Bhusan Mukerji and Baikant Nath Mittra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the appellant in this case. The suit is for rent in respect of certain lands held by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 as tenants. There is no question as to the amount of rent claimed or as to the rate of rent. The defendants Nos. 4 to 14 are the ijaradars or the mortgagees of the lands in question from defendants Nos. 1 to 3, the original tenants. Defendants Nos. 4 to 9 compromised the suit with the plaintiff in the first Court. The suit was contested by the remaining defendants Nos. 10 to 14 as ijaradars of the disputed land. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3, the original tenants, filed written statements, but did not contest the suit at the hearing.

The relief sought in the plaint is for a decree for the amount in claim against all the principal defendants Nos. 1 to 14. The first Court gave a decree to the plaintiff against defendants Nos. 10 to 14, but dismissed the suit as against defendants Nos. 1 to 3. On appeal by the defendants Nos. 10 to 14, the District Judge dismissed the suit of the plaintiff entirely, holding that although by the terms of the rehannamah or the mortgage-bond the defendants Nos. 10 to 14 are liable to pay rent to the landlord, the agreement in the bond was not acted upon and hence defendants Nos. 1 to 3 the original tenants are alone liable for the claim of the plaintiff.

The learned District Judge further directed that the plaintiff might bring a fresh suit against the defendants Nos. 1 to 3, unless the claim was barred by limitation, but it is not clear from the judgment of the learned District Judge on what ground he did not give a decree against defendants Nos. 1 to 3 when he found that they were liable for the payment of the rent to the landlord. I see no reason why the plaintiff should have been driven to another suit and run the risk of his claim being barred. The plaintiff being dissatisfied with the decision of the learned District Judge has come to this Court in appeal.

Now the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are the recorded tenants of these lands. Defendants Nos. 4 to 14, who hold the lands under the ijara, are actually in possession of these lands and their right and possession have also been recognised in the survey khatian with the amount of rental entered against their names. Under the terms of the mortgage-bond they are liable to pay rent to the landlord. The liability to pay rent is not at all denied by the learned Vakil who appears on their behalf, but what he contends is this, that they pay rent to defendants Nos. 1 to 3, and that defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in their turn pay rent to the landlord, and hence the plaintiff has no right to bring this action for rent against them. I do not at all agree with this contention. The original tenants have transferred their lands to defendants Nos. 4 to 14, and under section 73 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the landlord has a right to make both the tenants and the transferees jointly liable for the rent. Their liability to pay the rent is confirmed by the Record of Rights. I do not see any cogency in the argument of the learned Vakil for the defendants, JAITHU MAL V. JANKI DAS.

Nos. 10 to 14 for allowing them to follow the circuitous method of payment of rent. Incident of the rent falls upon the defendants-ijaradars who are in possession of the lands in suit and who have agreed in the bond to pay rent. The plaintiff-appellant is perfectly within his rights in bringing the suit against all the defendants, the original tenants and the ijaradars, and under section 73 has a right to enforce his claim against all of them. His claim cannot be affected by dispute amongst the defendants inter se. I, therefore, hold that the plaintiff-appellant is entitled to a decree in this case against all the defendants jointly.

Under rule 33, Order XLI of the Code of Civil Procedure, the lower Appellate Court was competent to give a decree against defendants Nos. 1 to 3, although the plaintiff did not prefer any appeal against the order of the first Court dismissing the suit against the defendants Nos. 1 to 3. There was a conflict of decisions in the different High Courts regarding the power of the Appellate Court in a case of this kind, but the conflict has been set at rest by the new provision in rule 33, Order XLI to the Code of Civil Procedure. The illustration to that section makes the meaning of the rule quite explicit. I, therefore, hold that this Court is competent to make a decree against all the defendants-respondents in this case for the claim of the plaintiff.

I accordingly allow the appeal, decree the suit of the plaintiff against the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and defendants Nos. 10 to 14 with costs throughout.

The cross-appeal preferred by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 is dismissed.

Appeal allowed; Cross-appeal dismissed.

for the Appellant.

Mr. Kirkpatrick, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only matter calling for decision in this case is whether the building of which pre-emption is sought is a shop or a residential building.

The learned Additional Divisional Judge finds that it is not a residential building and the appellant contends that it lay on the respondent vendee to prove that it was a shop and that such proof has not been furnished. He further argues that if the lower storey is found to consist of a shop or shops, he should be granted a decree for the upper storey only, which admittedly is residential.

In these cases, the decision it is admitted depends on the chief or most important purpose to which the building in question is devoted, and having regard to the fact that the whole of the lower storey is used for shops and has been used for that purpose since, at any rate, 1853, whilst the upper storey is a bala khana, we hold that the building is primarily a shop or shops and that the residential upper storey is auxiliary or appended to the lower.

The building is one and indivisible and so is the transaction.

In our opinion the building sold is in the main a shop or set of shops and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

The cross-objections are not pressed before us and are dismissed.

Appeal and cross-objections dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, para. 3, s. 105, O. XLI, r. 23—Arbitration and award—Award made within time fixed by Court but filed beyond it, validity of—'Decision on merits', supersession of award, whether affects—Remand, order of—Preliminary point.

The acceptance or supersession of an award affects the decision on the merits of the case. [p. 845, cols. 1 & 2]

There is nothing in the rules in Schedule II of the Civil Procedure Code on arbitration to show that an award would be invalid if not filed on or before the time fixed for the filing of it in Court. All that is required by rule 3 of Schedule II is that the Court must fix a time for the making of the award and an award would be valid if made within the time fixed, though not filed in Court on the date fixed for submitting the award to Court. [p. 846, col. 1.]

A case was referred to arbitration and 19th December was fixed for submitting the award to the Court. On that date the award was not filed, and the Court superseded the reference, and proceeded to hear the case on the merits. The arbitrator signed the award at 7 P. M. on the same day and filed it in Court on 21st December. The Court, nevertheless, decided the case on the evidence. On appeal, the District Judge set aside the decree of the first Court and remanded the case under Order XLI, rule 23, to be tried in accordance with the award:

Held, (1) that the order of supersession of the award was one affecting the merits of the case within the meaning of section 105 of the Civil Procedure Code; [p. 845, col. 1.]

(2) that inasmuch as no particular hour was fixed by the Court for making the award, it must be taken to have been made within the time fixed by the Court, notwithstanding that it was made after the rising of the Court; [p. 845, col. 2.]

(3) that the action of the Court in superseding the award amounted to a decision on a preliminary point within the meaning of rule 23 of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code and the order of remand by the District Judge was, therefore, correctly made. [p. 846, col. 2; p. 847, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Darbhanga, dated the 11th September 1915, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Court, Madhubani, dated the 4th March 1915.

Messrs. Ajendra Narain Dutta and Saroshi Chundra Dutta, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Lachmi Narain Saha and Shiva Narain Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants in this case were plaintiffs in the original Court. They brought a suit for recovery of possession of certain lands in the Court of the Munsif of Madhubani. On November 11, 1914, the parties applied to the Court for reference of the case to the arbitrator named by them. The case was, therefore, by the order of the Court, referred to the arbitrator, Babu Krishna Singh Thakur, with the request to submit his award positively by the 19th of December 1914. On December 19th, the award of the arbitrator was not filed in the Court nor any application made by him for time. The Court made the following order:—"The arbitrator has not submitted the award. He has not applied for time. The plaintiff has filed an objection also to the arbitration. Let the arbitration be superseded and the records be called from the arbitrator. Put up on 14th January 1915 for hearing." On 21st December the arbitrator submitted his award and returned the record. Whereupon, the Munsif made the following order;—"The arbitrator submitted the award. The Pleaders of the parties be informed, and put up on the date fixed." The case was after some adjournments taken up on the 11th of February 1915, and the Court passed the following order:—"The defendant's Pleader contends that the award submitted by the arbitrator was signed on RADHA KANTA MISSEER V. JALADHAR JHA.

19th December 1914 that it was filed in the Court on 21st December 1914 and, therefore, the award was valid and the arbitration ought not to have been superseded. But I find from the award that the arbitrator signed it at 7 P. M. on 19th December 1914, that is, after the order superseding the arbitration was passed. The arbitrator did not submit the award within the time allowed by the Court. The award was, therefore, invalid." The Munsif ultimately, on 6th March 1915, decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiffs on the merits of the case, i. e., upon evidence given by the parties to the trial. The defendants appealed to the District Judge of Darbhanga who by his judgment, dated 11th September 1915, set aside the decree made by the Munsif and remanded the case to him with the direction that he consider the award and any objection that may have been made thereto within the period allowed by law. The learned District Judge held that the order of the Munsif superseding the arbitration was ultra vires, because as a matter of fact, the award was made on the date specified in the Court's order and, therefore, within the time fixed by the Court. The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court. It is contended by the learned Vakil for the appellants that the order superseding the arbitration passed by the Munsif was final, inasmuch as no appeal was preferred against it by the respondents under section 104, clause (a) of the Code of Civil Procedure, and hence it was not open to the District Judge in appeal to set aside the decree on account of any error, defect or irregularity in the order of supersession passed by the Munsif, inasmuch as the order of supersession did not affect the decision of the case, within the meaning of section 105 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There does not appear to be any substance in the contention that the order of supersession of the award in this case does not affect the merits of the case. It is obvious that if the award was not superseded the Court was bound to pronounce judgment upon the award and to pass decree in accordance with the award. Therefore, the acceptance of the award or the supersession of the award affects the decision upon the merits of the case. The point seems to have been concluded by the decisions of all the High Courts, the leading case on the point is that of Calcutta, Mothooranath Tewaree v. Brindabun Tewaree (1). This case has been followed in Damodar Trimbak v. Raghunath Hari (2), Achuthayya v. Thimmayya (3), Ram Jiwan v. Nawal Singh (4), Ram Autar Tewari v. Deoki Tewari (5). The last case was decided on 11th February 1915 by Tudball and Chamier, Judges (Now Sir Edward Chamier, Chief Justice) and is the latest authority on the point. The learned District Judge was, therefore, competent to set aside the decree of the Munsif on the ground that the order of supersession made by the Munsif was ultra vires. The first contention, therefore, of the learned Vakil for the appellant is overruled.

The second contention on behalf of the appellants is that the award was not made within the time fixed by the Court and, therefore, it was invalid. The Court by its orders had fixed the 19th of December for the submission of the award. The Munsif held that the award, as a matter of fact, was made on the 19th December, but as it was made at 7 P. M. after the Court hours it was not made within the time fixed by the Court. No particular hour was at all fixed by the Court for the making of the award and if the award was made on the date fixed by the Court it must be taken to have been made within the time fixed by the Court notwithstanding that it was made after the rising of the Court. It is then contended that as the award was to be submitted on the 19th December it was intended by the Court that the award should have been made by the arbitrator before the 19th. Rule 3 of Schedule II of the Code of Civil Procedure is a complete answer to this contention. The Court is bound by the order of reference to the arbitrator to fix such time as it thinks reasonable for the making of the award and to specify that time in the order itself. There is nothing in the rules in Schedule II of the Code of Civil Procedure on arbitration to show that an award would be invalid if not filed on or before the time fixed for the filing of it in Court. All that is required is that the Court must fix a time for the making of the award and an award would be valid if made within the time fixed though not filed in Court on the date fixed for submitting the award to Court. The learned District Judge is, therefore, right in holding that 19th December fixed for the submission of the award must be taken to have been fixed under rule 3 of the Schedule for the making of the award. This view is again supported by a string of rulings on the point. In Ram Autar Tewari v. Deoki Tewari (5), already referred to, the award was not filed until three days after the date fixed for filing but it was proved that the award was made within the time fixed for filing. The award was held good and was enforced. Reference may also be made to the following authorities Arumugam Chetti v. Arunachalam Chetti (6), Umersey Premji v. Shamji Kanji (7), Sita Ram v. Bhawani Din Ram (8), Asad-ul-lah v. Muhammad Nur (9). There is, therefore, no substance in the second contention also.

The third ground taken by the learned Vakil for the appellants is that the order of remand made by the District Judge was wrong, inasmuch as it contravened the provisions of rule 23, Order XLI of the Code of Civil Procedure. The point urged on behalf of the appellants is that the Munsif had not disposed of the case on any preliminary point but had disposed of it on the merits and hence rule 23, Order XLI, did not apply to this case. To my mind this would be taking a very narrow view of the word "preliminary point" referred to in rule 23 Order XLI. The first and the foremost point before the Munsif was whether the award filed by the arbitrator was a valid one or not. If the award was found to be invalid or such as could not be acted upon then only the Court could deal with the case on merits otherwise the Court was bound to give effect to the award and to give judgment and decree on the basis of the award. Section 3, clause 2, precludes the Court from dealing with the case when once it is referred to arbitration save as is provided in the rules in Schedule II. The first Court declined to go into the merits of the award itself and disposed of the award on a preliminary ground that it was not made or filed within the time prescribed by the Court. If the Court had decided that the award was filed within the time and had not thrown out the award on the preliminary objection there would have been no necessity for the Court or the parties to go into evidence at the trial of the case. The case has, therefore, been disposed of on a preliminary point as contemplated by rule 23 of Order XLI of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Appellate Court has set aside the order of the Munsif regarding the preliminary objection to the validity of the award. The subsequent proceedings of the Munsif, that is, the taking of evidence and the passing of his judgment and decree in the case, all become null and void under rule 3 Schedule II of the Code of Civil Procedure and are set aside as a result of the reversal of the Munsif's order on the preliminary question as to the validity of the award. So the case of the defendants has been thrown out on a preliminary point by the first Court and the order of remand by the lower Appellate Court was, therefore, within the powers given to it by rule 23, Order XLI. In the second place even if the order of the Court below is not exactly in conformity with rule 23, Order XLI still it is an irregularity of the kind that cannot by itself vitiate the judgment of the District Judge, as held in Nabin Chandra Tripati v. Pran Krishna Dey (10). In Ram Autar Tewari v. Deoki Tewari (5) already referred to in the earlier part of this judgment where the facts appear to be in all respects similar to the present case, a similar order of remand was passed. The Additional Judge set aside the order of the Munsif superseded.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Backergunge, dated the 5th March 1915, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court, Perozepur, dated the 11th June 1914.

FACTS material to the report will appear from the following extracts from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

“This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for rent that has been decreed. The plaintiffs are the holders of a 5/6ths share in a miras ijara tenure of which the remainder is held by defendant No. 7. Defendants Nos. 1 to 6 are the holders of a howla subordinate to this miras ijara, and they executed a kabuliyat in favour of the entire body of landlords on the 17th of Aswin 1306 for the lands, which were then unreclaimed. The kabuliyat stated the area settled with the executants to be roughly 50 bighas, and it provided that the executants should enjoy the lands rent-free for two years and that thereafter they should pay rent at the rate of Rs. 2 per bigha fixed in perpetuity for as much land as was cleared and brought under cultivation. No period was fixed within which the land should be reclaimed, but it was provided that if the surrounding lands were all brought under cultivation the executant should be liable to pay rent for the entire area in their possession at the stipulated rate. It was further provided that the rental should be made to correspond to the acreage when the lands should be properly surveyed and measured.

The Record of Rights prepared some years ago, shows that the actual area of the lands comprised in the howla is 83 bighas local measure, and it has been ascertained by a commissioner appointed by the Court that all the surrounding lands, with the exception of a patch measuring 10 or 12 cottas which is kept as a grazing ground, are under cultivation. The tenants-defendants have brought only a portion of the lands under cultivation.

The plaintiffs had previously sued the defendants for arrears of rent due on account of the howla and had prayed for a decree for additional rent for additional area. They with.

BHOSAI v. AMINUDDI.

drew the prayer relating to the assessment of additional rent with permission to sue again and took a decree for rent at the rate at which it had been previously realised. In the present suit they have prayed for a decree for the balance of the rent payable under the kabuliyat. They have made their co-sharer a pro forma defendant and have prayed that if anything be found to be due to the co-sharer, and the latter fails to join as plaintiff, Court-fees may be realised from them on account of such amount and a decree granted for the entire sum found to be due.

The co-sharer defendant did not join as plaintiff, and no evidence has been given that anything is due to him.

The Court below has given the plaintiffs a decree for their share of the rent at the kabuliyat rate of Rs. 2 per bigha on the 83 bighas of land comprised in the howla together with interest at the rate of Rs. 3-2-0 per mensem as provided by the kabuliyat.

The following contentions have been raised before me in appeal.

Issue No. 1—That the plaintiffs are not entitled to maintain a separate suit as they have no right to collect rent separately.

Issue No. 2—The decree granted by the Court below is for the plaintiffs' share of the rent and has the effect of declaring the plaintiffs' right to collect rent separately.

Issue No. 3.—Section 188 of the Tenancy Act is a bar to the suit.

* * * * *

The answer to the third objection is difficult. There has been no separate attornment to the plaintiffs; indeed admittedly there is even no right of separate collection. The plaintiffs profess to sue for the additional rent they claim, not under the provisions of section 52 of the Tenancy Act, but on the basis of the kabuliyat. If they are entitled to maintain their suit under the ordinary law, section 188 of the Tenancy Act will not apply. The question then is whether or not the plaintiffs are competent to sue under the ordinary law to enforce a contract in spite of their co-sharer's refusal to join in the suit. There is, as far as I am aware no reported decision on the point. In the cases of Panchanan Banerji v. Raj Kumar Guha (1) and Gobind

Ohandra Pal v. Hamidulla Bhuian (2), the tenants had attorned separately to the plaintiffs who were co-sharer-landlords, and as the kabuliyats, they executed, gave the plaintiffs the right to sue independently for additional rent on account of additional area found on measurement, it was held that the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain suits for such additional rent on the basis of the kabuliyat and independently of the provisions of the Tenancy Act. The case of Baidya Nath De Sarkar v. Sheikh Jhin (3) was also decided according to the terms of the kabuliyat. The plaintiffs were co-sharer-landlords in whose favour the tenant had executed a separate kabuliyat providing for the payment of additional rent for additional area found on measurement. It was, however, found on construction of the kabuliyat that the provision was that in case the rent of the entire holding was increased the plaintiffs should be entitled to recover separately a proportionate share of such increase. The other reported cases are cases in which co-sharer landlords sought to maintain separate suits under the provisions of section 30 of the Tenancy Act and it was held that they were not entitled to do so as those suits are governed by the provisions of the Tenancy Act, and section 188 would be a bar. The only principle deducible in the plaintiffs' favour from these decisions is that where a suit is not based on the provisions of the Tenancy Act, and where section 178 does not restrict freedom of contract, a suit may be maintained under the ordinary law to enforce the contract.

In order that the plaintiffs in the present case should be entitled to maintain such a suit, it must be found that their interest and cause of action are several; otherwise under the provisions of section 45 of the Contract Act they are not competent to sue independently. If it could be proved that the co-sharer-defendant had, by a private arrangement with the defendants, rendered himself incapable of suing to enforce the original contract, the plaintiffs might have been entitled to sue for the enforcement of the contract so far as it affected them. No such contingency has arisen here. The cause of action is non-fulfilment of the entire contract and the plaintiffs cannot be said to have any separate cause of action. I am, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiffs are not entitled to maintain the suit. I accordingly allow the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs in both Courts."

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-appellants as the owners of a 5/6th share of a miras tenure sued to recover rent of a houla (subordinate to the miras) held by the principal defendants, the owner of the remaining 1/6th share of the miras being made a pro forma defendant on the ground that she refused to join with the plaintiffs in the suit. The suit was based upon a kabuliyat which described the land let out as 50 bighas "by guess" and provided that the lessees should enjoy the land rent-free for two years and that thereafter they should pay rent at the rate of Rs. 2 per bigha fixed in perpetuity for as much land as was cleared and brought under cultivation. No period was fixed within which the land should be reclaimed, but it was provided that if the surrounding lands were all brought under cultivation the executants would be liable to pay rent for the entire area in their possession at the stipulated rate.

The area of the land comprised in the houla was found to be 83 bighas in the Record of Rights, and it was also found that all the surrounding lands with the exception of a small patch of land reserved as pasture land had been brought under cultivation.

The plaintiffs stated that they were unable to ascertain whether any rent was due to the pro forma defendant and claimed their share of the rent of the entire land. They also prayed that the pro forma defendant might be joined as plaintiff if she desired to do so and a decree might be passed for the entire rent if it was found that the rent due to her was left unpaid, on taking additional Court-fee from the plaintiffs. The Court of first instance passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs, but on appeal that decree was reversed by the District Judge. The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court.

The main ground upon which the learned District Judge dismissed the suit, viz., that under section 45 of the Contract Act the plaintiffs alone could not maintain the suit upon the joint contract contained in the kabuliyat cannot be sustained. As pointed out in Shital Chandra Bairagi v. Manik Chandra Hazra (4), although as a general rule all co-contractees ought to be joined as plaintiffs, a suit by one would not be bad if the others were joined as defendants and if there was good reason for not joining them as plaintiffs, and that one of several joint contractees may sue to enforce his share of the obligation if the other co-contractees are joined as defendants. In the present case the remaining co-sharer, who, it is found, refused to join as plaintiff, was made a pro forma defendant to the suit. The learned Pleader for the respondent also did not attempt to support the judgment on that ground.

It cannot be disputed that the plaintiffs can maintain a suit under the general law to recover the entire rent of the tenure provided they make their co-sharer a party to the suit [See Pramada Nath Roy v. Ramani Kanta Roy (5)], but it is contended on behalf of the respondents that this is a suit for additional rent for additional area under the provisions of section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that, therefore, the suit cannot be maintained unless all the landlords join as plaintiffs in bringing the suit. If the suit is one under section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the provisions of section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act would apply, and in that case the suit cannot upon the authorities be maintained by some of the co-sharer-landlords. [See Gopal Chunder Das v. Umesh Narain Chowahry (6) and Sati Prasad Garga v. Radha Nath Maity (7).]

The question, therefore, is whether the suit is one under section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Now, the land at the time it was let out was waste and jungly. It was apparently not measured and the area was stated to be 50 bighas "by guess." The kabuliyat as stated above provided that the tenants would pay rent on the entire area at the fixed rate of Rs. 2 per bigha, when the lands would be reclaimed or when the surrounding lands would be brought under cultivation. The rent claimed under that contract, therefore, is not additional rent for excess land within the meaning of section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act but a claim for rent in accordance with the terms of the original letting. The present case is similar to that of Ram Chunder Chuckerabutty v. Giridhar Dutt (8), where Pigot and Banerjee, JJ., held that such a suit is not for additional rent for excess land within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that "there is no reason why he should not be entitled to claim separately the rent that is payable, not upon any fresh adjustment of the rent inconsistent with the continuance of the old tenancy, but upon an ascertainment of the rent payable in accordance with terms of the original letting." The case is sought to be distinguished on the ground that the plaintiff in that case was in separate collection of his share of the rent. That fact, however, is immaterial where the suit is not one for additional rent for excess area under section 52 of the Act, but is a suit brought by a co-sharer-landlord under the general law after making all the co-sharers parties to the suit.

The learned Pleader for the respondents relies strongly on the case of Darik Dhakai v. Aswini Kumar Nag (9), in which Coxe and Roy, JJ., held that a suit for additional rent on the basis of a kabuliyat executed by the tenant in favour of the entire body of landlords agreeing to pay additional rent for additional area, was not maintainable by a co-sharer-landlord although the other co-sharers are made parties to the suit. But that case is clearly distinguishable from the present. There the tenants had executed a kabuliyat agreeing to pay rent for 15 bighas of land, and there was a stipulation that the tenant would pay additional rent for additional land. The land on being measured was found to be 25 bighas and the suit was for the whole rent including the rent due on the additional area. That was, therefore, a suit for additional rent for excess area under section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the decision in that case cannot apply to the present. The learned Judges pointed out that the existence of an agreement (kabuliyat) does not necessarily take the suit out of the Tenancy Act. It is not, however, the existence of the kabuliyat, but the fact that the whole area was by the terms of the kabuliyat to be assessed with rent at a fixed rate on the lands being reclaimed or in the event of the surrounding lands being brought under cultivation, shows that the suit is not one for additional rent for excess area. There is no question in the present case of any excess area or of adjustment of rent inconsistent with the terms of the original tenancy. The rate of rent was fixed for the whole area at the inception of the tenancy and the tenant agreed to pay the rent for the entire land on the happening of the contingency mentioned in the kabuliyat. The tenant was paying rent for lands which had previously been brought under cultivation, and under the terms of the original letting he was liable to pay rent for the entire area under the circumstances found in the case.

The suit, therefore, is maintainable by the plaintiffs upon the kabuliyat under the general law, and the provisions of section 188 are not applicable to the suit. No other question appears to have been urged before the Court below.

The decree of the Court of Appeal below must, therefore, be set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs in both Courts.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

FIRST APPEAL FROM ORDER NO. 57 OF 1916.

December 4, 1916.

Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott and

PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS
versus

ADIA SARAN—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

*Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), s. 11—Appeal—Suit undervalued—Jurisdiction—Appellant, duty of—

In an appeal on the ground that the first Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit inasmuch as it was beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of that Court, the appellant has to show, under section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act, not merely that there has been an incorrect valuation but that the trial of the suit has been prejudicially affected thereby. [p. 852, col. 1.]

Per Walsh, J.—In such a case an appellant ought to take the ground in the memorandum of appeal and to state how he has been prejudicially affected. [p. 852, col. 2.]

First appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 14th February 1916.

FACTS:—The suit was brought for a declaration that plaintiffs had the rights of saknadars in a town in Fatehpore District and for other reliefs. The defence was that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to try the suit and that the plaintiffs had no such rights as they alleged. The Munsif decreed the suit holding on all points in favour of the plaintiffs. The learned Sub-Judge in appeal only went into the question of jurisdiction and returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court holding that the suit was undervalued and was not within the jurisdiction of the Munsif.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman (with him Mr. Iqbal Ahmad), for the Appellants.—All evidence had been tendered and had been recorded by the first Court. All findings necessary for the disposal of the suit had been arrived at and the suit was decided on the merits.

Section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act provides that an objection as to jurisdiction will not be entertained in appeal unless it was taken in the first Court as well as in the lower Appellate Court and the latter is satisfied that the under valuation has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit. In this case no doubt the objection was taken in both the Courts but there is no finding that the under-valuation has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on the merits.

I submit that it is the clear duty of the Court to record such a finding. In the absence of such a finding the order of the lower Appellate Court is defective.

I rely on Wahidullah v. Kanhaya Lal (1) Dalip Singh v. Kundan Singh (2) in both of which cases this Court remanded the case to the Court below for trial on the merits and for finding whether under-valuation had prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Respondent.—The defendant-respondent raised this point at the earliest possible opportunity. He is not responsible.

If a party is compelled to produce evidence or if he consents to the trial of the suit under protest, the Court cannot have jurisdiction to try the suit.

An issue may be sent to the lower Court for a finding as to the question of prejudice.

The case was a complicated one, and involved a consideration of intricate questions and the Court can itself record a finding that it would be better for such a case to be tried by a Sub-Judge. Prejudice is a mixed question of fact and law and this Court can record its finding on it.

[PIGGOTT, J.—Did you urge in the memorandum of appeal in the lower Appellate Court that under-valuation had prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit?]

No. The provisions of section 11 must, however, have been brought to the notice of the Judge in argument.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, in reply.—The defendant not having urged prejudice in his appeal, the case should be sent back for trial on the merits.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—These are three connected appeals which raise a point of law. The said point is clearly covered by authorities of this Court. It is sufficient to refer to the Full Bench case of Wahidullah v. Kanhaya Lal (1) and the recent case of Dalip Singh v. Kundan Singh (2). The three suits in question were instituted in the Court of a Munsif. In each case the defendant objected that the suit had been under-valued. An issue was framed on this point, but was not separately tried. The learned Munsif tried the question of valuation along with the other issues, after taking all the evidence offered by both parties. He found in favour of the plaintiff on the question of valuation and he decreed the plaintiffs' suits on the merits. The defendant appealed to the Court of the District Judge and his appeals were transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge for disposal. That Court has found that, as a matter of fact, the suits had been undervalued and that their correct valuation was such as to bring them beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Munsif's Court. On this finding alone it has set aside the decree of the Court of first instance and has passed in lieu thereof an order that the plaint in each of the three suits should be returned to the plaintiff to be presented to the proper Court, that is to say, to the Court of the Subordinate Judge. There is no reference in the judgment of the Court below to the provisions of section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act IX of 1887. It is not clear from the record whether any reference was made to this section in argument before the lower Appellate Court. We notice that in the memorandum of appeal to that Court, although the defendant challenged the finding of the Court of first instance on the question of valuation, he did not clearly or explicitly take the point that he had been prejudiced by the fact that the suits had been tried in the Court of the Munsif. At any rate the lower Appellate Court has, in deciding the three appeals before it, overlooked the provisions of the section referred to above. The case is strictly on all fours with the two previous reported decisions of this Court. Following the precedents there set, we must set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court in each of these three cases and remand each of these cases to that Court for disposal with regard to the provisions of the Suits Valuation Act as mentioned above. The costs of each of these appeals will abide the event.

HIRANMOY KUMAR SAHA v. BANKA BEHARI GHOSE.

WALSH, J.—I agree. I think section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act clearly throws the burden on the appellant to show not merely that there has been an incorrect valuation, but that the trial of the suit which means of course the decision against himself has been prejudicially affected thereby. I think he ought to take the ground in the memorandum of appeal and to state how he has been prejudicially affected. There is no better method of testing an argument of that kind, than by examining the grounds which are put forward by the person who makes the allegation, and satisfying one's self whether it is made out in fact or whether it is sufficient in law. It seems pretty clear that it was thought by the appellant or by those who conducted the case in the Court below on his behalf that it was sufficient to show that there was an incorrect valuation. It is very hard on the Judge if his attention is not drawn to the section, and I am inclined to think that his attention was not properly drawn to the matter at all.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

Landlord and tenant—Lease by trespasser—Good faith Rights of parties.

A person taking a settlement of land from a trespasser in de facto possession is not entitled to remain in possession as a tenant as against the rightful owner, unless it is found not only that he acted bona fide in taking the settlement but also that the person from whom the settlement was taken was acting bona fide in making the settlement with him. Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nadia, dated the 16th June 1913, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 31st of May 1912.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

HIRANMOY KUMAR SAHA v. BANKA BEHARI GHOSE.

Babus Ram Ohandra Majumdar and Upendra Nath Bagchi, for the Appellants, contended that the finding of the lower Appellate Court to the effect that although the lessor, Madan Mohan Roy, had no title to the land settled with the defendant Banku yet as the defendant acted bona fide in taking settlement of the land from his lessor and as he did not know that his lessor had no title to any portion of the land settled, but that on the other hand, he believed in good faith that he was taking settlement from a person who had good title to the pattai land, good faith on the part of the lessor is not necessary and that the lessee's good faith is sufficient to protect him from eviction, is bad in law. In order that a tenant may retain the land of which he had taken settlement from a person who had no title to such land it is essentially necessary that there should be bona fide conduct not only on the part of the person taking the settlement but also on the part of the person making the settlement. Good faith of the lessee alone is not sufficient. Lessor's good faith is also necessary. See Upendra Narain Bhattacharya v. Protap Chandra Pardhan (1). According to the Full Bench case of Binad Lal Pakrashī v. Kalu Pramanik (2) it cannot be said that the good faith of the lessor is not necessary. If there was bona fide conduct on the part of both the defendant and his lessor then and then only the defendant would be entitled to the protection provided for in the Bengal Tenancy Act. Simply because the defendant alone has acted in good faith he is not entitled to be protected from ejectment. See Krishna Nath Chakravarti v. Muhammad Wafiz (3). The defendant cannot claim protection from eviction as it has not been shown that his lessor acted bona fide and in good faith in making the settlement.

Babus D. N. Chakrabarty and Brojo Lal Chakrabarty, for the Respondent. There is nothing to show that the lessor Madan Mohan acted mala fide. At the time of making the settlement the landlord Madan Mohan was in de facto possession of the land by the erection of pillars. The defendant tenant took settlement of the land in good faith. According to the Full Bench case of Binad Lal Pakrashī v. Kalu Pramanik (2), de facto possession in the owner and good faith on the part of the tenant are sufficient to protect the tenant from eviction. The case of Pezry Mohun Mondal v. Radhika Mohun Hazra (4) decides simply that if the tenant enters on the land bona fide the rule of law laid down in the Full Bench case of Binad Lal Pakrashī v. Kalu Pramanik (2) will apply.

If a person is in de facto possession as a proprietor under a bona fide assertion of right then the tenant entering upon the land bona fide and in good faith is protected from ejectment. This is quite consistent with the law laid down in the case of Madhu v. Sabor Ali (5) and Tepu Mahammad v. Tefayit Mahammad (6).

Babu Ram Churn Mazumdar replied.

JUDGMENT.—It has been found by the lower Court that the land in dispute is in the zemindari of the plaintiffs. It has been also found that the defendant took settlement of the same from a neighbouring zemindar in good faith. Upon these findings, the first Court allowed the defendant to remain in possession and the plaintiffs were given a decree for possession by receipt of rent from the defendant. In the lower Appellate Court, it was contended on behalf of the plaintiffs, that it was not sufficient to find the bona fides of the tenant and that it was further necessary to find whether the person from whom the tenant took settlement, was acting bona fide in making the settlement with him. The learned Judge, however, thought that it was not necessary to enter into that question as it was, in his opinion, immaterial whether the lessor made settlement in good faith or otherwise. That, however, does not seem to be the correct view of the law as laid down in some of the latest cases.

CHAIRMAN OF GAYA MUNICIPALITY v. SUKAN SINGH.

The case relied on in the lower Court was the case of Binad Lal Pakrashi v. Kalu Pramanik (2). That case decided that if a tenant took settlement from a trespasser in good faith, he might be considered a tenant in accordance with the definition of the word in the Bengal Tenancy Act and be allowed to retain possession. The question of the bona fides of the person so letting him in was not raised in that case and probably could not be raised, as the landlord in that case had been litigating for title to the property. That case formed the subject of consideration in the case of Upendra Narain Bhattacharya v. Protap Chandra Pardhan (1) and it was held that it was necessary to find whether the landlord letting in a tenant was acting bona fide in doing so. That case has been followed in a number of cases which have been considered in the case of Krishna Nath Chakravarti v. Muhammad Wafiz (3) and the latest opinion on the subject is that the bona fides of the persons from whom the tenant takes settlement have also to be considered in deciding whether the tenant is to be allowed to retain possession as a tenant. We see no reason to differ from the view expressed in these cases.

The learned Vakil for the respondent has referred to some other cases, viz., Peary Mohun Mondal v. Radhika Mohun Harra (4), Madhu v. Sabar Ali (5) and Tepu Mahammad v. Tefayit Mahammad (6). But none of these cases decided the exact point now raised by the learned Vakil for the appellant.

That being so, the appellant is entitled to a decision of the Court below upon the point now raised by him as to whether Madan Mohan in letting out the land to the defendant acted bona fide. The case was argued on this point alone. No other point was pressed.

The judgment of the Court below is set aside and the case sent back for a decision on the above point. If the Court finds that Madan Mohan acted bona fide in making the settlement defendants will retain their possession.

Costs will abide the result.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1646 OF 1915.

January 2, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice Atkinson.

CHAIRMAN OF GAYA MUNICIPALITY
—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

Babu SUKAN SINGH—PLAINTIFF—

RESPONDENT.

Bengal Municipal Act (III B. C. of 1884), ss. 240, 241, 242A (b)—Construction of platform on open space between house and drain, whether 'erection' of building—Gaya Municipal Rules, r. 1, whether ultra vires—Statutory rules, object and construction of—Notice of removal or demolition under section 241 (3)—Remedy of party aggrieved—Omission to appeal to Commissioners, effect of—Suit for declaration and injunction against Municipality, maintainability of.

The erection of a platform on an open space between the outer wall of a house and the street drain is an 'erection' within the meaning of section 240 of the Bengal Municipal Act, for which the previous sanction of the Municipality is necessary. [p. 856, col. 2.]

Rule 1 of the Rules framed by the Gaya Municipality under the powers vested in them by section 241 (d) of the Act is not ultra vires or unreasonable. [p. 856, col. 2.]

An order, therefore, issued by the Municipality to a house owner to leave an open space between the external wall of his house and the drain adjoining the road is not illegal [p. 856, col. 2.]

A person aggrieved by an order under section 241 (3) must exhaust the statutory remedy provided in section 242A before going to the Civil Courts for redress. [p. 856, cols 1 & 2.]

Section 241 (d) indicates the line or foundation upon which a Municipality should frame their rules. If they exceed their jurisdiction and the limitation imposed upon them by the section, then their rules will be ultra vires. Where the rules are framed in the interests of public health they should not be construed in too strict and too limited a sense. [p. 855, col 2; p. 856, col. 1.]

The rules, after receiving the assent of the Lieutenant-Governor, should be read as if they were incorporated in the Statute, unless there is something in them patently outside the jurisdiction conferred by it. [p. 856, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Additional Sub-Judge, Gaya, dated the 28th April 1914, reversing that of the Officiating Munsif, first Court, Gaya, dated the 7th August 1914.

JUDGMENT.—This case comes on appeal from the Additional Subordinate Judge of Gaya reversing a decision of the Munsif of Gaya, dated the 7th August 1914; and the question mainly turns upon the rules made by the Gaya Municipality under the provisions of the Bengal Municipal Act, Act III of 1884.

CHAIRMAN OF GAYA MUNICIPALITY v. SUKAN SINGH.

It appears that the plaintiff's house in Gaya fell down or became dilapidated in consequence of floods, and he was anxious to re-build his house, and before doing so applied to the Municipal authority of Gaya for leave to re-build or re-erect his house, and the Municipal authority conceded the plaintiff's application and allowed him to re-build on the strict understanding that he would leave a space between the external wall of his house and the drain adjoining the road of 2 feet 3 inches in depth and 34 feet 8 inches in length. The plaintiff agreed to leave this space free of any structure or building whatsoever. But after he had re-built his house, and having obtained the concession or the right which he did from the Municipality, he suddenly took it into his head to build upon the space between the house and the drain a pukka masonry platform covering the entire area of 34 feet 8 inches by 2 feet 3 inches. The Municipal authority complained that what the plaintiff had done was in violation of the terms he had made with them; and it is alleged and not controverted, that this pukka platform outside the plaintiff's house was completed on the 20th November 1913; and upon the 25th November 1913 notice was served by the Municipal authority of Gaya upon the plaintiff requiring him forthwith to remove the platform which he had erected outside his house and between his house and the drain.

The plaintiff now contends that it was quite unnecessary for him to have applied for leave to the Municipal authority to re-build his house; and that they have no power whatsoever to prevent him from building upon this strip of land which adjoins his house, and which is his own property, this pukka platform; and that if any rule exists in the Municipality of Gaya to the contrary it is ultra vires, and if not ultra vires it is unreasonable; and accordingly he brings this action for a declaration that he is entitled to build this pukka masonry platform outside his house, and claims that the defendants may be enjoined from in any way interfering with the platform which he has erected.

The case is a simple case, and appears to me to have received very little consideration at the hands of the Subordinate Judge. He has cursorily glanced at the several sections of the Act and half considered them, and several sections he has entirely ignored, as he also appears to have ignored some general principles. However, it is well to note that this platform was built as part and parcel of the plaintiff's design in the re-building of his house; and that becomes material, because the plaintiff says in his plaint that finding that this piece of land which he had agreed to leave free and unoccupied would be of use to him in the occupation and enjoyment of his house he thereupon made up his mind to build the pukka masonry platform that he has built, and, therefore, we may take it that the building of the pukka platform formed part of the entire scheme for the enlargement or rebuilding of his house.

Now, section 241 of the Bengal Municipal Act III of 1884 endows the Commissioner with power to make rules for the regulation of the erection or re-erection of houses, not being huts, within the Municipality; and accordingly the Municipality have made rules in pursuance of the powers so vested in them, and the rules made are applicable to districts No. 1 to No. 9 of the Gaya Municipality and in which this house is situated. One of the purposes for which the Municipality may make rules is provided by clause (d) of section 241, namely, to provide space to be left about the house which is being re-built in order to secure free circulation of air, to facilitate the removal of foul and obnoxious matter and to prevent the possibility of fire by creating air spaces in front of dwelling houses to be re-built or newly built. What the Act contemplates is to indicate the line or foundation upon which the Municipality are to frame their rules, and the purpose and object which they are to have in view. It is for the Municipal authority in pursuance of that power to frame their rules in accordance with it. If they exceed their jurisdiction and the limitation imposed upon them by the Statutes, then their rules will be ultra vires. But it seems to be recognised by the House of Lords and by all other Courts that in these matters wide discretionary powers must be given to local bodies in the interest of public health, and their rules must not be construed in too strict and too limited a sense. Now, the object of the Statute was, to provide free spaces for air and scavenging and for the prevention of fire in the re-building of houses, and the Municipal authority was charged with the making of rules in that behalf. When the rules are made under the Statute they are submitted to the Local Government for sanction; and when the sanction has been obtained, the rules are to be enforced. Now, in this particular case the rules were submitted to the Lieutenant Governor in Council and were approved of and sanctioned by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Sub-section (2) of section 241 prescribes that once the rules have been sanctioned by the Local Government and duly published then the rules are to have the force and effect of law. Therefore, I read these rules as if they were incorporated in the Statute, unless I can find something in them which shows them to be patently outside the jurisdiction conferred by the Statute.

I must refer to section 242A, sub-clause (b), which provides the mode or procedure to be adopted by a person aggrieved upon whom a notice has been served under sub-section 3 of section 241; and admittedly in this case on the 25th November the plaintiff was served by the defendants with a notice under sub-section 3 of section 241, and Mr. Das admitted to me in reply that if such a notice had been served then admittedly this action would be unsustainable, if the provisions of section 242A, sub-clause (b), were to apply to this case.

Now, I am satisfied myself, because it is not traversed in the plaint, that the notice was served within 15 days from the erection of this platform which was completed on the 20th November, and that that being so, if the plaintiff had any cause for feeling aggrieved he had a statutory remedy provided by section 242A, namely, an appeal to the Commissioners, and while that remedy exists, in my opinion, it is not open to the plaintiff to pursue a remedy otherwise than that provided by the Statute. There is ample authority to support that proposition, certainly in England, and I believe also in this country. But the learned Subordinate Judge has held that rule 1, clause (a), made by the Municipality is ultra vires, and, therefore, not binding on the plaintiff, and if not ultra vires, it is unreasonable and, therefore, not binding on the plaintiff. In my opinion both these contentions are wrong in point of law. I think that rule 1 of the rules of the Municipality of Gaya dated the 22nd January 1912 is not ultra vires, that the rule is made in pursuance of the powers conferred by section 241, clause (b), that it does no more than provide according to its own design the methods by which the objects indicated in sub-clause (b) can be carried into effect; and merely because a form of explanation is given at the conclusion of paragraph A, which the learned Judge thinks is somewhat unique, it does not invalidate the entire rule. I see nothing in this rule to render it ultra vires. Is it unreasonable? In my opinion, clearly not. The whole object and intention of the Act of Parliament was to make provision, in the interest of public health, for the free circulation of air, to facilitate the removal of all foul and obnoxious matter and to prevent the possibility of fire by creating air spaces in front of dwelling houses to be re-built or newly built. Accordingly in this case we have an erection of a house within the definition of the word "erect" in section 240, namely, a material alteration or enlargement of a building. We must take the erection of this platform in conjunction with the improvements which the plaintiff made to his house consequential upon the destruction of his building by the floods and which was in form one entire scheme for the enlargement of the prior existing building, and, therefore, this case is an erection within the meaning of the Statute.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge erred in law in holding that the rules of the Gaya Municipality were ultra vires or that they were unreasonable. Accordingly I shall reverse the order of the learned Subordinate Judge and set aside his judgment and re-establish the judgment of the learned Munsif, with which I entirely agree. I award the defendants in this case the costs of this appeal and in the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, O. XIV, r. 1—Res judicata—'Matter' in s. 11, meaning of—Question of law, decision on, when res judicata—Mixed questions of law and fact, treatment of—Landlord and tenant—Ghattuthumulu, levy of, finding as to, whether res judicata in subsequent suit between same parties.

A decision on an abstract question of law is not res judicata. [p. 859, col. 1.]

Where a decision on a point of law, whether it be on the construction of a document or of a Statute or on Common Law or on Customary Law settles a question that arises directly out of the conflicting views as to the rights of the parties, it is res judicata. [p. 861, cols. 1 & 2.]

Though it is a convenient treatment to say that a particular case is a mixed question of law and fact and that the doctrine of res judicata does not, therefore, apply to it, it must be seen what exactly are the issues involved and decided. The question whether an issue arising in a case is of law or of mixed fact and law, must depend on the way in which the issues are framed, quite apart from the question which is really decided in the case. Any issue which, as framed, contains questions of fact and law must be split up in such a manner that a pure issue of law can be framed on the hypothesis of the finding of fact one way or the other. [p. 859, col. 1.]

A defence or claim based on a question of law is a 'matter' within the meaning of Explanation II to section 11, Civil Procedure Code. A 'matter' must sometimes include an issue of law and where the point of law directly affects the rights in litigation between the parties to the suit, it is a 'matter' within the meaning of the section. Plaintiff, a zemindar, sued his tenants to recover a cess known as ghattuthumulu in 1902. The Munsif held that the plaintiff was not entitled by sheer force of custom to a perpetual payment of the cess by the inamdars without any obligation on his part to maintain any of the old irrigation works in the villages concerned. Plaintiff preferred a similar suit against the defendants in 1905 when a similar decision was given. The District Judge, on appeal, reversed the Munsif's decree. In second appeal, the High Court called for findings as to whether the parties and the subject-matter were the same as in the suit of 1902 and, on receipt of findings in the affirmative, pronounced judgment in 1912 stating, 'we accept the finding and set aside the decree'.

Held, that the Munsif's judgment of 1902 was res judicata and the decision of the High Court in 1912 that that decision was res judicata was also res judicata. [p. 861, col. 2.]
